Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir JOHN PETER GRANT, K.C.B., to his Grace the Duke of BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(No. 248.)

MY LORD DUKE, King's House, Jamaica, October 24, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Grace herewith the Blue Book of this Colony for the year 1867, together with my report on it.

I have, &c.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, &c. &c. &c. (Signed) J. P. GRANT.

Legislation.

Forty-five laws were passed in the course of the year 1867. Of these the most important are the following :—

Law 5 of 1867. A law to abolish the Surrey County Gaol.

The county gaols are prisons for debtors, and persons sentenced to imprisonment without labour, and the maintenance of two such prisons, either of which was capable of accommodating the prisoners confined in both, and each having an expensive establishment, one in Kingston and the other in Spanish Town, not more than thirteen miles apart, and connected by railway, was an unnecessary expense.

The Spanish Town Gaol was retained as the gaol for both counties, and the Surrey County Gaol at Kingston has been made good use of as a constabulary station and for other purposes.

By this arrangement a saving of 700*l.* a year has been effected.

Law 6 of 1867. A law to establish Boards of Health.

Since 1855 no general law prescribing sanitary regulations in towns here has been in force. That want has been supplied by this law.

The Governor is empowered to appoint a Central Board of Health. The municipal boards of the several parishes are constituted local boards of health, subordinate to the Central Board, with power to appoint local commissioners of health and inspectors of nuisances, and to abate nuisances.

The Central Board appointed under this law is composed of the principal medical officers of Her Majesty's Army and Navy, the Medical Superintendent of the Public Hospital, the Inspector General of Constabulary, and Dr. Campbell, one of the principal physicians in Kingston.

Law 7 of 1867. A law to declare in what manner land on which the quit rents and land tax have not been paid shall be forfeited to Her Majesty.

This law has not yet been acted upon, as it will require some amendment.

Law 8 of 1867. A law to organize a constabulary force.

This law was passed in consequence of the inefficiency of the old police of the Island.

The old police consisted of 12 inspectors, 41 sergeants, and 365 privates. It was distributed amongst the several parishes in no systematic manner, and it was under the command of no one officer.

With the exception of the police of the town of Kingston, where a fourth part of the whole force was employed, it was a thoroughly inefficient body, costing upwards of 25,000*l.* a year. This inefficiency had been demonstrated by the events of 1865.

The present law authorizes the employment at a maximum of—

1 Inspector General.
1 Deputy Inspector General.
30 Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors.
117 non-commissioned officers.
800 constables.

But this scale has been found larger than necessary, considering the complete and very remarkable change of sentiment in the mass of the people that has occurred within the last two years. The force to be actually employed will be very considerably within the above maximum, both in regard to officers and men, when the establishment is completed according to the present plans. It is not intended to appoint a Deputy Inspector General.

The new force has been constituted very much upon the model of the Irish constabulary, and it is regulated by a code of rules framed from those of that constabulary and of the metropolitan police.

The men are enlisted for five years, and before they are posted in the several parishes they undergo military training as well as civil instruction at a central depöt in Spanish Town, established in the old Military Barracks. When on ordinary duty they carry batons, but when ordered out, under arms, being under military organization, they would be able to overawe, or instantly to repress, even such a violent and lawless demonstration as occurred in St. Thomas in 1865.

I have no fear of a repetition of such occurrences as those of 1865. The causes which produce such terrible effects will not now be allowed to exist; or, at the worst, will not now be allowed to come neglected and unchecked to maturity. But where all our hopes are in the establishment of a general and lasting confidence in the security of life and property, and in the permanence of the present happy state of tranquillity in Jamaica, we cannot easily be too strong in order to the sure prevention of such breaches of order as in all countries local accidents must be expected occasionally to threaten.

The constabulary, in addition to their ordinary duties, are employed with great advantage in the protection of the revenue under the excise and customs laws.

Up to the present time, twelve of the fourteen parishes of this Island have been supplied with the new force. The expense of this force, when completed, is estimated by the Inspector General at about 40,000*l.* a year, exceeding that of the old police by 15,000*l.*

Law 10 of 1867. A law for registering all lands, and for laying a duty upon houses heretofore exempt from duty.

This law, which had duration for one year only, imposed a registration tax of one penny an acre on all land; and it brought under the house tax of one shilling and sixpence in the pound upon houses of the annual value of 12*l.* and upwards, houses of this class upon sugar estates and cattle pens which had been previously exempted from all house tax. It imposed also, for the first time, a petty house tax (varying from 2*s.* to 6*s.*) on houses of less annual value than 12*l.* Houses of labourers on plantations were exempt from this tax.

The petty house tax imposed for the first time by this law was paid by the people with remarkable cheerfulness. It realized more than the estimate. It was carefully explained to the people at the time that the financial necessities of the Colony rendered the imposition of new taxes unavoidable, and that justice required that all classes, large landed proprietors, traders, and small settlers, should contribute in fair proportions. It was announced that the whole of the house tax, both old and new, was intended to be converted into a parochial poor rate, rising and falling in each parish according to its actual wants; and this intention has been carried out by a law passed in the year now current. Heretofore the poor of each parish were maintained by allotments from the general revenues, made upon no recognized principle, and upon no system whatsoever, each parish endeavouring to get as much money from the Executive Committee as it could induce that body to allot to it. As the parochial vestries had an interest in obtaining as much from the general treasury, as possible, and had no interest in economising parochial expenditure, the system was abused in the manner that might have been expected.

Law 11 of 1867. A law for laying a duty on imports, exports, and the tonnage of vessels.

This law is a consolidation of the customs laws previously existing. It makes very little change in the general tariff; but it abolishes the former four per cent. duty on the following articles of import, viz.; galvanised iron, marble, machines, mills, patent fuel, pans for boiling sugar, pipes, ploughs, harrows ,and other agricultural implements, pumps, railway truck wheels, stills, steam engines, and tiles. It abolishes also the export duties on the following minor articles of export, viz.:

Beeswax.
Arrowroot.
Cocoanuts.
Honey.

The export duty upon sugar, rum, coffee, pimento, dye-woods, and ginger remains. The proceeds of this duty are applied to the payment of the interest and principal of the immigration loans, and to the funds for the introduction of immigrants and the providing of return passages for them.

Law 18 of 1867. A law imposing trade licences.

This law imposes a licence duty, varying from 25*l.* to 1*l.*, on merchants and dealers. The duty in the case of retail dealers is regulated by the value of the premises in which the business is carried on. The extreme financial difficulties in which the Colony had become involved made new taxations inevitable. Law 10 of 1867 having imposed a new direct tax upon large landed proprietors and small settlers, a law of this nature was necessary in order to bring fairly under contribution the trading classes of the Colony.

Law 19 of 1867. Repealing the statutory provisions relating to the declaring of martial law.

This law, which was passed at the recommendation of the Secretary of State, repeals the Jamaica statutes which empowered the Governor, with the advice of what was designated, somewhat strangely, a council of war, to declare martial law in times of disturbance. These statutes had their origin in the worst days of slavery.

Law 20 of 1867. A law to reduce the number of parishes.

The Island was originally divided into 15 parishes. New parishes were created from time to time until the number (in 1866) amounted to 22.

A parish in Jamaica is of the nature of a county in England. It has its separate commission of the peace, its custos rotulorum, clerk of the peace, clerk of the parish board, collector of taxes, clerk of the parochial road board, coroner, and rector; and a circuit court is held at its principal town or village. But a great disparity existed in the size and population of the several parishes. Nearly one half of the Island was divided into seven parishes, of which none were of unmanageable size, while the other half, being that nearest the seat of Government, was divided into no less than 15 parishes, several of which were extremely small. Thus the parish of St. Elizabeth had an area of 448 square miles, and (in 1861) a population of 37,777 souls, whilst St. David had an area of 76½ square miles, and (in 1861) a population of 6,452 souls.

By this law the 15 parishes near the seat of Government are re-arranged, and reduced in number to seven. By this new arrangement, which leaves the seven old large parishes untouched, the whole Island is divided into 14 parishes, not very unequal in population, and, with the exception of the city and parish of Kingston, not very unequal in area.

The eventual saving in the annual expenditure by this reduction will amount to 3,864*l.*, irrespective of the amount to be saved by converting eight rectories into curacies, all of which saving is obtained with an increase rather than a decrease of efficiency. This saving is not the only or the most important advantage to be derived from the equalization of the parishes. It is a great object to make each parish a complete system in itself, in the judicial, revenue, police, immigration, pauper, and medical departments, in its system of parochial roads, and eventually in its ecclesiastical establishment.

With only 14 parishes many parochial reforms will be practicable which would have been impracticable with 22.

Law 26 of 1867. A law to facilitate the remedies on bills of exchange and promissory notes, and the prevention of frivolous or fictitious defences to actions thereon.

This is an adaptation of the English statute, 18 & 19 Victoria, chapter 67. Before the passing of this law a solvent party, sued on a bill of exchange in an action to which no defence is made, could delay payment for nine and even for twelve months.

By this law the holder of a dishonoured bill of exchange can enforce payment from a solvent party to the bill in a very few days. This law came into operation on the 1st day of January 1868, and it has been of marked advantage to legitimate commerce.

Law 27 of 1867. For preventing frauds upon creditors by secret bills of sale of personal chattels.

This is an adaptation of the English Act, 17 & 18 Victoria, chapter 36, which invalidates unregistered bills of sale. The necessity of a law of this sort in Jamaica had become very apparent.

Law 29 of 1867. A law for the better prevention of contagious diseases.

This law is an adaptation of the recent imperial statute having the same object, and it was passed at the recommendation of the Secretary of State. It still remains for the Imperial Government, in its naval and military departments, to make the provision needful for the carrying into effect of this important law. Such provision is very much wanted in Jamaica.

Law 34 of 1867. A law to authorize the Jamaica Railway Company to make and maintain a branch or continuation line of railway from Spanish Town to Old Harbour, and to raise additional capital.

By this law the Jamaica Railway Company is empowered to extend their line to a distance of about 13 miles from the former terminus. The length of the present railway from Kingston to Spanish Town is 12 miles. The work on the line has already commenced, and it is expected that the new line, whereby the railway mileage of the Colony will be doubled, will be completed early in 1869.

Laws 35 to 39 of 1867. These laws provide for the establishment of district courts. The reasons which led to the enactment of these laws have been set forth at length in my despatch to the Secretary of State, dated 26th September 1866, which has been printed amongst papers presented to Parliament in July 1867.

These district courts, of which the judges are barristers or advocates from the United Kingdom, are framed in respect of small common law and equity cases upon the model of the English county courts. They have a limited jurisdiction in cases respecting titles to and interests in land, and an unlimited jurisdiction in cases of unlawful possession of land without colour of title. They have also a limited criminal jurisdiction. In criminal cases defendants charged before a magistrate's court can have the trial moved up to the court of the district judge. An appeal lies from them to the supreme court upon all questions of law. The district court judges have each a head station, from which they make monthly circuits to the principal out-stations within their territorial jurisdictions.

By laws passed in 1868 the district courts have become the insolvent courts of the Island, and their jurisdiction has been extended to cases of probate. It is proposed to give them special jurisdiction in cases concerning immigrant labourers (coolies) under indenture.

It is intended to have in all eight district courts, five of which have been already established.

As the supreme court has the unnecesary number of four judges, economy has been practised by appointing one of its judges to be the judge of the district court of Kingston, on his present salary.

The working of these courts will fall to be described in my report upon the Blue Book of the present year. But I may say here, with perfect confidence, that this great judicial reform has been in its practical working completely successful, and that these new courts are already highly appreciated by the public generally, and even by classes to whom the constitution of such local tribunals was at first distasteful.

Revenue and Expenditure.

In my report on the year 1866 (which for financial purposes ended on the 30th September 1866, and which may be taken as the last financial year under the old constitution,) I had to make the following statement: "On the whole it may be "stated as a sufficiently close approximation to the truth for practical purposes, that "the revenue due to the taxation of the year fell short of the ordinary expenditure "of the year by more than 60,000*l*." The ordinary expenditure for the year 1865–66 was 343,297*l*. 14*s*. 1*d*., exclusive of all extraordinary expenditure, such as charges for the suppression of the insurrection and the construction of works, provided for by special loans, it is also exclusive of immigration charges, which are separately provided for. And this amount of ordinary expenditure was incurred without making any provision approaching to an adequate provision for the two vital objects, of justice and police. The year now under report, therefore, (which may be taken as the first financial year under the new constitution,) opened under circumstances of very extreme difficulty. A vast deficit had to be met; whilst new and expensive items of expenditure had to be incurred for objects which it was impossible either in justice to the people or with safety to the Colony to postpone.

It was obvious that two very unpleasant and not very easy remedies were inevitable; first, to reduce as much as possible all expenditure for purposes not of vital and immediate importance; and, secondly, largely to increase the revenue by the imposition of new taxes. And as reductions could only be made gradually it was not to be expected that the object of equalizing revenue and expenditure could be attained immediately. Pending the attainment of this object, as the new Government entered upon its responsibilities with an empty treasury, it was impossible to avoid depending upon borrowed money to meet a part of the ordinary expenditure.

The practice, however, of raising annual loans for extraordinary purposes, such as new roads and other useful public works, was discontinued in 1866-67; the finances in that year not being able to bear additional payments for interest and sinking funds, however legitimate such loans for important and permanent objects may be when revenue and expenditure are in equilibrium.

A permanent saving at the annual rate of 27,055*l.* was effected by retrenchments carried into effect within the financial year 1866–67.

The following table gives a summary of these operations :—

Annual rate of reductions effected in 1866–67.

By the abolition of the late constitution	10,785	0	0
By providing for certain parochial charges in the ecclesiastical department by means of the voluntary contributions of the congregations	6,175	0	0
By vacancies from death and retirement amongst the clergy not filled up	5,371	0	0
By retrenchments consequent on the reduction of the number of parishes from 22 to 14	2,260	0	0
By amalgamations of the Surrey and Middlesex County Jails, and abolition of Montego Bay Female Prison	940	0	0
By stoppage of subsidy for a steam communication with New York	4,900	0	0
By saving charges for main roads in excess of the revenue of the Main Road Fund	4,562	0	0
By saving charges on the Perpetual Annuity	2,400	0	0
By reductions on annual grants	2,548	0	0
By saving on the old police, in course of abolition	3,913	0	0
By miscellaneous offices reduced and abolished	2,309	0	0
Deduct annual rate of new charges incurred—
By officers under the new constitution	12,839	0	0
By curates at reduced pay, and catechists, substituted for clergymen, on the establishment, deceased or resigned	1,464	0	0
By miscellaneous new offices and increases of salary	2,538	0	0
By pensions	2,267	0	0
Rate of annual net reductions				27,055	0	0

Of the total sum of 27,055*l.* above shown, about 18,090*l.* was saved within the financial year. The whole amount of course will be saved within the year 1867–68. Against this last-mentioned sum must be set the new charges actually incurred within the year for the new district courts, viz., 3,013*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and for the new constabulary, viz., 13,021*l.* 17*s.*, amounting together to 16,035*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*

It will be seen that the actual savings made within the year on items which were either unnecessary or of secondary importance exceeded by 2,054*l.* the new expenditure within the year upon items of vital importance.

Thus it becomes apparent that the necessary improvements in the departments of justice and police might have been provided for without any increase of taxation if the taxes imposed under the old constitution had not been quite insufficient to meet the ordinary current expenditure upon the establishments as they existed under that constitution.

The new taxes imposed by the Legislative Council within the financial year 1866–67 were:

1. An increase of duty on rum consumed from two shillings and ninepence to five shillings a gallon.
2. A tax for one year of one penny an acre on land.
3. A tax on trade licences.
4. An extension of the old house tax, and the imposition of a new petty house tax, in order to the conversion of both into a parochial poor-rate.

By the first of these measures the indirect taxation was augmented, and by the last three the direct taxation was augmented. The object in laying on these three last taxes, now first imposed, was to bring fairly under contribution, in reasonable proportion to their means, all classes of people.

The increase of the duty on rum had been so largely anticipated by dealers for some time back, that the enhanced rate of duty produced no increase of revenue in 1866–67, pending the consumption of the very large stock of spirits taken out of bond in anticipation of it. On the contrary, so largely had the duty due to 1866–67 been anticipated by payments made long before the year opened, that the excise revenue of this year fell short of the former average, and but for the increased duty upon such spirits as were taken out of bond in the course of the year it would have been much less even than it was. The increase of duty, however, has been telling greatly to the advantage of the revenue during the financial year 1867–68. The other three new taxes produced in the year now under report 24,349*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*

The revenue of 1866–67, exclusive of the receipts applicable to immigration charges, amounted to 295,484*l.*, and the gross receipts of the year amounted to 393,444*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.*, as shown by the following table :—

Notwithstanding the new taxes, the gross revenue of 1866-67, including the export duties and other immigration receipts, was by 6,470*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* less than that of 1865–66, and it was by 13,988*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* less than that of 1864–65.

The falling off was principally in the items of import duties, excise, and stamps.

The falling off in the import duties was anticipated in my report of last year.

JAMAICA.

For some years previous to the year under report, there had been much overtrading on fictitious capital, fostered by a faulty banking system, now happily corrected. In the year 1866–67 the markets had become greatly overstocked, a terrible commercial crisis occurred, and the reaction which followed upon past overtrading had necessarily a very unfavourable effect on the imports trade. The same causes affected the revenue from stamps.

It was certainly unfortunate that a commercial crisis, such as I believe never before occurred in this Colony, by which our main item of revenue suffered so severely, should have occurred when for the first time, during a long series of years, the Government of the Colony was undertaking the task of restoring the finances to a sound condition.

It is, however, satisfactory to know, from the actual results of the financial year which has just ended, 1867–68, that our financial difficulties, great as they were, have been now at last overcome.

At this date the revenue and expenditure of the Colony has been brought to an equilibrium. For the first time for I know not how many years the financial statement of 1867–68 will show a surplus, though a small one. The explanation will be afforded in my report of next year. This gratifying result has been attained by a continuance of the system of reducing all avoidable expenditure, by a slight increase of indirect taxation, by the increased productiveness of the rum duty, and in some degree by the partial recovery of trade from its most extreme state of prostration.

It is satisfactory to find that the export duties for 1867 show an increase.

£17,588.	£21,326.	£22,067.

This increase in the export duty is due entirely to increased exports. Excluding from the accounts of both years the expenditure for the introduction of immigrants and other immigration charges, the expenditure of 1866–67 was 333,125*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*; and the expenditure for 1865–66 was 343,297*l.* 14*s.* 1*d.*; showing a decrease in expenditure for the year under report to the extent of 10,172*l.*, as detailed in the following table:—

* Defrayed in part from "Perpetual Annuity."

This is exclusive of immigration charges, which amounted in 1866–67 to 41,801*l.*, 1865–66, 11,581*l.*, and are more fully referred to under the head of Immigration.

Pensions.

Special compensation in the form of pensions to the amount of 1,445*l.* a year, and in the form of donations to the amount of 1,200*l.*, was granted this year to officers who lost their offices in consequence of the change in the constitution of the Colony. Of the officers so pensioned two have been re-employed, their pensions being suspended whilst in employment.

Previously to the introduction of the new form of government, there was no system of superannuation in Jamaica. A few pensions, in compensation for offices abandoned, were secured by permanent Acts, and a few to favoured individuals were voted annually by the Legislature. But these grants, when made, were not based on any rules of service, or on any principle whatsoever. For the most part, incapacitated officers held on to the salaries of their offices as long as they lived.

A regular system of superannuation has now been introduced, and the provisions of the English superannuation regulations have been adapted to the circumstances of the civil service of the Colony. Incumbents, although pensions were not authorized or expected when they accepted office, have been allowed the full benefit of the new pension rules.

Under these new regulations, five clergymen of the Established Church, who from age or ill health had been long incapable of properly performing the duties of their office, retired this year on pensions. And four other persons whose offices were abolished have been compensated by retiring pensions. The gross annual amount of pensions thus granted under these regulations this year was 1,329*l.* 13*s.*

Public Debt.

The only law for raising money on loan, passed in the year 1866–67, was Law 2. of 1867, under which 12,925*l.* were raised towards replacing a sum of 13,075*l.* which had been borrowed by the late Government and Legislature from the immigration funds of the Colony, and had been by them expended for general purposes, but which, being now required for immigration purposes, it was necessary to repay to the immigration funds. The cash balance of the Colony having been exhausted, it became necessary to borrow for the purpose of making this repayment.

The amount actually received during this year on loans for all purposes was 58,725*l.* Of this amount, 12,925*l.* was raised as above explained; 10,000*l.* were borrowed as a temporary accommodation from the Colonial Bank; and 35,800*l.* were received on loans opened under laws passed in previous years, but not filled up at the commencement of the year under report. During the year, 1,100*l.* of the principal money of old loans were repaid, and investments were made in sinking funds for redemption of debt to the extent of 21,452*l.*

The public debt stood as follows, at the end of each of the last three years, after making allowance for the sinking funds invested for the redemption of debts:—

1865 - - -	734,717	17	6
1867 - - -	788,090	19	1

The annual charge on the estimates for interest paid amounted this year to 50,820*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, and for money invested in sinking funds to 18,551*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.*, in addition to the sum of 2,900*l.* provided for sinking fund appropriations of the year 1865-66, which were not duly invested in that year.

Public Works.

No public work of any importance was undertaken this year, and only the insignificant sum of 2,282*l.* was spent under this head. There are works of great importance to the Colony which should be undertaken as soon as the finances are in a more prosperous condition.

The expenditure on the maintenance and repairs of roads and bridges was—

	£	s.	d.
Main roads - - -	12,709	19	1
Parochial roads - -	14,093	1	9

The court-house at Morant Bay, which was destroyed during the outbreak in 1865, was rebuilt at the charge of the rebellion loan.

Civil Establishment.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. R. Mann, R.E., was appointed Director of Roads and Surveyor General and Superintendent of Public Works.

The main roads were formerly under the management of a main road board. The advantage of having this department under one responsible and qualified head is already apparent. As Surveyor General, the Land Department is also under Colonel Mann. It is intended to obtain all requisite information respecting Crown lands, and unclaimed and abandoned properties, which are a fertile cause of dispute, and which from the system of squatting they encourage tend much to demoralize the peasantry.

The late Auditor General having been transferred without change of salary to another office, the Audit Department, which, under the old system, was very inefficient, has been placed under the charge of Mr. J. W. Straton, a gentleman from the English Audit Office, by whom a proper system of audit is in course of being introduced. The advantages of this reform have been great. The salary of the Auditor General has been increased from 750*l.* to 1,000*l.* a year; but this measure having been connected with other departmental changes involving reductions, which included the abolition of the office of Receiver General, of which the salary was 1,200*l.* a year, the result of the whole arrangement has been a great increase of efficiency, and a material saving of charge.

Three district courts under the new laws were constituted on the first of November, to which the following gentlemen were appointed judges: Hon. J. F. Cargill, Kingston; Patrick Blair, Spanish Town; Charles Rampini, Port Antonio.

Savings Banks.

Nine savings banks are in operation. The deposits are as follows:—

	1865.	1866.	1867.
Depositors -	2,372	2,276	2,278
Deposits -	55,945	66,720	54,807

In the return for 1867 is not included the deposits of the Trelawny Savings Bank. It was discovered in June 1867 that this bank had been defrauded to a very large amount by one of its officers, and the institution has become bankrupt in consequence. Owing to a dispute among the managers, arising out of this circumstance, the Government has been unable to obtain from this institution any returns for 1867. It has since been ascertained that the frauds on this bank, perpetrated by the secretary, amount to not less than 8,453*l.* As far as can be ascertained, the amount due to depositors is 11,111*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*, and the assets of the bank are only 2,657*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.* The difference is the sum plundered by the late secretary, who has been convicted, and is now undergoing penal servitude.

The savings banks are all private institutions. The Government has no control over their management, but it allows to the banks interest on their floating deposits at the high rate of 6 per cent. The depositors receive interest at the rate of 4½ per cent.

The Trlawney Savings Bank is not the first of these institutions which has been largely defrauded, to the severe loss of the depositors, who may be assumed to be the best conducted of the classes to which they belong.

It is in contemplation to establish a Government Savings Bank, somewhat after the example of the English Post Office Savings Bank.

Immigration.

After an interval of four years, immigration was resumed this year, when 1,600 immigrants were indented for by planters. The following number of immigrants were landed during the course of 1867:—

	Males.	Females.	Infants.	Total.
Coolies - -	1,091	498	36	1,625
Africans - -	10	1	0	11
			Total -	1,636

The last preceding batch were received on the 3rd of March 1863. This revival of the system accounts for the large expenditure chargeable this year against the immigration funds.

The expenditure of 1865-66 for emigration purposes was 11,580*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*, and for 1866-67 it amounted to 41,801*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, showing an increase of expenditure to the extent of 30,220*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* in this year.

The yield of the revenues applicable to immigration were as follows :—

	In 1865-6. £	s.	d.	1866-7. £	s.	d.
Export duty - -	21,326	1	8	22,066	17	0
Capitation fees - -	2,671	12	10	3,337	15	4
Total -	23,997	14	6	25,404	12	4

13,075*l.* of the export duties raised in 1865-66 having been borrowed for general objects, a law, 2 of 1867, was passed, authorizing the raising of a loan of that amount to repay the immigration fund. The amount was accordingly raised, and appropriated to the introduction of immigrants.

The total number of immigrants under indenture (as not having yet resided for five years) on the 31st December 1867 was 2,120, viz., 1,805 Coolies and 315 Africans. This number includes all the immigrants received during the year 1867. On the same date the total number of Coolies who had served five years, but had not served an industrial residence of ten years (after which time they have the option of returning home), was 2,837.

Immigration is under the existing laws a matter dependent entirely upon the judgment and means of the individual planter, and the revival of the system in 1867 is a very noticeable feature of the year.

Paupers.

On the 31st December 1867, 4,035 persons were receiving relief in the several parishes. This would give a proportion of about nine to every thousand inhabitants. This is exclusive of the number receiving temporary relief in the hospitals of the Colony.

The returns for paupers for previous years being incomplete, I am unable to compare the number in 1867 with the number in former years.

Imports and Exports.

The value of the imports for the past three years amounted to—showing for the year under report 191,789*l.* less than in 1865, and 171,790*l.* less than 1866.

1865. £	1866. £	1867. £

The great decrease in 1867 was caused by the commercial crisis elsewhere mentioned. Trade has now recovered a sounder tone, and is in a much more satisfactory state in reality than it has been for a considerable time past.

The exports of the principal staples for the last three years were as shown in the following tables : —

	1865.	1866.	1867.
Sugar - - - cwts.	483,681	600,836	515,901
Rum - - - - galls.	1,409,800	1,765,775	1,728,832
Coffee - - - lbs.	6,229,712	8,413,532	6,264,861
Pimento - - - „	3,861,510	4,866,239	7,595,800
Dyewoods - - - tons.	27,064	36,570	48,481
Ginger - - - lbs.	1,020,023	1,550,166	1,728,075
Arrowroot - - - „	43,151	70,204	44,566

The sugar and coffee crops of 1866, as compared with those of late years, were particularly large ; in regard to these crops, therefore, the results of 1867 are not discouraging. The sugar crop of 1868 will be a large crop as compared with the average of late years. The increase in the proportion of rum to sugar in 1867 is a noticeable feature, rum being the commodity in regard to which, so far as quality and high price are concerned, Jamaica is still far ahead of all other Colonies.

The export of pimento, owing to the extreme fall in the price of this very excellent spice since the Russian War, depends now not so much on the crop as on the price, on a small variation in which depends the question whether it will pay to gather the crop of a pimento ground or not.

The trade in woods, which has sprung up into an extensive business only of late years, continues to increase largely. The increase in the production, in 1867, of ginger, which is a crop of the small settler, is a satisfactory feature.

On the whole, the results of the crop of 1867 appear to me to be encouraging.

Education.

The number of elementary schools in the Island in 1867 was 379, of which 226 received aid from the Government.

The total amount of Government aid granted to the elementary schools was 2,600*l.*, which was disbursed in sums varying from 5*l.* to 30*l.* to each school, according to the recommendation of the Inspector of Schools. This was in accordance with previous practice, by which the aid granted to schools was regulated by no fixed principle; nor was the grant made conditional on the attainment of any defined standard, either of efficiency or numbers in attendance.

To remedy these defects, and at the same time to afford additional encouragement to the managers of elementary schools, a code of rules has been adopted to regulate the grant of aid to these schools. Under these rules the elementary schools are divided into three classes, according to their efficiency as tested by the annual examination of the Inspector of Schools; and a grant in aid is allowed on a graduated scale, according to the class in which the school is placed. This grant consists partly of a capitation payment on the number of pupils in attendance, and partly of an allowance to the master. The rate of both payments is regulated by the general efficiency of the school.

No aid is given unless the Inspector reports that the school is deserving of support, and comes up to a particular standard of efficiency, and unless the average attendance of scholars has been not less than 20 for each day the school has been open during the year. No grant is made unless school fees are required from the parents or friends of the scholars. No school receives a grant unless it has been open for 180 days within the year.

Schools are divided into first, second, and third classes, the classification being determined, not by the size but by the efficiency of the school.

Besides the above-mentioned elementary schools, there were 25 elementary schools, denominated vestry schools. The annual expenditure on these schools was 881*l.* from the parochial vestries, and 232*l.* from the grant in aid of schools. All these vestry schools were found to be very inefficient, and they were therefore abolished. With the money thus saved it is intended to establish a good model school in each of four parishes not provided with endowed schools. Of these model schools two have now been established, one at Bath in the parish of St. Thomas, and one at Falmouth in Trelawny. For these good and efficient masters have been procured from England.

There are 29 endowed schools in the Island; viz., a grammar school called the Jamaica Free School, in St. Ann;

Woolmer's School in Kingston;
Smith's School and Beckford's School in St. Catherine;
Four elementary schools in Vere;
Seven elementary schools in Manchester;
One elementary school in Westmoreland;
One elementary school in Hanover;
And ten elementary schools in St. Elizabeth.

These schools are supported from the proceeds of private endowments, and the managment thereof is under trustees appointed by local statutes.

Steps are being taken to improve the efficiency of these schools, one by one.

Woolmer's School in Kingston, which is a richly endowed school, has been completely reformed. Two trained masters have been obtained for it from England, and, from having been in its boys' department a far from creditable institution, it is now an admirable school both in the boys' and girls' departments. The two schools in Spanish Town, though well endowed, had been utterly neglected, their income having been entirely wasted. These are now to be amalgamated into one good school, under a trained master to be obtained from England.

Gaols and Prisoners.

The number of prisoners in all the prisons of the Colony has continued to decrease in a very satisfactory manner. In each of the three last years, on the 30th September,

(when the reports of the Inspector of Prisons are made up,) the number of prisoners in confinement was as follows :—

1867	-	936

The number of commitments to the General Penitentiary in 1867 was by 271 less than in 1866.

Health.

I regret to have to report that yellow fever prevailed over a portion of the Island during the whole year. Where it prevailed it was of a very severe type, and the mortality amongst those attacked was great. It principally affected the sailors and other newly arrived Europeans in Kingston and Port Royal, and in country places at no great distance from these ports. But on this occasion several cases occurred in which, unquestionably, this particular sort of malignant fever attacked natives of all colours. The mortality amongst that part of the 84th Regiment, which was stationed at Newcastle, a very healthy mountain cantonment 4,000 feet above the sea, was great. This regiment had only just arrived in the West Indies when the yellow fever broke out. The detachment of the regiment stationed in Manchester, a very healthy parish in the interior of the Island, escaped the disease.

A military medical commission has been sitting this year, to inquire fully into the origin and progress of the disease in Jamaica. The disease did not extend at all over the greater part of the Island; and everywhere, excepting in Kingston, Port Royal, and Newcastle, where newly arrived Europeans were congregated in large numbers, its victims were few. Judging from past experience, we may reasonably hope to be free from this scourge for several years to come. The Island is at the present time very healthy.

General Remarks.

During the year 1867, as during the year 1866, perfect tranquillity was maintained in the Colony; and this tranquillity has continued uninterrupted up to the present time.

The only circumstance which occurred during the year which deserves to be here mentioned is a case of forcible entry and detainer of land.

In the month of July warrants were issued against twenty persons for forcible entry and detainer of an enclosed field, part of an estate called Bushy Park, situated about nine miles from Spanish Town.

A sub-inspector and ten constables were sent to execute these warrants. On arriving at the field in question, it was found to be occupied by about sixty or seventy men and women, the entrance to the field being blockaded with a strong wooden fence, immediately behind which the mob stood. The sub-inspector of constabulary, who acted very well throughout the affair, entered the field with the constables, and, although seriously assaulted, captured fifteen persons against whom there were warrants, and three other persons who took part in the assault, without injuring any one. The inspector then took possession of the field, and restored it to the proprietor of the estate. The whole of the prisoners were brought into Spanish Town by the constables, and were subsequently tried at the Circuit Court, convicted and punished.

It is supposed that these people believed that the land in question did not belong to the estate, but was unclaimed Crown land. This is the sort of case that is likely occasionally to occur, and that would be not unlikely to lead to some disturbance of the peace, if not promptly met by an adequate force of constables.

In August 1866 there were detachments of troops from the head quarters of the two regiments quartered in Jamaica at eight outposts, viz., in Morant Bay, Port Antonio, Falmouth, Montego Bay, Lucea, Savannah la Mar, and Mandeville.

This disposal of troops, after the events of October 1865, was thought necessary for the security of life and property throughout the Colony.

From five of these outposts the detachments were withdrawn in the year 1867; and outposts, which may be considered as permanent, are now retained only at Port Antonio and Falmouth, on the north coast of the Island, and at Mandeville, a central and very healthy position in the interior.

These are no more than the extent and configuration of the Island seem naturally to demand, with reference to the number of troops in the Colony.

Not a soldier has been called out for any internal service since I assumed charge of the Government.

JAMAICA.

The petty house tax, first imposed in 1867, which now, with the former tax on the better class of houses, constitutes a poor rate, has been paid by the black settlers this year (1868), as it was last year, without exciting a murmur of discontent, the people themselves having been satisfied of its necessity and fairness, and knowing its object. Contrasting this state of feeling with that which existed three years ago, the present state of contentment of the mass of the population is a decisive and a very remarkable proof of their confidence in the new constitution under which the Colony was placed in 1866.

A general house tax has long been regarded as a legitimate impost, with reference to the circumstances of the Colony, the black settlers being on the whole, perhaps, the class of people whose means best suffice for their wants; but no such direct impost was or could safely have been ventured upon with the temper of the people such as it was formerly.

The sugar crop of 1867, throughout equal to that of 1866, was rather above than below the average of late years. The commercial crisis of 1867 was a severe trial, but its permanent effects will be beneficial to the interests of a sound and honest trade.

There are already signs that security and tranquillity are beginning to have their natural effects in turning the attention of capitalists to a Colony whose natural resources are unbounded.

It is not too much to say that the capital necessary for the extension of the single railway of Jamaica to double its former mileage would hardly have been found had Jamaica not become a Crown Colony.

Another costly improvement is about to be commenced by private enterprise, namely, the erection of a graving dock in the magnificent harbour of Kingston, a project which has been vainly talked of for years past.

There is an immediate prospect of Jamaica being connected with the telegraphic system of the world, by a cable running from the American continent, either through Cuba (which is already in connexion with America) or otherwise.

An American company has undertaken, by a new and it is believed a successful process, the preparation of bamboo fibre upon a large scale, from which excellent paper and felt may be manufactured; and with the water power afforded by nature it is hardly doubtful that the final manufacturing process will eventually be carried on in the Island, though the present arrangements are made only for the preparation here of the raw material. The machinery required for this purpose has been landed.

It seems to me that some slight attention is just beginning to be turned to several industries for which nature has prepared this Island, which is for nothing more remarkable than for the variety of its soil and climate.

It is certain that cocoa-nut oil and fibre, and tobacco, require only the application to their production of moderate capital and adequate skill to become staples of export from Jamaica, each perhaps of even greater importance than coffee now is.

The fruit trade, which in the neighbouring Bahama Islands affords an important staple of export in the article of pine apples alone, is here still neglected, although there is no place in the world more suited by nature for the production of exportable fruits of great market value; nor can it be doubtful that Jamaica is capable once again of producing the chocolate cocoa as one of its chief staples.

The old Jamaica planters' prejudice, which treated as baneful to the Colony all attempts to turn attention from any thing but sugar cultivation, is fast expiring.

Of sugar cultivation itself (which, I think, probably, with advertence to the singular capacity of Jamaica for making rum of the highest quality, will always be the principal, though, if nature had been left to take its course, it would never have been the only, great industry of the Island,) my own expectations are hopeful.

Owing to the extravagant prices caused by the great continental war, and too long continued in a great degree by the unfortunate system of protection, a very large proportion (perhaps one third or more) of the sugar made in Jamaica, when the export of sugar was greatest, was made upon land that never ought to have been cropped with cane, and never would have been cane land under any natural state of things.

The mere cost of production in those days on many estates was stated as far exceeding what is now the highest price of sugar in the London market.

The first effect of a return to the natural scale of prices was the abandonment of cane cultivation on unsuitable lands. But, properly reviewed, this abandonment was a pure economical gain.

Taking roughly the average production of late years at one third of the maximum production of former times, more than one half of the difference must be attributed to this cause, and is therefore no real loss. Here, as everywhere, artificial prices introduced careless and unthrifty management, traces of which are still apparent.

The habit, too, of retaining sugar estates working unprofitably for years in the hands of those wanting either the capital or the capacity necessary to secure a profit, instead of transferring them to more competent hands before it was too late, has tended much to depreciate Jamaica as a sugar colony, and, with reasons of a political nature, which happily no longer exist, has kept out the fresh blood and fresh capital with which other colonies have been re-invigorated.

But I see no ground for supposing that this unnatural state of things will always continue. I have often inquired, and I have been unable to hear, of one resident sugar planter in any part of Jamaica at present, of recognized skill in his business, and possessed of capital sufficient for the proper management of all the land in his hands, who is not making a fair profit out of his property. And I believe that on the estates of such planters where cane cultivation may be profitably increased such increase is now in progress. For the greater part of a century past, owing at first to the unjust trade laws of the mother country, and latterly to the long struggle of the colonists for the maintenance of slavery and protection, and for the expenditure of English money in those bad causes, it has become a habit in Jamaica to raise a cry of danger for the time being, and of hopeless ruin in prospect. The consequences of indulgence in this habit have been certainly unfavourable to the interests of the proprietied classes.

Though fully sensible of the insular unpopularity to be incurred by the open announcement of a contrary view, I am bound to confess, that as no reasonable person can doubt of the perfect security of the Colony now, so my own expectations as to its general prospects for the future are entirely hopeful.

No. 2.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-Governor LONGDEN to Governor Sir J. P. GRANT, K.C.B.

(No. 101.)

SIR, Government House, Belize, June 19, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith the Blue Book of this Colony for the year 1867.

2. I only assumed the government of Honduras on the 31st of October last, and I therefore propose to restrict my present report to a few remarks suggested by the enclosed tables, reserving a fuller report upon the state and prospects of the Colony until next year.

Taxes, Duties, and other sources of Revenue.

3. The taxation of the Colony was not materially altered in 1867. The import duty on beer was reduced from the excessive rate of 2*s.* a gallon to 1*s.*, and the duty on wine from 6*s.* a gallon to 2*s.* These reductions were followed by an increase in the importations. The amount charged on a licence to sell liquors by retail, not to be drunk on the premises, was reduced from 30*l.* to 6*l.* This reduction was, I think, impolitic, as it induced many persons to take out the 6*l.* licences in the country places, where they could not be properly watched by the police, and so injured the holders of retail publicans' licences, which were still charged 40*l.* each.

4. An Act was passed in November 1867 for imposing a tax upon houses and lands throughout the Colony, but, as it did not come into operation until the 1st of January 1868, it will be more properly reported upon in the report of the Blue Book of 1868.

Fees.

5. All fees payable in the public offices of Honduras are fixed by law, and are paid into the public treasury, in pursuance of an Act passed in 1842 (6 Vict. c. 5. s. 3.), which recites that "it is intended to place the public officers on salaries, instead of "remunerating them by fees as heretofore." The gross amount of fees received in 1867 is stated in the revenue account to have been 2,190*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.*, but this includes 333*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* received from the post office, which should have been placed under a separate head; making the fees proper 1,856*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.*

Revenue and Expenditure.

6. The revenue received in 1867 was 32,360*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, showing an increase of 6,854*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* over the revenue of 1866. Nearly the whole of this increase took place in the import duties.

7. The expenditure is stated to have been 30,506*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.*, being an increase of 1,086*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* over the expenditure of 1866.

8. The expenditure of 1867 was, however, much greater than is shown in the Blue Book. The sum of 30,506*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* represents the sums actually paid; but very great liabilities were incurred, some of which have been paid off in 1868, but some of which (such as the debt incurred to the Imperial Government for extraordinary expenses) have not yet been paid. The cause of the vastly increased expenditure of 1867 was the aggression of the Mexican Indians upon the western part of the Colony, and the expense of the measures necessary for their expulsion. The amount paid by the Colony for this service in 1867 was 2,747*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*, and the amount still due to the War Office is 8,048*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.* The organization of the militia cost 1,566*l.* in 1867. The payments due from the general revenue to the immigration fund were temporarily discontinued, and all public works were discontinued.

Public Debt.

9. The public debts of the Colony on the 31st of December 1867 were:—

	£	s.	d.
1. South of Belize improvement loan	17,727	4	0
2. Immigration loan	16,550	6	3
3. Treasury notes	237	12	3
Total loans	34,515	2	6
Add,
4. Sum due to the War Department for extraordinary war expenses incurred in 1867	8,048	11	11
5. Due to Her Majesty's Government for postal service in the year 1864	4,443	0	0
Total debt on 31st of December 1867, exclusive of sums due for current local services	47,006	14	5

10. The first of these debts is the remainder of a loan of 19,800*l.*, borrowed in 1863 and 1864 for the purpose of effecting improvements in the town of Belize, after the great fire which took place in 1863. This loan bears interest at six per cent. The interest and sinking fund are sufficiently provided for by a special duty of one per cent. on all imports, appropriated solely to the payment of the principal and interest of this loan. The whole of this loan was expended for the purposes for which it was raised.

12. The third debt is part of a sum of 25,000 dollars, or 5,000*l.*, authorized by an Act passed in November 1867 to be issued in treasury notes, in order to pay the current demands upon the public treasury. These notes bear interest of six per cent. They are redeemable within two years, from the produce of the land and property tax imposed at the same time. This tax is specially pledged to the payment of the notes.

13. The debt due to the War Department is the additional expense incurred in the transport and maintenance of the troops when employed in active military operations upon the frontiers of the Colony in 1867 beyond what would have been incurred if the troops had remained in Belize.

14. The last debt, the sum due to Her Majesty's Government for postal service in the year 1864, is now in course of repayment out of the Imperial contribution to the current mail service between New Orleans and Belize.

Military Expenditure.

15. The expenditure incurred by Great Britain for the protection of this Colony in 1867 amounted to the large sum of 26,235*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, being 10,399*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.* in excess of the expenditure of 1866.

16. This increase resulted from the necessity of employing the troops to repel the aggression of the Mexican Indians, and the greater part of it, 8,048*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.*, is to be repaid to the Imperial Government from the Colonial treasury.

Militia, &c.

17. The militia nominally consists of a force of 1,050 men, comprising seven divisions, varying in number according to the population of each district. The "Belize Division" numbers nominally 450 men, but I am informed by Lieut.-Colonel Plues, commanding the force, that not 100 men have on any occasion mustered for exercise. The "Corosal" and "Orange Walk" divisions muster together, on paper, 300 men; and about 100 were actually enrolled and called out for active service under Captain Carmichael in the beginning of 1867. The other divisions, numbering in all 300, have never been enrolled at all. The service is so exceedingly unpopular that many of the labouring classes are reported to have left the Colony rather than serve. The Militia Act is at present suspended.

18. Besides the militia, there is a protective force called "The Belize Volunteers," numbering in all 171 men, divided into two companies of rifles and one of artillery, the whole under command of Major Graham. This force was called out for service and put into garrison in Belize during the apprehensions excited by the Indian aggressions in 1866–67.

Legislation.

19. The session of 1867 was very protracted, lasting from the 31st of January to the 16th of November. Twenty Acts were passed by the Legislative Assembly; namely,—

Cap. 1. "An Act to authorize the renewal of debentures becoming due under the South of Belize Improvement Act."

Cap. 2. "An Act for the appointment and regulation of notaries public."

This Act empowered the Lieut.-Governor to appoint any person a notary public on payment of 250 dollars. It has since (1868) been amended by requiring that the fitness of the proposed notary shall be certified by the Chief Justice, and by reducing the licence duty to 50 dollars.

Cap. 3. "An Act to amend the 'Honduras Company Act, 1866,' by exempting banking companies from the provisions thereof."

Cap. 4. "An Act to determine the functions of the South of Belize Improvement Commissioners, and to make the arrangements necessary in consequence thereof."

By this Act the duties, powers, and authorities of the commissioners are transferred to and vested in the Lieutenant-Governor and Executive Council. These four Acts have received Her Majesty's gracious confirmation.

Cap. 5. "An Act to reduce the expense and provide more efficiently for the administration of criminal justice by enforcing sentences for short periods of imprisonment in the districts where they are passed."

Cap. 6. "An Act to provide for the better enforcement of sentences of penal servitude, and of imprisonment with hard labour; and for other purposes."

These two Acts have not been confirmed; exception has been taken to some of the provisions, and the amendments are under consideration.

Cap. 7. "An Act to authorize for one year and to the end of the then next session of the Legislature the removal of aliens from the Colony."

This power is very necessary, in the present circumstances of the Colony. The Act has received the Royal confirmation.

BRITISH HONDURAS.

Cap. 8. "An Act to abolish the office of public messenger."
This Act has also been confirmed.

Cap. 9. "An Act to raise a supply for the use of the Government of this Colony by means of import duties, dues, and taxes."

This Act has also been confirmed. By this Act an ad valorem duty is imposed on all unenumerated articles of eight per cent., with a drawback of three per cent. on the re-exportation of whole or unbroken packages. By the Act 16 Vict. c. 4. a permanent duty of one per cent. was imposed on all imports, to defray the civil list, and a further special duty of one per cent. was imposed by the 27 Vict. c. 11., for the purpose of paying off the Belize Improvement Loan. Thus the whole duty is ten per cent., and as the drawback on re-exportation is only three per cent., it will be seen that a tax of seven per cent. is paid upon all goods imported by the merchants of Belize for re-exportation to Central America. Upon the renewal of the Act in the last session, this heavy taxation was complained of by some of the leading merchants, as destructive of the trade altogether, "it being impossible for the importers resident "here to compete in the same market with importers resident in the neighbouring "republics, who are able to sell 6½ per cent. cheaper." The substitution of a bonding system in lieu of drawbacks was strongly advocated, and the whole question has been remitted to a commission empowered to enquire and report to the Legislature. The trade of Belize with the neighbouring republics used to be considerable, but has much declined of late.

Cap. 10. An Act for the encouragement of Mr. Duval in making the River Belize navigable for steamboats, and placing steamboats thereon."

The River Belize is obstructed about 40 miles from the mouth by some rocks, which make a rapid known as the "Big Falls." There are some other obstructions to the navigation of the river, and by this Act the exclusive privilege for five years of using steamboats on the river was conceded to Mr. Duval, an American immigrant, on condition that he made the river navigable to a given point, and placed a steamboat thereon. A sum of 20*l.* was also to be paid to Mr. Duval for each trip made by his steamer up the river. This Act was disallowed by Her Majesty.

Cap. 11. "An Act to provide for the allowance of drawback of import duties in certain cases, and to regulate the mode of proceeding in respect of goods entitled thereto."

This Act merely regulates the mode in which the drawback I have mentioned is to be claimed and allowed. This and all the remaining Acts received Her Majesty's gracious confirmation and allowance.

Cap. 12. "An Act to apply part of the public revenue of the Colony for the present year to certain uses."

This is the ordinary Appropriation Act of the year.

Cap 13. "An Act to provide for the appointment and remuneration of a clerk to assist the clerk of courts and keeper of public records."

This Act reduces the salary of the clerk in the clerk of courts' office from 300*l.* to 120*l.* per annum, the duties being merely those of a copyist.

Cap. 14. "An Act to repeal the Act of the 19 Vict. c. 5., to provide assistance towards the payment of a missionary for the northern district, and the 24 Vict. c. 3. amending the same."

By the 19 Vict. c. 5. a sum of 130*l.* per annum was granted for the stipend of "a missionary" in the northern district, with 20*l.* per annum for house rent, and a sum of 120*l.* was also voted for the erection of a place of worship. By the 24 Vict. c. 3. it was declared that the missionary must be a clergyman of the Church of England. Two reasons are assigned in the preamble of the Act of 1867 for repealing these Acts:—first, that "the public burthens require to be lightened;" and, secondly, that "the provision "made in support of education and public worship according to the doctrine and practice "of the Church of England is disproportionate with that made for education and public "worship according to the doctrine and practice of other religious denominations." No appointment of a missionary was ever made under the Acts repealed.

Cap. 15. "An Act to determine the salary payable to the keeper of the powder magazine."

This Act reduces the salary of the keeper of the magazine from 180*l.* to 120*l.* a year.

Cap. 16. "An Act to reduce the salary of the clerk of the courts and keeper of public records upon a vacancy occurring in that office."

The salary is reduced from 600*l.* to 500*l.* a year. The vacancy has occurred.

Cap. 17. "An Act to declare the meaning of the Act of the present session, entitled An Act to raise a supply for the use of the Government of this Colony by means of import duties, dues, and taxes."

Corrects one or two errors in the former Act.

Cap. 18. "An Act to amend the 12 Vict. c. 8. entitled An Act to regulate the weights and measures used in this settlement, and to appoint an inspector of weights and measures, and for other purposes."

This Act confides the future inspection of weights and measures to the police, and so lessons the public charge.

Cap. 19. "An Act to authorize the issue of treasury bills to an amount not exceeding 25,000 dollars payable, with interest."

This Act in effect authorizes a loan of 5,000*l.* payable in two years, because, in the words of the preamble, "the funds in the treasury are at present, and may for some time "continue to be, insufficient to satisfy the demands due and to become due."

Cap. 20. "An Act to raise a revenue by a land and property tax."

This Act imposes a tax of five per cent. on the annual rental of all houses in Belize and the principal villages, and a tax upon all lands at the average rate of two dollars per square mile. This tax is an entirely new tax in Honduras, and was not passed without much discussion. The Act only takes effect from the 1st of January 1868, and a report of its general operation must be deferred until next year.

20. Ten proclamations were issued in 1867, of which nine had relation to the imposition, modification, and withdrawal of martial law in the district infested by hostile Indians, and to the trade with Indians in gunpowder; and one proclaimed Her Majesty's assent to the armed steamer Act.

Population, Immigration, &c.

21. The population of the Colony was ascertained by the census of 1861 to be 25,631. It has since been increased by the immigration of settlers from the United States, and by the introduction of Chinese labourers, as well as by the excess of births over deaths; but I have no sufficient data to estimate accurately the extent of the increase.

22. The number of immigrants into the Colony in 1867 is put down in the Blue Book as 500; but this number is a mere estimate, and not taken from a register. These immigrants came from the United States, but many of them went on from Belize to Spanish Honduras, and others, being disappointed, returned to the States. The number who had actually settled in the Colony by the end of 1867 is not correctly ascertained, but I have reason to believe that it fell far short of 500, and did not reach half that number. I shall cause full information on this head to be procured, and inserted in the Blue Book for 1868.

23. A savings bank was established many years ago by a resolution of the then public meeting, "for the purpose of encouraging frugal habits in the poorer industrial classes." This bank was, in 1862, placed under the trusteeship of the Governor and Executive Council, and the bank was directed to be kept at the public treasury. (25 Vict. c. 5.) The depositors are allowed interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, if the whole of their deposits do not exceed 10*l.*, and 3 per cent. on deposits over that amount. The interest is a charge upon the public revenue. No deposit is received under ten shillings, and no depositor is allowed to have more than 50*l.* (250 dollars) in the bank. On the 31st of December last there were 88 depositors, having an aggregate sum of 1,751*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* in deposit.

24. Pauperism is not excessive. There were on the 31st of December last sixteen paupers receiving indoor relief and fifty-four receiving out-door relief.

Ecclesiastical.

25. In the census of 1861 the inhabitants of the Colony were classed under the following religious denominations:—

Protestants	8,349
Roman Catholics	17,194
Jews	5
Heathens	80
No particular denomination	7
	25,635

These proportions are probably not materially altered. The Chinese immigrants have swelled the number of non-Christians, and the American immigrants are mostly Protestant. Among the Protestants, two Anglican ministers and one Presbyterian minister alone receive salaries from the public treasury. No provision is made for Roman Catholics, for Wesleyans, or for Baptists, who have several chapels in Belize.

Education.

26. The advancement of education appears to have always received considerable attention at the hands of the Legislature. In 1850 an Act was passed "to provide additional schools for the benefit of every denomination of Christians," and "to make regulations for the government of such schools, and of the Honduras Grammar School." By this Act a board of education was constituted, and empowered to grant an allowance of 30*l.* a year for the master of every school containing not less than 50 children, collected by any Christian minister, and to make a further allowance for rent, books, and stationery for every such school. By this also the "Honduras Grammar School" was declared a "free school" for boys and girls, and it was provided that the religious education of the pupils "shall be under the supervision of clergymen of the Church of England." In 1855 an Act was passed requiring that the head master and mistress of the free schools, or (as they are more commonly termed) the "central schools," should be a certificated teacher selected from one of the training institutions in the United Kingdom. This qualification was abolished in 1863. The last certificated teacher sent from England, was found unfit, and resigned. During the administrations of Sir William Stevenson and Mr. Seymour, commodious school buildings were erected. These were unhappily destroyed in the fire of 1863, and the school has since been conducted in a less convenient building. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, the central schools have continued to supply a fair education to a large number of children. There were, in 1867, 88 boys, 90 girls, and 136 infants in the central schools. The infant school was added in 1855, in order that the elder children might be more carefully attended to. The cost to the Colony of maintaining these schools was 620*l.*, so that the charge for the education of each child therein averaged 1*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.* a year.

27. Besides maintaining the central schools, the board of education gave grants in aid to five Roman Catholic and four Wesleyan schools. The entire number of children in these nine schools is stated to be 437 boys and 252 girls, making a total of 689 pupils. The grants amounted in all to 362*l.* 7*s.* 2½*d.*, being at the rate of 10*s.* 6*d.* a year for each child.

28. There are also nine private schools not receiving any aid from the Government, the total number of pupils in which was 163.

29. There are six Protestant Sunday schools, with an aggregate of 616 pupils.

30. Adding together the 314 pupils in the central schools, the 689 in the Roman Catholic and Wesleyan, and the 163 in the private schools, we have a total of 1,116 children receiving instruction, besides those in the Sunday schools, who cannot be reckoned, because many of them also attend the week-day schools.

Imports and Exports.

31. The imports into the Colony in 1867 were valued at 190,495*l.* 4*s.*, being an increase of 21,461*l.* 16*s.* over the value of the imports of 1866.

32. The exports show a very serious deficiency, being only valued at 186,269*l.* 8*s.*, as against 277,155*l.* 16*s.* in 1866, showing a decline of 90,886*l.* 8*s.*

33. There was a decrease in the quantities of most of the articles exported, except specie, in which there was an increase of 50,494 dollars, equal, at the colonial rate of 4*s.* the dollar, to 10,098*l.* 16*s.*

34. The decrease in the quantities of articles exported to the neighbouring republics may perhaps in some measure be accounted for by the check given to the transit trade by the recent legislation adverted to in my remarks upon the Supply Act, under the head of legislation.

35. There has been a large decrease in the export of mahogany and logwood. For a century and a half these two articles have formed the staple export of the Colony, and the extent to which the trade has declined is apparent from the following table, contrasting the exports of 1867 with those of the 10 preceding years :—

Years.	Mahogany exported.	Logwood exported.
	Feet.	Tons.
1857 - -	7,267,369	6,681
1858 - -	6,275,374	5,034
1859 - -	5,436,014	1,502
1860 - -	8,089,966	6,845
1861 - -	8,656,533	7,000
1862 - -	8,885,163	7,802
1863 - -	6,196,470	8,471
1864 - -	7,134,897	15,238
1865 - -	5,240,120	7,352
1866 - -	5,167,167	8,036
Total of the 10 years -	68,349,073	73,961
Yearly average - -	6,834,907	7,396
Exports in 1867 - -	4,155,926	4,528
Decline in 1867 - -	2,678,981	2,868

showing that the exports both of mahogany and logwood in 1867 were considerably more than a third less than the average exports of the last 10 years.

36. Much of this sudden decrease is no doubt due to the incursions of the Indians, which caused the withdrawal of the mahogany gangs from the infested district; and with the restoration of tranquillity the trade may fairly be expected to be recuperated to the extent at least of the decline caused by this accidental interruption.

37. But mahogany and logwood cutting must necessarily come to an end, sooner or later, with the exhaustion of the natural forests; and though the end is not yet, the colonists have done well to turn their attention to the cultivation of the lands which, in their wild state, no longer yield a profit. The progress which has hitherto been made is very small. Sugar is the principal article of cultivation, and after supplying the consumption of the Colony the first exportation was made in 1862. The following table shows the gradual progress in the succeeding five years :—

1863 - -	451,966	„
1864 - - -	694,231	„
1865 - -	478,865	„
1866 - - -	1,336,496	„
1867 - -	1,218,560	„

Many obstacles have retarded the progress of the nascent cultivation; the want of labour, the want of experience, the want at the proper time of sufficient machinery, and the want of proper buildings. Everything had to be begun from the very beginning; but many of the obstacles have been surmounted, and I think the reports for the next few years will show a rapid increase.

Agriculture.

38. The information given under this head in the Blue Book is very scanty for want of the necessary statistics. The total acreage of cultivated land is estimated to be 5,000 acres, and the area planted in sugar cane to be 3,000. I shall endeavour to procure accurate information on this head next year.

39. The produce of sugar was 868 tons, of which 324 tons were retained for consumption in the Colony, and 544 tons were exported. The produce of rum was 53,714 gallons, of which 48,900 gallons were retained, and 4,800 gallons were exported.

Grants of Land.

40. 490 acres of land were sold in 12 lots in 1867. Ten of these lots averaged five acres each, and the other two contained together 440 acres.

41. The total sum paid into the Crown fund for the purchase of land was 177*l.* 15*s.*, and a further sum of 457*l.* 4*s.* was received for the lease and rental of Crown lands, making the total land revenue for the year 634*l.* 19*s.*

42. The large grant of land known as the "Icacos Grant" is included in the Blue Book. This grant was made by Lieutenant-Governor Austin to Mr. Putnam and four other gentlemen, natives of the United States, but naturalized in Honduras. It includes all the land from the sea-coast on the east to the frontiers of Guatemala on the west, between the Monkey River and the parallel of 16° 33″ on the north and Deep River and the parallel of 16° 20″ on the south. The area of this tract of land is not expressed in the grant, but is probably about 300,000 acres, being more than 40 miles of longitude by 13 of latitude. The purchase money of this tract of land is 100,000 dollars, or 20,000*l.*, payable in ten equal annual instalments in the years 1873 to 1882, both inclusive. The grantees are bound "to locate and settle" on the granted lands 50 families within two years, and 200 families within five years. The Government is bound to expend three fourths of the purchase money in making public improvements within the granted district. These are the principal points in the grant.

43. In reference to the tenure of land in Honduras generally, I beg to refer to my Despatch No. 39. of the 6th of March last.

Gaols and Prisoners.

44. There is one gaol in Belize, the construction of which is very satisfactory, as far as the building itself is concerned. The great defect is the want of any properly enclosed yard, which renders it practicable for any prisoner to escape when he desires to do so. The gaol is placed under the entire control of a board denominated "the Gaol and Discipline Board." A Bill to abolish this board was sent down to the House of Assembly by my predecessor, Lieut.-Governor Austin, in August 1867, but proceeded no farther than the first reading. The principal defect in the management of the prisoners is in carrying out sentences of hard labour.

45. By two Acts passed in 1867 prisoners sentenced to hard labour may be removed from the Belize gaol to any other places duly appointed as prisons, and persons sentenced in the country to periods of imprisonment not exceeding three months may be confined in suitable buildings in the districts where they were sentenced. These Acts are still under review, and a report upon their operation must be deferred until next year.

Charitable Institutions.

46. I enclose a valuable report by the Public Medical Officer upon the Public Hospital, the Lunatic Asylum, and the Gaol Hospital, for the year 1867. In submitting this report to the Legislative Assembly I called the particular attention of the House to the necessity of providing, as early as possible, better accommodation for the pauper lunatics. Many of the minor inconveniences pointed out by the Medical Officer have been already remedied.

47. In accordance with the Colonial Regulations, § 283, I enclose a copy of an inventory of the furniture in the Government House, which I desired the Colonial Secretary to make on my assumption of the Government. I am unable to forward a report on the state of repair of the house, as the office of Colonial Engineer is at present vacant.

General Remarks.

48. The year 1867 will be remembered as an unfortuuate one in the annals of British Honduras. The year opened in the midst of the gloomy anxiety caused by the invasion of the Colony by the Mexican Indians, and the want of a sufficient force to repel them. The whole of the western district was deserted. The arrival of Governor Sir John Grant, with reinforcements, restored confidence, and the arduous but entirely successful campaign of Brigadier-General Harley resulted in the total expulsion of the Indians from our territory. The alarm which had been excited by the Indian raids did not, however, easily subside, and agriculture and wood-cutting were for a long time suspended in the Western district. The exports necessarily declined. In consequence of the large military expenditure, the Colonial finances became much embarassed. In the month of December, Asiatic cholera, which had for some time been prevalent in Central America, broke out with fatal malignity in the town of Belize, and speedily spread into the country. The year closed with intelligence of an irruption of Santa Cruz Indians into the country about Corosal, the issue of which no one at that time could foresee.

49. The progress and gradual cessation of the cholera, and the settlement of the difficulty with the Santa Cruz Indians, belong to the present year, and will be noticed in the report on the Blue Book for 1868, which will also, I think, exhibit a great stride in the advancement of the Colony.

I have, &c.

Extract.

Report of the Public Medical Officer on various Matters connected with his Professional Duties at the Public Hospital, the Lunatic Asylum, the Gaol Hospital, and the Poor's House, for the Year 1867.

Sir, Belize, March 1, 1868.

In accordance with the instructions laid down in the Gaol and Asylums' Act, I have the honour to submit to the Honourable House of Assembly a return of the number of patients treated in the Public Hospital, Lunatic Asylum, and Gaol Hospital, for the year ending December 31st, 1867 ; and a report on various matters connected with my duties as Public Medical Officer.

I have, &c.,

A. Hunter,

His Excellency J. R. Longden, Lieutenant-Governor. Public Medical Officer.

Public Hospital.

In my report for the year 1865, I described this institution, and enumerated what I considered its chief defects, and although considerable improvements have been effected since that time, many alterations and additions require to be made before it can be rendered a comfortable hospital for the treatment of disease.

For the requirements of the Colony at the present time the accommodation provided by our Public Hospital is barely sufficient, and now that our population is steadily increasing in consequence of immigration from other countries, and natural development, it is but reasonable to anticipate a proportionate increase of applications for relief from this institution, and therefore consequent overcrowding. The wards are capable of containing 20 persons, giving each patient on an average 1,000 cubic feet of space, 200 feet under what is considered absolutely necessary for the treatment of a soldier in any building appropriated for hospital purposes. Fortunately during this year there have only been two or three occasions on which any overcrowding took place, but in previous years I have frequently seen the number of inmates double what the space could healthily accommodate.

The internal construction of the building prevents any arrangement being made for the classification of patients, the consequence is, that medical and surgical cases require to be treated in the same ward.

The accommodation for the keeper is also very insufficient, the room occupied by him and his wife (the nurse) being only about 10 feet square.

The position of the building is unexceptionable, being situated on the sea wall, and receiving the full influence of the sea breezes; but lately the collection of stones which formed an imperfect breakwater have been washed away, and now, with a strong south-east wind, the water washes against the supports of the verandah, and when it recedes leaves quantities of vegetable matter, which becomes highly offensive when decomposed. The effluvia from this source has been greatly mitigated by picking up the sea weed, but it is impossible to remove it effectually unless by forming a perfect break water, in the same manner as that which protects the dead house, which might easily be done by the prisoners at a trifling cost.

The absence of a proper road to the dead house has been felt to be very inconvenient, and necessitates the carrying of the bodies of persons found drowned, and those for coroners' inquests, through the whole of the hospital grounds. This rather unseemly procedure could easily be remedied by repairing and widening the road which already exists between the property of the late Mr. Campbell and the hospital compound, and which was partly made about two years ago.

The fences surrounding the grounds are almost entirely useless, and, in consequence of their insecurity, animals of all descriptions force their way into the compound, and destroy every tree I plant.

In the annexed return of patients treated in the Public Hospital for this year, it will be perceived that there is a considerable decrease in the number of admissions in comparison to what is contained in the corresponding return for the year 1866, and that the reduction has to a great extent been due to the diminution of admissions for the measmatic diseases, febris intermittens and febris remittens. 180 patients (168 males and 12 females) were treated during the year ; and although this number does not materially differ from the average of years previous to 1865, yet, with the natural increase of population and the introduction of immigrants, we might have expected a proportionate increase of admissions. This marked decrease cannot be attributed to the Colony enjoying any immunity from sickness, or from an unusually healthy season ; on the contrary, the population generally have been unusually afflicted with the epidemic of cholera, and the quantity of rain which fell during the year, being nearly double what has fallen in previous years, added greatly to the sickness and mortality of the place. Of course it can easily be understood that this hospital being set aside for the treatment of ordinary diseases, the epidemic of cholera would scarcely affect the numbers of admissions, further than that it prevented many persons from coming to Belize who might have sought the aid of this institution.

British Honduras.

Out of the number of cases treated (180) there were 14 deaths, showing a mortality of something over seven per cent., slightly greater than that of last year, but still very much smaller than that of most English, Continental, and Colonial hospitals. Within these last few years the mortality has been very much smaller than in former years, although the number of admissions was not greater. Take the year 1862 for example. The number of admissions were 179, and there were 22 deaths, thus showing a mortality of 12·2 per cent. At that time that portion of the town west of Regent Street was well calculated to induce and foster diseases of the most virulent character; the streets and lanes were very narrow; the houses were closely packed together, filthy and overcrowded with people; and the grounds in many places inundated by the overflow of foul water from the old canal. Fevers of the most pernicious form were very frequent, and in many instances fatal results followed an attack. Since the fire of the early part of 1863, these pernicious fevers have almost entirely disappeared, except in the immediate vicinity of some parts of the old canal which have remained unfilled, and the health of the town has been immensely improved.

Several of the cases admitted this year were in a moribund condition, and others were in articulo mortis; two died under 12 hours after admission, and three under 24 hours. The cases of this description happened most frequently with pneumonia and phthisis; all the fatal cases were admitted with almost complete disorganization of the lungs. This unfortunate peculiarity in the mortality of the hospital is almost entirely due to the absence of medical aid in the country districts, where it is usual, when persons are attacked with a dangerous disease, for them to be sent to Belize, which they reach in a condition that precludes the possibility of a cure. Since the appointment of a surgeon to the northern district, the number of cases from that quarter has been reduced, but medical aid cannot be effectually afforded until a small hospital be established in Corosal, where serious cases can be conveniently treated. The case of the man with gunshot wound of the arm was rendered much more dangerous and difficult than it would have been had the operation been performed in Corosal, but there being no convenient place for after treatment, the only resource left was to send him to Belize. The southern district has furnished very many, I may say nearly half, of the admissions, in consequence of no medical man being stationed there. One case of injury to the leg, which in consequence of neglect will require amputation, was admitted towards the end of the year in a very precarious condition.

The evident remedy for this peculiarity in the mortality of the hospital would be (in addition to the hospital at Corosal), the appointment of a medical officer for the southern district, and the establishment of a small hospital at the most central settlement, say Allpines, the requirements of which, of itself, are quite sufficient to warrant the placing of a medical man there. A system of outdoor relief for the town of Belize would also tend to lessen the necessity of admitting many cases to whom a stay in hospital would be of no great advantage. Those people who are too indigent to procure the services of a private practitioner, but who do not wish to go into hospital, would gladly receive this timely medical aid, and it is but reasonable to suppose that if this were provided for them, disease would not be allowed to run on, and if recommended for hospital treatment would be in a condition that could be benefited by medicine. Of course such a system, unless well conducted, would be open to the greatest abuse.

On referring to the "Return of Occupations," it will be perceived that the class "Seamen" forms somewhat less than 25 per cent. of the total admissions into hospital, and it must be borne in mind that some of them belong to fishing boats and vessels that do not pay hospital dues to the Government. The cases coming from vessels arriving in the port seldom remain for a longer period than a week or ten days, and their diseases are very amenable to treatment. "Labourers" form over 50 per cent. of the total admissions, and the remaining 25 per cent. is formed by persons following trades which ought to enable them to be above the necessity for seeking relief from an institution which was originally intended for sailors belonging to vessels which pay hospital dues. These labourers and tradesmen, with a few exceptions, are generally sent from the estates in the country, and from mahogany works, where in all probability they have been following their usual avocations, even after being the subjects of disease; and when sent into hospital by their employers, their diseases have become chronic, and their health so much undermined that they require a lengthened stay in hospital, with good food, and often stimulants. In strict justice these persons should be made to pay for the benefits received, in the same manner as sailors hiring on board the coasting vessels, by a small sum being deducted from their wages for hospital dues; and thus the institution might become self-supporting, instead of being a great source of expense to the public.

The average number of days each patient remained in hospital was about 17, and although this shows an increase of five days over last year, we have reason to congratulate ourselves that the treatment of disease here is less tedious, and necessarily less expensive, than it is in hospitals in England, the Continent, and the Colonies, whose general average greatly exceed ours. The cause of the increase in the duration of each case was mainly due to the fact that we have had many chronic diseases, as phthisis, ulcers, &c., &c.

The average daily sick for the year was 10·8. On some occasions the hospital was nearly empty; on others it has been overcrowded.

Lunatic Asylum.

Shortly after my appointment as medical officer to this establishment, I laid before the Honourable House of Assembly a report on its condition, and the arrangements provided for the treatment of those unhappy sufferers whose disease is looked upon by many as incurable, and urged on that body the extreme necessity of condemning a building which in every particular was so objectionable, and so deficient in every comfort and almost every convenience as an institution for the treatment of the insane.

The pecuniary condition of the Colony has hitherto been such as to prevent any expensive changes being made, and now, after a lapse of two years with the same state of things existing, I should again like to draw the attention of the House to the wants of these poor persons. During the last two years considerable improvement has been effected in the treatment of the inmates, and much has been done by the kindness of the Chairman and members of the Gaol and Asylums' Board for the amelioration of their unfortunate position; but it is clear, that with a defective building to begin with, and an absence of every requisite for the treatment of mental diseases, the gratifying results of frequent recoveries cannot be anticipated.

The situation of the building is, as far as salubrity is concerned, unexceptionable, but, owing to the limited extent of ground which surrounds it, the most important means of curative treatment, viz., sufficiency of land for exercise and the indulgence in pleasing agricultural pursuits, are entirely lost; and the common relaxation of walking out doors is sometimes denied the inmates, in consequence of the low and wet state of the ground. The building itself was originally a private dwelling, and on being converted into an asylum for lunatics the necessary alterations were not effected, and the internal arrangements for the curative treatment of insanity were altogetger ignored. The lower story contains five wards and the upper story two, with a room for the keeper and his wife, The wards, or rather cells, are small, the largest being 11 feet in length, 7 feet in breadth, and 9 feet in height, thus giving about 700 feet cubic space, an amount very much below the average of asylums, and each has a grated window opening into a corridor which runs the whole length of the building in front. With the exception of this window, which is very small, there are no means of ventilation; there are no means by which the cells can be cleaned or kept clean, and there is no facility for the treatment of the inmates. Latterly the wood work of the roof and windows has become so dilapidated that no protection from the weather is afforded, and the rain permeates through the roof and floor into every cell.

As most of the patients confined in the asylum at present are old and confirmed cases, who have lost all sense of decency and cleanliness, it is most difficult to induce them to use the vessels provided for them, and the floors and walls being formed of wood, which absorbs the excreta, it is a matter of impossibility to prevent an unhealthy and offensive odour arising from the impregnated wood. It matters not how indefatigable the keeper may be with water and disinfectants, this offensive odour sometimes pervades the place. These cells, in consequence of the want of a day room or proper dormitory, form the eating and sleeping apartment of each patient.

There are no means by which the classification of patients can be effected. The raving and blasphemous maniac, who utters horrible language, shouts from morning to night, and makes fearful noises by beating the wooden partition, requires to be placed in the cell next to that of a quiet inoffensive lunatic, who sits melancholy in a corner, and speaks but rarely. Sleep, the great restorer of an exhansted nervous system, and which is so essential in the treatment of insanity, cannot be indulged in by the quiet and harmless lunatic so long as these maniacal patients cannot be placed in separate and appropriate cells. It was solely on account of this disadvantage that I treated three cases of insanity in the hospital rather than place them under circumstances which would have tended to exaggerate the affection.

There is no room or ward for the treatment of sick inmates, nor is there any convenient cell for the dangerous lunatic who may attempt to injure himself. The beneficial effects of a warm bath can only be administered by a tub, there being no proper bath house or lavatory. Hitherto comparatively little out-door exercise or amusement could be afforded to any of the patients so as to distract their attention from their hallucinations, in consequence of the insecurity of the fences making it an easy matter for an inmate to effect an escape, and thus endanger the safety of the neighbourhood. Moreover, in wet weather, the most part of the yard is covered with water, and in the dry fine months there is no protection in the way of shade from the scorching rays of the sun.

The accompanying return shows the number of inmates under treatment during the year. There was one admission, two discharges, and one death. The old woman who died had been an inmate for many years, and was a confirmed imbecile. During the prevalence of the epidemic of cholera she was the subject of a severe attack of the disease, and although she survived for five days, and had got over every symptom of cholera, she succumbed from sheer debility on the fifth day. This forms the first death in the asylum since it has been under my charge. The other cases are mostly old and confirmed imbeciles, who have been inmates for many years.

Poor's House.

Since the removal of the paupers to the temporary establishment near to the cattle pen, a considerable and satisfactory change has taken place with regard to their sanitary condition. As a temporary substitute for the Poor's House, the building is perhaps better adapted to the requirements of such an institution than any other available; but as a permanent refuge for paupers it would be difficult to concelve a building more inadequate in its conveniences, and less fitted for this purpose. There is no doubt that over the old Poor's House it has the advantage of providing protection from the inclemencies of the weather. but beyond this it possesses very little more.

Very little disease of any description has shown itself during the year, and any mortality which may have occurred, has resulted from old age, and not from acute disease. During the epidemic of cholera, it is astonishing to relate that not a single case occurred among these poor old people, and I have no hesitation in saying, that this immunity was entirely due to the care and untiring assiduity of the matron, who on all occasions (night and day) was constantly administering such comforts as alone form the entire medical treatment of the old and infirm—nourishment and stimulants. The diet of the poor was altered, and some little extra comforts afforded on the cold and wet days frequently experienced during the epidemic of cholera.

In concluding my report there is one other subject to which I should like to draw the attention of the Honourable House, viz., the regulations for the quarantining of vessels arriving from infected ports.

BRITISH HONDURAS.

Perhaps at no time has a greater necessity existed for an inquiry into the working of these regulations, and certainly no more favourable opportunity for discussion could have offered itself than the present one. Much dissatisfaction exists among the people generally in consequence of the want of security which the "Ship Quarantine Regulations," as contained in a small pamphlet issued by the Board of Health, affords; and it is but natural that the inhabitants should feel considerable alarm, knowing that there is likely to be a constant communication with a port that is pre-eminently noted for its frequent epidemics. Furthermore, it may be seen by referring to the "Regulations," that the protection of the town is almost solely entrusted to the pilots and customs officers, and that the release of a vessel from quarantine depends on the dictum of an irresponsible Board of Health (a quorum of which may be formed by non-professional members), that may ignore the opinion of the de facto health officer. Again, the inconveniences and hardships which passengers, subject to quarantine at this port, undergo, is likely to prevent many persons from coming to the Colony, and may prove detrimental to the interests of immigration. A system of quarantine which is ineffective is a hindrance to trade, and a source of dissatisfaction to the public; and to allow the pilot or the customs' officer the discriminating power of bringing a vessel to the quarantine ground or into harbour is certainly laying the measure open to abuse, and affording no protection to the community. An effective quarantine, on the other hand, while being a preventative to the introduction of epidemic disease, inflicts a great many hardships on those persons who arrive in vessels from infected ports, and, unless we can make those drawbacks as bearable as possible, we cannot hope for extensive immigration.

The obvious remedies for the evils attending quarantine would be the formation of a station where the passengers and crew of a vessel might be landed for a short time, their clothing, &c. well washed and aired, and the vessel properly cleansed, and where the sick, if any, might receive some degree of care and attention. One of the many kayes surrounding our harbour would answer the purpose admirably; and I am convinced that a three or four days' quarantine at such a station, where the passengers could be landed, the bedding and clothing disinfected, washed, and dried, and the vessel properly cleansed, would be productive of much less danger than the admission of a vessel after a 15 or 18 days' quarantine at the present quarantine ground, with all the clothing and bedding landed unwashed.

My Lord Duke, King's House, Jamaica, July 16, 1868.

No. 41 of 16 June 1868.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Grace a Despatch from the President of Turks Islands, transmitting the Blue Book of the Turks Islands for the year 1867, together with his report on it.

I have, &c.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, &c. &c. &c.

(No. 41.)

Sir, Government House, Grand Turk, June 16, 1868.

I HAVE the honour, in forwarding to your Excellency the Blue Book of Turks and Caicos Islands for 1867, to submit the following short report upon its contents.

General Revenue.

2. The receipts for the year 1866 were from the following sources:—

	£	s.	d.
Imports	5,177	5	6
Exports	4,022	17	10
Light duties	932	16	0
Miscellaneous	1,446	15	2

Or a decrease of				2,262	5	6

in the year 1867, as compared with the year 1866, almost exclusively attributable to the falling off in the export of the staple production of the Colony, and lesser amount of tonnage necessarily employed.

Thus, in 1866, the export and light duties amounted to	4,955	13	10
The same in 1867 to	2,868	2	5
Showing a decrease of	2,087	11	5

in these two sources of revenue alone.

3. The general expenditure in 1867 was	10,392	13	1
and hurricane expenses repaid to the Crown fund	2,160	3	6
In all	12,552	16	7

or an actual excess of expenditure over receipts of 3,235*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.* To meet this excess there was in the hands of the Receiver General, on the 31st December 1866, a balance of 5,482*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, so that the sum of 2,247*l.* 12*s.* remained available on the 31st December 1867 for the services of the present year.

Water tanks and wells	59	0	8
Miscellaneous services	1,485	3	3
				4,511	0	6
Leaving a balance of				461	12	0

for expenditure on public works and miscellaneous services during the year 1868.

5. In addition to the above expenditure on roads and bridges, a sum of 313*l.* 13*s.* was disbursed from the General Revenue principally for the benefit of the salt pond proprietors, and a further sum of 26*l.* 11*s.* from the same source for repairs at the light-house.

Public Works.

6. The public works accomplished during 1867 involved an expenditure of 3,606*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.*, the particulars of which have been transmitted to your Excellency in my Despatch No. 40 of 16th June instant, covering the annual report from the Colonial Surveyor and Inspector of Public Works. It will therefore be sufficient for the purposes of this report if I subjoin an abstract of the sums disbursed on the various public works during the years 1866 and 1867, showing a total expenditure of 6,744*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* during these two years.

7. I may here mention that the new gaol and the enclosure walls have been completed this year, and that the gaoler's dwelling, and accommodation for debtors and first-class misdemeanants, are now being proceeded with. The gaol is a superior building, and does credit to the architect, the contractor, and the Colony.

Legislation.

8. Ten Ordinances were passed by the Council, nine of which received Her Majesty's gracious confirmation and allowance.

Population.

9. The census of 1861 returned the population of these Islands at 4,372 souls. In 1864 a registration of births, deaths, and marriages was inaugurated; and from these returns it appears that during the last four years there were in the Colony 793 births, and during the same period 461 deaths, adding then 332 to the above census return for 1864–67, and an average of 249 for the three years, 1861–63, the present population should be about 4,953; but, in all probability, that number is less than the actual fact. The following returns afford all other necessary information.

Ecclesiastical Education.

10. These departments continued in 1867 very much what they were in 1866. The new boys', girls', and infants' schools are now in course of erection, and will be probably completed in the autumn of the present year, when it is hoped a new master and inspector will have been appointed to take charge of the model school at Grand Turk. The total attendance at the various schools was 168 boys and 135 girls, in all 303; and the fees collected amounted to 59*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.*

12. The quantity and value of the staple export of the Colony shipped during the past five years were respectively as follows:—

Year.	Bushels.	Value.
1864	1,252,186	29,726 0 1

Being an average annual quantity of 1,392,655 bushels salt, at an average value of of 27,996*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.*, or within a fraction of $4\frac{3}{4}$d. per bushel. And if we take the average quantity of the first four years at 1,467,187 bushels, value 28,834*l.*, it appears that the exportation of salt in 1867 fell short of that average by 372,659 bushels and 4,190*l.* value.

13. The trade, therefore, of the Colony was in an unsatisfactory condition during the past year, which, following immediately on the steps of the hurricane, must have pressed with singular hardship on the mercantile community. Large quantities of wrecked goods have also been introduced from St. Thomas at the close of last and the beginning of this year, so that the importation of dry goods will be probably limited in 1868. But the advent of these damaged goods is not an unmitigated evil, for very many poor people have thus been able to procure under-clothing and other articles of dress at much cheaper cost than fresh goods could have been purchased for; and as Messieurs Frith & Murphy, who have been engaged in the remunerative diving operations at St. Thomas, are the proprietors of the greater portion of East Harbour Salina, their success in their various undertakings to windward will unable them to introduce into this Colony the capital thus acquired, which I understand amounts to a large sum of money, and, in the formation of the railway and wharf at East Harbour, to eventually increase the value of their own property, to the advantage of the labourers there, and the benefit of the trade of the Colony.

Charitable and Literary Institutions.

15. The new Almshouse is admirably situated on one of the most healthy spots in this Island. It is well adapted for the purpose to which it is devoted, shelter and comfort to the declining years of the aged or helpless, and is judiciously managed by a board of three gentlemen, annually appointed by the President for that purpose. A matron, cook, male and female nurses, and the physician, are the permanent staff, and additional hight nurses are employed when necessary.

The Hospital is small, constructed of wood, and contains only three apartments ; but Dr. Bascome reports it sufficiently commodious for the cases which are there admitted for treatment, and it is also situated on a salubrious site.

16. The Public Library, which I found comprised 426 volumes, locked in two book cases, and seldom or never used, I endeavoured to popularize in 1864. At the close of last year the number of volumes had increased to 931, and, what was of more consequence, they had been read. They are classified as follows :—

	Volumes.
History	123
Biography	107
Travels	114
Fiction	388
General information	199
Total	931

In addition to which, the principal quarterly and monthly periodicals, and ten English, one French, and one American newspapers are supplied to the reading room.

17. The Social and Moral Institute begins, I hope, to bear good fruit. From the last quarterly report I have obtained the information that there were during that period—

Houses visited	187
Inmates, male 432, female 465	897
Books lent	307
Tracts distributed	449
Children at Sabbath school	243

The benefit conferred by this Institute on the poor and labouring population may be gathered from a few extracts from the reports handed in by the district visitors.

"The district visitor is most kindly welcomed by all, and great thankfulness expressed for the books lent. Many who would attend a place of worship, and send their children to Sabbath school, are prevented from want of clothing, the little they possess being required to purchase food, and rebuild their houses destroyed by the hurricane."

"I am glad to report a better state of affairs with respect to the juvenile portion of my district. I think I may safely estimate about 85 per cent. attend Sabbath school."

"The people seem to appreciate the efforts that are being now made by the Institute for their instruction."

"I feel quite sure that by the continued efforts of this Institute in supplying books and tracts of a moral and religious tendency, and a little patience and perseverance exercised by the district visitors, a large amount of good will be effected amongst our fellow colonists, who stand so much in need of instruction, and the efforts we are now making will eventually be crowned with success."

"Sabbath afternoons, hitherto spent in idleness, and too frequently in the indulgence of vicious habits, are now employed in either reading the books lent or else listening to their being read to them."

The Library now contains about 400 volumes, obtained from the British and Foreign Bible Society, which, while strictly religious and moral in their tendency, contain a vast amount of general information, conveyed in the simplest form possible.

This Institution was at its inception and in its constitution thoroughly catholic, and I had the active support of the then ministers and people of all denominations. For no assigned reason, the subscriptions and attendance at the quarterly meetings have been gradually withdrawn, until, with the honourable exception of two Wesleyans and one Baptist, the society is now wholly supported by members of the Church of England. The benefits of the Institute are still, however, extended to all classes resident in the town and suburbs of Grand Turk, without distinction of colour or creed.

18. Missionary Association, supported by a subscription of 3*d.* weekly from the members of St. Thomas' Church.—The advantages of the Association are extended to all classes and creeds in the Turks and Caicos Islands, the Island of St. Domingo, and the shipping, both English and foreign, visiting the Colony for commercial purposes. The Bibles, Testaments, educational and other books, are sold at one third, one half, and one fourth less than their original cost, and always distributed gratuitously where there is sufficient reason to believe that, although desired, the parties applying have no means of paying for them. By this means 860 Bibles, 548 Testaments, 1,006 volumes of a religious, devotional, moral, and educational nature, and of general information, with a large number of undenominational tracts, have been distributed throughout the Colony, among the shipping and in St. Domingo, and donations of 10*l.* sent to each of the Bible and Tract Societies.

19. Besides the above, the auxiliary of the "Christian Knowledge Society" has remitted to the parent society 85*l.*, and has sold and distributed, without respect to creed, 115 Bibles, 57 Testaments, 84 Common Prayer Books, and 370 miscellaneous books, exhibiting a large increase in comparison with former years.

20. I confess to being thus particular with respect to these two last institutions because it has of late become a too common cry that the Episcopalian church is neglectful of her duties in the West Indies, so that, while I carefully avoid in my present position all partisanship, and have for many years contributed what I could to other denominations, I yet feel it due to the rector of this parish to record, for the information of the Government, what measure of success has followed the untiring efforts that clergyman is constantly making for the welfare of the whole community, without the slightest wish to detract from any successful labour undertaken by other denominations for the religious and moral improvement of the people.

21. Singularly free as these Islands generally are from dangerous fevers, we were fatally visited last year with a malignant fever of a typhoid type, which claimed 13 victims, amongst whom were five or six adults and children who had recently arrived in the Colony from England and America. In other respects the health of the colonists was good; but I begin to realize the truth of the general remark, that the excessive dryness of this climate appears to sap the natural moisture from the human frame, and that people, even well enured to a tropical climate, after a few years residence here, require the needful change to a moister climate to recover the happy tone necessary to good health.

BRITISH GUIANA.

No. 4.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Hincks, C.B., to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

(No. 135.)

My Lord Duke, Government House, Demerara, August 31, 1868.

I have the honour to transmit to your Grace the British Guiana Blue Book for the year 1867, and to make the following report thereon.

2. Revenue and Expenditure.

The revenue for the year 1867 was 275,209*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, against 304,816*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.* in 1866. There was a considerable deficiency in the import duties, owing to stagnation in trade, which is generally attributed to the commercial disasters of 1866. The expenditure was 307,061*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*, against 310,877*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* in 1866. I may observe that the average revenue and expenditure for the last six years has been about 295,000*l.*

3. Public Debt.

The aggregate amount of the debt in 1867 was 660,037*l.* 10*s.* against 660,645*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* in 1866. Of this debt, about 250,000*l.* is secured by planters' notes given in reimbursement of immigration expenses. The bonds given by the Colony, and which are much sought after in England, where they are payable, are redeemable five years after date, but are generally renewed. The notes of the planters are on the whole paid with great punctuality, and it seldom becomes necessary to take legal proceedings for their recovery. No loss has accrued to the Colony by these loans, which have been a great accommodation to the planters. I have stated the amount of this floating debt at about 250,000*l.*, and I may add that this is less by 12,000*l.* than it was five years ago. Another portion of the debt, amounting to nearly 100,000*l.*, has been lent to the mayor and town council of Georgetown, for the establishment of waterworks, for the promotion of works conducive to health, and other public improvements. This arrangement was made simply because it has been found that there is no difficulty in disposing of the direct bonds of the Colony, whereas the local corporation is not known in the money market, and would have difficulty in borrowing on any terms. The corporation debt is amply and satisfactorily secured. The remaining portion of the debt is 316,866*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, about 12,000*l.* of which has been lent to some of the villages for improvements of a permanent character. The principal part of this debt (250,000*l.*) has been guaranteed by the Imperial Government, but a sinking fund amounting to 152,764*l.* has been already invested in consols, and this portion of the debt will be completely extinguished in the year 1874. The statement in the Blue Book for 1867 shows that the debt of 170,000*l.* to the Imperial Government had been reduced to 4,000*l.*, which has been paid off this year. The remaining portion of the debt is held chiefly, if not entirely, in the Colony, and is little over 60,000*l.*, to meet which there is an invested sinking fund of about 15,000*l.* I trust that it will appear from this statement that the public debt need not cause the least uneasiness.

4. Public Works.

Sea defences on the east of the city, and in front of the Eve Leary Barracks, are rapidly approaching completion. It has been found absolutely necessary to construct defences of a similar character on the west side of the Demerara River, and on the sea coast, to protect public property of considerable value. The expenditure on works in 1867 was about 25,000*l.*, and much the same as in the preceding year.

5. Legislation.

Seven Ordinances were enacted during the year 1867, three of which were ordinary Tax Ordinances. The others were, No. 4, providing for the management of the Lunatic Asylum; No. 5, amending the Ordinance prohibiting Sunday trading; No. 6, amending the law relating to licences; and No. 7, an Ordinance incorporating the British Guiana Museum Company.

6. Education.

The report of the Superintendent of Schools is on the whole satisfactory. There is an increase of nine schools over the number receiving aid in 1866. The Church of England Schools are in in number 54; the Church of Scotland, 28; the Roman Catholic, four; Wesleyan, 23; and London Missionaries, 18. The children on the books numbered respectively, Church of England, 6,338; Church of Scotland, 2,104; Roman Catholic, 401; Wesleyans, 2,654; and London Missionaries, 1,899. The average attendance is low, but not materially different as regards the religious denominations. The chief cause of bad attendance is doubtless the weather. The lowest average attendance was at the Wesleyan Schools, viz., 51½ per cent. on the number in the books; Church of England, 54½; Church of Scotland, 56; and Roman Catholic and London Missionaries, 58 per cent.

7. Imports and Exports.

The imports in 1867 fell rather short of 1,500,000*l.*, and the exports were valued at 2,565,777*l* 1*s.* 0*d.* The value of sugar, rum, and molasses was 2,187,215*l* 1*s.* The other exports were chiefly articles imported in bond for consumption in other Colonies, such as rice, flour, pork, &c., and products of the Colony of minor importance. The exports to the United Kingdom were 1,824,340*l.* 9*s.* 0*d.*, or nearly four fifths of the whole. It may however be proper to observe, that the export trade to the United States is steadily on the increase.

8. Gaols and Prisons.

I have great satisfaction in reporting that considerable improvements have been made in the gaols, by providing increased accommodation for prisoners, and by improving the ventilation of the cells. There is still much to be done; but the digest of the information contained in the answers to the queries as to the state of colonial prisons has stimulated and materially assisted the efforts of those whose duty it is to press the importance of these improvements on the Colonial Legislature.

9. Concluding Remarks.

British Guiana being essentially a sugar-producing Colony, it may be interesting to notice a few facts illustrative of its recent progress. In the year 1857 the exports of sugar were 58,766 hhds., of rum 26,734 puncheons, and of molasses 7,105 casks. In 1867 they were, of sugar 82,726 hhds. (a short crop, that of 1866, having been 91,580), of rum 25,345 puncheons, and of molasses 24,033 casks. In 1857 the immigrant population on the sugar estates was 16,826, and in 1867 42,366. The increase of the immigrant population has been in 10 years 151·80 per cent., but it may be proper to observe that much the greatest increase has taken place in the county of Demerara, in which it has been 218·13 per cent., while in Essequebo it has been 98·55, and in Berbice 88·85. The superintendence of these immigrant labourers is a constant source of anxiety, but I have great satisfaction in expressing my conviction that no just ground of complaint as to their treatment will be found to exist. The bounty system affords an admirable test of the satisfaction of the immigrants with their employers. That system was first introduced in this Colony, and I doubt whether it prevails elsewhere. It owes its origin to the indenture fee of $50 which the planter was required to pay towards the cost of introducing the immigrants. As the term of industrial residence is limited to five years, while the immigrant is only entitled to a back passage after a residence of 10 years, it is obviously desirable to induce the acclimated and skilled labourers to continue on the estates, and it is clearly more advantageous to the planter to pay a bounty in cash to a skilled labourer than to give the same sum to the Government for one newly imported. It is, however, manifest, that as the re-indenture on bounty is quite voluntary, no immigrant would enter into a new engagement if he had any real ground of dissatisfaction. During the first half-year of 1867, 2,765 immigrants took bounty to the amount of $137,075. Of these 485 were Chinese, who are not entitled to a back passage, while of the Indian immigrants several hundred postponed their claim for back passages in order to take bounty and continue as labourers. Every estate having indentured immigrants is visited twice a year by the sub-immigration agents, and twice by the Inspector-General of Estates Hospitals, who reports at great length both on the hospitals and dwellings of the immigrants. These reports undergo a careful consideration by the Immigration Agent General, and by the Governor, who take prompt measures to correct all abuses. An opinion is rather prevalent that the sugar cultivation of British Guiana is carried on almost exclusively by immigrant labourers. This is a great mistake. A vast amount of the heaviest work on the estates is performed by the Creoles of African origin, and I do not believe that the Creoles have ever been in such satisfactory relations with their employers as during the last few years. It will indeed be fortunate for the planting interest if the labour market should continue as at present. Twenty years ago the employers were liable to constant strikes, which of course took place at those periods when it was absolutely neeessary that the crop should be reaped and manufactured. At present the indentured labourers on each estate are in number sufficient to prevent any serious calamity from occurring should the Creole labourers abandon their work, and the consequence is that strikes have entirely ceased. The proportion of Creole labourers to immigrants varies very much, but nevertheless there are data on which an approximate estimate may be based. The cost of labour per hogshead of sugar may be assumed with tolerable certainty, and the average earnings of immigrant labourers are likewise ascertainable with sufficient precision for a rough calculation. On such data, which I admit cannot be relied on with accuracy, I estimate that there must be at least 20,000 Creole labourers working on the sugar estates. Many of these labourers are small proprietors of lots in the villages, which have long been, and which I fear will long continue to be, a source of much anxiety to the Executive Government. The great drawback to the villages on the east coast of the county of Demerara, which is the most important sugar district, is the difficulty of obtaining proper drainage. There is hardly an estate in that district which has not been compelled to procure draining engines, and the villagers appear at length to be thoroughly sensible of the importance of following the example which has been set them by the proprietors of sugar estates. I do not exaggerate when I state that well-drained land would yield a rental of four times as much as that which is insufficiently drained. I have obtained the sanction of the Combined Court for loans for the erection of draining engines in some of the principal villages on the east coast, and I feel assured that the result will be most satisfactory. I have no reason to doubt that the condition of all classes of the people is on the whole highly satisfactory, and that the Colony furnishes conclusive proof that under a system of free trade and free labour sugar cultivation can be profitably carried on.

BRITISH GUIANA.

No. 5.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor RAWSON, C.B., to his Grace the Duke of BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(No. 116.)

MY LORD DUKE, Government House, Nassau, July 11, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to submit my annual report, to accompany the Blue Book for the year 1867.

I have, &c.
RAWSON W. RAWSON,
Governor.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,
&c., &c., &c.

REPORT.

It was anticipated by many that the destructive effects of the hurricane which swept the group of the Bahamas in October 1866 would be severely felt in the following year, and would hinder the advancement of the Colony, to which various circumstances, referred to in my previous reports, appeared before that disastrous occurrence likely to contribute. Yet some hope was entertained that the deluge of rain which accompanied the storm would, by stimulating vegetation and increasing the fertility of the soil, neutralize to some degree the losses caused by the wind and floods. This hope has not been realized. After the hurricane came a drought, or rather repeated droughts, throughout the year, which kept large numbers of the outislanders in a state of indigence and want, so as to render it necessary to continue to assist them with supplies of food for some time after the season at which, if their new crops had been spared, they would have been able to maintain themselves.

2. The crops of pine apples were reduced by one half; some say two thirds. The exportation was reduced, both in quantity and value, by more than one half. The orchards of oranges and other fruit trees were seriously injured; in some places entirely uprooted; in others the trees were broken and shattered. The exportation was only one fifth of that of 1865, the year before the hurricane. The sponges were disturbed and deteriorated in quality by the agitation of the sea. Notwithstanding the new demand for the common kind of sponge for the manufacture of mattresses and the stuffing of furniture, introduced into the United States, the weight of sponge exported in 1867 fell short of that of the preceding year by nearly one fifth.

3. The only article of domestic production of which there was a notable increase was salt. The exportation of this was nearly threefold in quantity and value, although the principal salt producing island, Inagua, was visited by so disastrous a flood of rain in the month of November as to destroy all the salt not in store, equal to the third of the whole exportation of the year. This fall was of an extraordinary nature. Its parallel had never been witnessed in the Island. It is recorded by persons living in substantial houses that they feared that the mass of water falling on their roofs would crush them in, and that they imagined the rush of water dashing against the walls and doors of their dwellings must have been caused by a tidal wave, driven inland from the sea, like those which have lately visited several of the West Indian Islands and Hawaii.

	1866.	1867.
Imports - - -	328,622	365,316
Exports, native produce - -	77,604	71,117
Do., other - - -	184,372	156,131
Revenue - - - -	50,216	46,826

5. At the same time the necessity for repairing the damage done to public buildings by the hurricane, of giving some aid, although very limited, to the population deprived of food and of the means of obtaining it by that visitation, and for completing certain expensive works begun in a season of financial prosperity, rendered it necessary to supplement the revenue by loans to the extent of 31,153*l.* The debt before the civil war, which was paid off in 1863–4, was 43,786*l.*

Population.

6. A decreased mortality, although accompanied by a small decrease in the number of births, indicates an increase in the population, which has not been materially affected during the year by immigration or other extraordinary changes.

The number of deaths had decreased from 924 to 739; the number of births from 1,275 to 1,202. The latter may be attributed to the extra mortality in 1866 caused by the hurricane of that year, and to the impoverishment of the population in the following year, arising from the same cause.

7. The Board of Health report that there has been a complete exemption from extraordinary disease of every description during the year. The Board's report supplies for the first time reports from the New Providence Asylum, the Dispensary, and the Quarantine Establishment. The number of patients admitted into the former during the year was 153; the number remaining at the close of the year was 43 sick paupers, 23 lunatics, 2 lepers, and 1 pauper. In the Outislands 170 paupers received relief in food and clothing at a cost of 636*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* At the Public Dispensary 988 persons received medicines. The cost of these, and of supplies furnished to public institutions in Nassau and the Outislands, was 287*l.*

8. Five vessels were put into quarantine during the year, of which two were vessels of war. One was for small pox, three for yellow fever, and one for bilious remittent fever. In the latter case 39 men were attacked. The numbers on board the other vessels varied from one to three. Out of 46 cases on board of the five vessels put into quarantine one only died. It was a case of yellow fever.

Education.

9. Owing to the absence on leave and subsequent resignation of the late Inspector of Schools, the usual detailed report has not been presented. But it is stated by the Board that the schools were not long interrupted by the hurricane of 1866, that most of the schoolhouses have been restored, and that the number of scholars on the books at the close of the year had slightly increased, viz., from 2,877 to 2,900.

Crime and Pauperism.

10. The number of criminals arraigned in the General Court has varied little since last year, viz.:—

	1866.	1867.
Convicted	46	45
Acquitted	15	18

11. But the number of convictions in the Police Court has increased, and the large number of females, noticed and explained in last year's report, has been still greater, viz.:—

	Males.	Females.	Total.
1867 - -	839	447	1,216

12. The Police Magistrate attributes the increase to the mischief caused by the dancing saloons in Grant's Town, which was probably aggravated by the presence of several vessels of war, British and Foreign, that visited the port in the early part of last year. It is expected that the present year will show a great decrease.

13. The expenditure for the maintenance of the New Providence Asylum in Nasssau has been somewhat less than in 1866; for the maintenance of paupers in the Outislands somewhat greater, viz.,—

	1866.	1867.
In New Providence -	2,106	1,931
Outislands - -	552	636
Total -	2,658	2,567

Legislation of 1867.

14. Two sessions of the Legislature were held in the year. The first commenced on the 14th February and ended on the 13th May. The second was held in October, and lasted from the 14th to the 21st, the object of this special meeting being to pass an Act to authorize the Government to effect a new contract for the conveyance of the English mails between Nassau and New York, the contract for this service made by the Imperial Government with Messrs. Cunard and Co. being about to expire at the close of the year, and Her Majesty's Government having charged the Colony with the responsibility of making the new contract.

15. The other principal Acts passed during the year, all in the first session, were:—

1. "To encourage trade by the remission of certain port charges in certain cases."—Cap. 19.
2. "To regulate wharfage in Nassau."—Cap. 20.
3. "To abolish anchorage duties."—Cap. 5.
4. "To establish postal communication with Northern Outislands."—Cap. 18.
5. "To regulate public markets in New Providence."—Cap. 12.
6. "To regulate employment of lumber measures."—Cap. 11.
7. "To regulate Equity practice in General Court."—Cap 13.

The Postal Contract Act is Cap. No. 1 of 1867-8.

Land and Agriculture.

16. The preparation and issue of grants of land have increased, but various circumstances arose in the course of the year to delay both. In 1866 the grants were 84, and the area granted 1,477½ acres (including one grant of 1,000 acres of forest in Andros). In 1867 the grants were 134, and the area was 932½ acres.

17. The unfavourable results of the fruit crops, and the frequency of droughts, which have destroyed or diminished the yield of grain and vegetables, have already been noticed. The yield of cotton has suffered no less, and the growers of it have been so much discouraged by their repeated disappointments, and by the low price offered for their produce, that many of them have abandoned the cultivation. On the other hand, the growers of pineapples are sanguine of an increased demand, and are extending their operations in localities where the soil is suitable and not exhausted. The Island of St. Salvador promises to yield a largely increased supply of this esteemed fruit.

Imports and Exports.

18. The value of imports was 11 per cent. higher than in 1866; but the increase was mainly owing to exceptional transactions arising out of a reduction of duties in the neighbouring Island of Cuba, which led to the shipment of goods lying there in bond to Nassau, for the purpose of being re-shipped to the same ports for re-entry at the reduced rates. The real increase was not more than 3 per cent.; but it is satisfactory, as showing that the legitimate importations of the present as well as of the last year, which have been nearly a third greater than those of the years immediately preceding the late civil war in the United States, have not been influenced by transactions arising out of the settlement of the blockade running business.

19. As regards the trade with each country, the imports from the United States exhibit an increase of 9 per cent. The increase from the Colonies of Spain has been explained in the preceding paragraph.

20. The exportations, on the other hand, exhibit a decrease, on the gross amount of 13 per cent., and of 9 per cent. on native produce. The falling off in fruit and sponge has been already noticed; that of cotton was 29 per cent., or nearly one third. Salt, however, exhibited a very large increase, nearly threefold, viz.: from 6,879*l.* to 18,464*l.*

Wrecks.

21. As the number of wrecks in 1866 was exceptional, owing to the hurricane in October of that year, the number in 1867 cannot properly be compared with it, and as a detailed report has been submitted in separate despatches (Nos. 41 and 42 of 1st March last) it is only necessary here to notice that the number and value of wrecks was small, viz.: 29 wrecks and 21 casualties. The proportion of American is not so large as in 1866, but double that of 1864–5. The value of wrecked goods saved and landed exceeded that of 1866, chiefly owing to two wrecks of large cotton laden vessels.

22. A return of salvage in such cases, framed in accordance with the provisions of the Licensed Vessels Act of 1866, shows that the amount awarded in 30 cases was 38,016*l.*, or an average of 1,267*l.* each vessel. But if two vessels be excepted, in which the amount was respectively 11,019*l.* and 5,073*l.*, the average of the remainder was only 782*l.* The above amount was nearly equally divided between the owners and crews of the licensed vessels employed in saving the property.

23. The returns of the number and tonnage of vessels licensed for wrecking show a decrease in the number of vessels, and an increase in the tonnage. The former may be attributed partly to the destruction of such vessels in the hurricane of 1866, but mainly, as confirmed by the latter fact, to the extended operation of the Act of 1866, of which evidence will be found in the number of licences taken out at Inagua and Long Cay, where no large vessels are kept, which has been reduced from 35 to 4. The total number of vessels has decreased from 161 to 120, while the tonnage has increased from 2,984 to 3,122. The number of men licensed has decreased by one third. Harbour Island is an exception to the general rule; there the number of vessels and men, and the tonnage of the former, have all increased. This may be attributable to the occurrence of the wreck of a large vessel in that neighbourhood towards the close of the year.

Shipping.

24. The comparison of the Shipping Returns in the last two years has been so much affected by the hurricane of 1866, and the consequent arrival of vessels in distress, and their departure after repair, many in 1867, that it is only necessary to notice that, though the number of vessels arriving has slightly decreased, the aggregate tonnage has increased. In the departures, owing to the cause above mentioned, there has been a considerable increase.

		No.	Tons.
Arrivals	1866	504	62,062
	1867	467	65,399
Departures	1866	502	59,888
	1867	528	69,438

25. The noticeable points in the direction of the trade, as compared with 1866, is an increase in the number and tonnage of vessels to and from England, and a decrease in the same in the trade between the American States and Nassau, but an increase in the number and tonnage of vessels from the Out islands to that country, accounted for by the large increase in the exportation of salt, which explains also an increase in the proportion of American vessels employed in that branch of the colonial trade. The destruction of shipping by the hurricane sufficiently accounts for a considerable falling off in the number and tonnage of Colonial vessels employed in the trade of last year.

26. The difference in the trade of the principal emporiums of trade is shown in the following abstract, confirming the above observations with regard to the influences of the increased trade in salt.

27. There has been an increase in the number and tonnage of vessels built and registered in the Bahamas during the last year, as compared with 1866; 21 vessels of 302 tons have been built, against 13 vessels of 159 tons in 1866; and 31 vessels of 1,922 tons have been registered, against 29 vessels of 8,231 tons. The decrease in the tonnage of the latter is owing to the cessation of the system of transferring foreign and other large vessels to the Colonial Register. The total number of vessels on that register on 31st December 1867 was 522, measuring 35,347 tons.

28. There has been a slight increase in the number and tonnage of American vessels registered as British in the past year, viz., 6 vessels of 970 tons, against 2 vessels of 532 tons in 1866.

Trade.

29. Exchange.—The rate on London for Bank bills stood at 4 °/₀ during the first four months of the year, and then declined to 3 °/₀. Commissariat drafts commanded a higher rate, of about a quarter to one half per cent.

30. Public Bank.—The amount of business done by the Bank was not greatly reduced in 1867, as compared with the preceding year, but it is still three fourths greater than it was in the year preceding the civil war, viz. :—

	Receipts.	Payments.
1859 - -	457,552	436,678
1860 - -	456,582	455,225
1867 - -	778,110	829,195

31. The excess of payments over receipts in the last two years indicates the reduction in the cash balances, being at the rate of 94,219*l.* in 1866, and 51,085*l.* in 1867, and the proportion in the rate of reduction being nearly the same, or nearly one half annually.

32. The specie remaining on the 31st December last consisted of—

Gold, British - - - -	3,900	0	0
„ American - - -	2,919	7	6
„ Spanish - - - -	7,148	4	6
Silver, American and British -	20,504	8	11
Total - -	£34,472	0	11

33. Savings Bank.—It is satisfactory to observe a slight advance in the business of this institution, although the amount of deposits has been reduced. The latter may, however, be owing to the withdrawal of funds for investment in Government debentures, which bear a higher rate of interest. The number of accounts opened in 1867 was 21, against 3 in 1866; of accounts closed, 17 and 6 respectively. The deposits amounted to 314*l.*, the withdrawals to 840*l.* The number of depositors has increased from 143 to 147; the amount of deposits has decreased from 4,147*l.* to 3,620*l.*

34. Post Office.—The Post Office Returns show that the correspondence is about the same as in 1866, with a small increase in the number of interinsular letters, newspapers, and money orders. Her Majesty's Government having decided that upon the expiration of the contract with Messrs. Cunard and Company for conveying the mails between England and New York, and Nassau and the latter place, which terminated at the close of 1867, the Colonial Government should make provision for the latter portion of the service, a contract was made with the Atlantic Mail Steam Packet Company, whose steamers ply weekly between New York and Havana, to call every fourth week at Nassau, coming and going, which will maintain the service on the same footing as heretofore, but at nearly double the expense both to the Colonial and Imperial Governments.

35. Bankruptcies and actions for debt.—One bankruptcy and one insolvency were declared during the year. There has been a continuous and large decrease in the business of both the General Court and the Court of Common Pleas, which must have seriously affected the bar, especially as the number of its members has been increased during the year, and is still increasing.

BAHAMAS.

36. Prices and wages.—Except for a few weeks after the hurricane, when there was an extraordinary demand for labour in the building and shipwrights' trades, wages have continued to decline. Prices have necessarily kept on the same level.

37. Public market, Nassau.—The receipts exhibit a further decline from 624*l.* to 560*l.* No material change has taken place in the supplies from the Out islands. The importation of cattle from Cuba has led to the decrease of the Spanish gold in the Bank, which has, at the present date, become almost exhausted.

Revenue and Expenditure.

38. The revenue of the year has continued to exhibit a falling off, viz, from 52,266*l.* in 1866 to 46,826*l.* On the other hand, the expenditure, including the cost of restoring public buildings destroyed or injured by the hurricane, has amounted to 80,372*l.* Of this, 12,872*l.* was spent upon the work of restoration, for which provision was made by a loan of 15,000*l.* The excess on the ordinary expenditure was provided for by the issue of debentures to the extent of 16,153*l.* Of this excess, 8,250*l.* was on account of the new prison.

Meteorology.

39. It is to be regretted that the instruments used by the military authorities, which were destroyed by the hurricane in 1866, were not replaced in time to obtain observations for the past year.

Conclusion.

40. This year has been one of hardship and trial for a large portion of the community, aggravated by inconvenience and losses caused by the hurricane; but, looking to the prospects of the salt, pineapple, and sponge trades, I ought to be able to report favourably of the hopes for the ensuing year. My experience, however, has led me not to be too sanguine. The report of Mr. Johnstone, who was employed under your Grace's authority to visit the principal Out islands, with the view of ascertaining their capabilities for the growth of cotton, gives a painful account of their decadency from their early prosperity, of the annually progressive exhaustion of the soil, and the consequent increasing poverty of their occupants. The frequent alternations of droughts and heavy rains, with the renewed apprehension of visits from hurricanes, are drawbacks, against which the pauperised and unassisted petty proprietors on the Out islands have to struggle, with reduced means and relaxing energies. The diminution in the number and value of wrecks has deprived numbers of their former sources of employment and profit. It has created a jealousy against the existing laws which control the wrecking business; but the decrease is owing mainly to other circumstances, over which these laws have no influence, and which neither Colonial nor any other legislation can affect. Of these, it is only necessary to name three; the diversion of trade from the southern ports of the United States, the erection of lighthouses by the Imperial Government throughout the Colony, and the increasing use of steam for the carriage of valuable cargoes.

COPY of a DESPATCH from the Officer Administering the Government to his Grace the Duke of BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(No. 150.)

MY LORD DUKE, Trinidad, September 19, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to forward the Blue Book of Trinidad for the year 1867.

It would be presumptuous in me to offer remarks on the state of the Colony, founded on my own judgment, having been in the administration of the Government since the end of June only.

I shall therefore limit my report to a brief review of the several returns of which the Blue Book is composed.

Revenue and Expenditure.

The actual revenue of 1867, not including "items of account" which amounted to 15,895*l.* 16*s.* 0½*d.*, and which cannot be strictly called revenue, was 199,917*l.* 2*s.* 5½*d.*, and the actual expenditure, also excluding the items of account, which were 15,811*l.* 7*s.* 2*d.*, was 198,903*l.* 19*s.* 10½*d.*, being less than the revenue by 1,013*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.*

The revenue of 1866 exceeded that of 1867 by 1,119*l.* 3*s.* 10½*d.*, and the expenditure of 1866 was less by 20,145*l.* 18*s.* 9½*d.* than that of 1867.

Public Debts.

The amount of the original debts of the Colony was 331,875*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.*, contracted during the years from 1848 to 1866. At the end of 1867 this amount had been reduced by 97,850*l.*, not including the sums invested by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury on account of the sinking fund to meet the loan of 125,000*l.*, raised by debentures for immigration purposes, which had reached on the 31st December last the sum of 76,636*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*

Public Works.

The cost of the public works to be undertaken during the year was estimated at 15,547*l.* 18*s.* 10¾*d.* The amount expended on works which were finished was 5,364*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.*, and on account of those which at the end of the year were unfinished 9,008*l.* 5*s.* 0½*d.*, making a total expenditure of 14,639*l.* 19*s.* 5½*d.*

Ordinances and Proclamations.

Thirty-three Ordinances were passed in 1867. The most important were—

No. 3. "For the treatment of immigrants in certified hospitals."

No. 9. "For the relief of destitute persons within the rural districts of the Island."

No. 24. "For the appointment of a Surveyor General."

No. 26. "With regard to the imprisonment of misdemeanants."

Of the eight proclamations promulgated, those which appear to me to have reference to subjects of some importance were—

1. "For constituting the ward of Montserrat."
2. "For licensing the Irios Convict Depôt as a penal establishment."

Pensions.

There are five recipients of pensions payable out of the revenues of the Colony, the collective amount of which is 1,080*l.* The amount of the emoluments paid to the persons receiving pensions was when last employed in the public service 2,023*l.* 10*s.*

Consuls.

The only change which appears to have taken place among the consuls was in the United States Consulate, Mr. Fitt, Acting Consul, having been succeeded by Mr. Orville Allen.

Population.

The population by the census taken in 1861 was 84,438 persons. It is estimated that the population at the end of 1867, including 14,947 immigrants introduced between 1861 and 1867, was not much over 100,000 souls. This appears almost incredible, but no reliable information can be obtained with respect to the population of the Island until a new census is taken.

The deaths in 1867 exceeded the births by 506. This excess of mortality occurred principally in the towns of Port of Spain and San Fernando, while in the country districts, with few exceptions, the births outnumbered the deaths.

Savings Banks, &c.

There are two institutions of this kind in the Colony; one in Port of Spain and one in San Fernando. The number of depositors was 325 and 136 respectively.

One Friendly Society exists in Port of Spain.

TRINIDAD.

Imports and Exports.

The value of imports and exports for the last three years was as follows :—

	Imports.			Exports.
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
1865 -	810,347	4	3	820,109	2	10
1866 -	878,357	11	11	1,022,338	15	0
1867 -	858,846	16	5	1,085,890	3	7

Remarks.

The natural increase in the population, which, owing to their exemption from many of the hardships and privations which weigh heavily on the labouring classes in Europe, ought to be considerable, is I believe materially kept back from the same cause which produces the same effect in many of the West India Colonies, that is to say, from the sacrifice of infant life in consequence I believe of neglect on the part of parents. A higher state of civilization, and a strict system of registration, might probably to some extent produce a change for the better.

I am informed that the conduct of the native labouring population was generally orderly; a few disturbances of no great importance occurred in Conva among the Indian immigrant labourers.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lieut. Governor MUNDY to his Grace the Duke of BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(No. 808.)

MY LORD DUKE, Windward Islands, Barbados, October 12, 1867.

MY late arrival in Barbados precluded my attempting to make the usual annual report on the condition and prospects of the Island during the year 1867. I therefore requested Mr. Gore, the Colonial Secretary, to do so, and I have now the honour to transmit it to your Grace.

I have, &c.
His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, (Signed) ROB. M. MUNDY.
&c. &c. &c.

SIR, Colonial Secretary's Office, October 7, 1868.

IN obedience to your Excellency's instructions, I beg leave to submit the following report upon the Blue Book of 1867, for the information of his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, and in doing so must crave some indulgence on the ground of my short acquaintance with the affairs of Barbados, to which Colony I was only transferred in the spring of last year.

2. Revenue and Expenditure.

No difference of any importance was made between the tariff of 1867 and that of the preceding year, with the exception of the repeal of the extra duty of 25 per cent. on imports, which accounts for the decrease of 7,381*l.* in customs receipts. There was a further falling off of 1,967*l.* on rum duties, owing to the high prices obtained for molasses, which had the effect of checking distillation. On the other hand will be found an increase of 5,813*l.* under the head of "Militia Tax;" so that upon the whole transactions of the year, as compared with those of 1866, there is only a falling off of 5,588*l.* The expenditure shows an increase during the same period of 3,944*l.*, principally upon items of Militia, Police, and Gaols. No changes were made in the scales of fees payable at the several public offices.

3. Local Revenues.

As compared with the local taxation of 1866, there was a slight increase in that of last year. The land tax varied from 5½*d.* in St. Peter's Parish to 1*s.* 5½*d.* in St. Andrew's, while in St. Michael's where the city of Bridgetown is situated, it was as high as 3*s.* 3*d.* The usual grant of 5,450*l.* in aid of the maintenance of public roads, together with a nearly equal amount raised under the road tax, was expended on the highways; but as these funds are administered by commissioners who are independent of the local vestries they do not appear in the statements included under the head of local expenditure.

4. Public Debt.

At the close of 1867 the net amount of the Public Debt was only 410*l.*, and there was a sum of 10,811*l.* to the credit of the Colony in balances at the Treasury and at the Colonial Bank.

5. Military Expenditure.

During 1867 3,473*l.* was paid to the men of the yeomanry cavalry for attendance at monthly parades; but as the opposition in the House of Aassembly to the maintenance of this local force has during the last two or three years been gaining strength, the Government was unable to obtain any supplies in 1867 for drilling, clothing, or arming the men; so that the force, which in 1865 appeared as likely to become "highly useful and well trained," has recently been described in the last inspection report as "absolutely useless as a military body." The artillery and rifle corps no longer turn out for drill, and have, I fear, disappeared from all but the Adjutant General's returns.

92,000*l.* was expended in the Colony in the maintenance of the garrison from Imperial funds.

6. Public Works.

The works at the Swing Bridge are again suspended; and matters, already unsatisfactory enough at the commencement of the year, were brought to a climax in October by the unexpected production of several outstanding claims against the public for liabilities incurred without the sanction of the Governor and Council. Upon this discovery, Mr. Marshall, the Superintendent of Public Works, hastily resigned, since which no appointment has been made to the vacancy, and every thing connected with the department of Public Works has been at a standstill.

7. Legislation.

The only measure worthy of notice passed in the earlier portion of the legislative session of 1867–8 was that for increasing the accommodation at the General Hospital, by the erection of a separate ward for ulcer patients. During the latter part of the session Acts were passed for assimilating the criminal laws of Barbados to the statutes of the mother country relating to larcenies, to injuries to property, to forgeries, to the coin, to offences against the person, and for consolidating the Acts of the Island with regard to accessories to and abettors of indictable offences. Ordinances were also enacted declaring the law in cases of escheat, and for the erection of public offices (provision for the cost of these public buildings being made in the latter Act by the imposition of 20 per cent. in addition to the ordinary customs duties). A Contagious Diseases Act, framed upon that now in operation in several of the principal garrison towns at home, is only awaiting the construction of the requisite hospital to be brought into operation. Two important resolutions were also assented to by the Legislature, upon reports from joint committees of the Council and House of Assembly; the first pledging the Colony to provide a sum not exceeding 3,575*l.* as its contribution towards the contract of 1869 for the conveyance of the West Indian Mails; the second granting, upon certain conditions, of 2,000*l.* per annum, for 10 years, in aid of the International and Ocean Telegraph Company, who offer to extend the communication already existing between New York and Havanna, and to connect Barbados with Demerara and the neighbouring Islands. This is the third proposal of the kind which has been favourably entertained by the Legislature here; but neither the company of 1857 nor that of 1863 were able to raise the necessary capital for carrying out these projected undertakings.

8. Franchise.

The number of registered electors at the General Elections in 1867 was 1,435, but as in many parishes no contest took place it is not on record what number of voters took part in returning members to the House of Assembly.

9. Pension.

The benefits of a Pension Fund are at present confined to the members of the Police Force. There are five persons to whom small annuities are paid (under special enactments) in consideration of accidents or on account of long service.

10. Miscellaneous Returns.

Those relating to the affairs of the Savings Bank are of a satisfactory nature, the amount deposited having risen from 2,556*l.* in 1863 to 4,516*l.* in 1867, whilst the depositors have increased during that period from 373 to 775.

11. Imports and Exports.

The estimated value by the Custom House authorities of Imports is 989,503*l.*, and of Exports is 1,245,501*l.*, showing a slight increase upon both items as compared with those of 1866.

By far the greater proportion of the trade with foreign nations is monopolized by the United States, whence the Island derives its supplies of breadstuffs, corn, meal, &c.

12. Shipping.

Were there any facilities afforded for coaling or repairing vessels, these returns, on the whole satisfactory, would no doubt exhibit still increasing figures.

13. Agriculture.

The quantity of sugar exported in 1867 fell short of that of 1866 by about 4,000 hogsheads, but the crop of the latter year was considerably beyond the average production of the Island.

14. Education.

The grant for educational purposes which in 1850 was voted at 3,000*l.* is now 6,000*l.*, and the number of schools have proportionately increased, insomuch so that the Inspector has not now time during the 12 months to hold examinations of all the schools receiving Government aid. From the report for 1867 it appears that 64 primary schools were visited, and there was considerable progress both in the numbers of attendants and in those of the scholars who obtained passes for proficiency in the higher subjects of examintion, and the Inspector attributes these satisfactory results to increased faithfulness in the teaching, and to the working of the system of granting graduated certificates of efficiency to teachers. Good middle schools are, however, very much wanted. A table is annexed to the return exhibiting the order of merit of the schools examined, "which it is hoped will promote a rivalry in excellence between the several masters." On the whole the report is of a satisfactory nature.

15. General Remarks.

In view of the very full report on the Blue Book of 1866 made by your Excellency's predecessor, which not only exhausted the statistics of the five preceding years, but which trenched even somewhat upon those of 1867, I have not felt called upon to notice all the important headings of the returns; nor will I venture upon any general remarks, as my local knowledge is confined to an experience of a few months; and yet I cannot refrain from observing with regret that no attempt is made to take advantage of the great natural facilities which its geographical position affords for making the harbour of Bridgetown one of the greatest importance amongst ports of call. While our neighbours in Demerara, the French Islands and St. Thomas, are offering daily increasing accommodation to shipping, by the construction of docks, slips, and wharves, Barbados does not possess even a coaling hulk, alongside of which passing steamers can obtain supplies, and vessels, which otherwise in the prosecution of their voyages would naturally frequent Carlysle Bay, are driven to seek elsewhere those facilities for coaling and repairs which for want of the necessary harbour improvements are denied them in this Colony. BARBADOS.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieut. Governor MUNDY to his Grace the Duke of BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(No. 563.)

MY LORD DUKE, Windward Islands, Barbados, August 11, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Grace the Blue Book of St. Vincent for 1867, with the usual annual report from the Lieutenant-Governor on the state of the Island.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROB. M. MUNDY.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, &c. &c. &c.

(No. 485.)

SIR, Government House, St. Vincent, July 29th, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to transmit the annual Blue Book of the Colony for the year 1867, with the following report:—

Revenue and Expenditure.

In my last year's report I gave a statement showing the amount of revenue for the past 10 years, and the different sources from whence derived. The proceedings of the year now reported on in this respect will show a fair proportionate average, the general revenue being 18,385*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*; to this being added the sum of 3,168*l.* 9*s.*, a new impost collected under the Troops Tax Act, together with the difference of the arrears of revenue and expenditure of the previous year, amounting to 880*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, there remained 22,434*l.* 5*s.* available for the services of the year.

The expenditure amounted to 21,599*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, leaving a balance to be carried forward of 835*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, but there were outstanding claims against this to the extent of 35*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, which will bring the real balance to 799*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* Upon an examination of the comparative statement of expenditure, it would appear as if there was an increase under this head of 1,317*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* On the other hand, in this amount is included the sum of 3,113*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* expended on account of the preparations for the reception of the troops, which appears for the first time as an item of expenditure, and if omitted from the general statement it will be seen that the ordinary expenditure, instead of being apparently in excess, is in reality 1,796*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* less than that of the previous year.

LOCAL REVENUES.

Immigration Fund.

To meet the heavy outlay of 6,925*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* incurred on account of an importation of 477 Coolies by the ship "Newcastle," it was necessary to contract a loan for 2,000*l.* with the Colonial Bank, of which, however, 1,000*l.* were repaid during the year. The account shows a balance to its credit of 418*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, subject, however, to the remaining moiety of the loan.

Military Expenditure.

Of 3,545*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.* incurred under this head, the sum of 3,113*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* is on account of repairs to the Barracks, for the reception of a company of Imperial troops; the balance, 432*l.* 10*d.*, being for the support of the local forces.

Public Works.

Pending the temporary pressure upon the revenue caused by the heavy outlay upon the Barracks at Fort Charlotte, all public works, with the exception of those of an unavoidable and a trifling nature, and the necessary repairs to the roads, were suspended during the year.

Legislation.

As the Legislature may be said to have been in a state of abeyance during the year, in consequence of the anticipated change in the form of the constitution, the return under the head of Legislation is barren in the extreme. The Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1866, was passed with a view of meeting certain objections raised by Her Majesty's Government to the Act for simplifying the Legislature of St. Vincent, passed in the latter part of 1866, and to which I adverted at length in my report accompanying the Blue Book for that year. The present Act provides that the Legislature shall consist of 12 members; three ex-officio; three to be nominated by the Governor; the President to be appointed by the Governor with a double or casting vote and six to be elected by the people.

The Act to repeal sundry Acts, and to amend the law relating to the election of representatives to serve in the Legislative Assembly, was rendered necessary in consequence of the alteration of the constitution by the Acts of 1866 and 1867, and makes provision for the election of members to serve in the Legislative Assembly under the new form of Government.

Civil Establishment.

Mr. George Trafford entered upon the duties of his office as Chief Justice on the 7th January, the office having become vacant in consequence of the resignation of Mr. Sharpe.

Population.

The report of the Registrar is appended, from which it appears that the total number of births in the year was 1,604, and of deaths 1,092, showing a gain to the population during the year of 512. A comparative statement of the births and deaths for the past three years is also given, which shows a total gain of 1,207 to the population during that period. The proportion of illegitimate births is not quite so large as in the last year, but, I regret to say, reaches the high figure of 61 per cent. of the total births.

Miscellaneous numerical Returns.

The number of depositors in the Savings Bank which was established at the commencement of the year was at the end of the year 83; but, with very few exceptions, the parties availing themselves of the advantages afforded by the institution were of a class different to that for which it was originally designed. It may perhaps be premature, at this early period of its existence, to pronounce a positive opinion as to whether the objects originally intended will be ultimately attained.

The total number of immigrants in the Island on the 31st December were 695 Coolies, 16 Portuguese, and 36 Africans. On the 1st June the ship "Newcastle" arrived from Calcutta with 477 Coolie immigrants.

Education.

A comparison, as between the years 1866 and 1867, of the number of schools and scholars, shows that there were 43 schools in 1867 against 41 in 1866, and 2,836 scholars against 2,735, being an increase of two schools and 101 scholars. Of the schools, 27, with 1,647 scholars, were in connexion with the Church of England; 13 schools, with 1,100 scholars, in connexion with the Wesleyan denomination; and three schools and 89 scholars in connexion with the Roman Catholic Church.

Imports and Exports.

The value of the imports for the year was 126,410*l.*, being a decrease of 31,743*l.* upon the imports of the previous year. Of these, 46,889*l.* were from the United Kingdom, 67,893*l.* from the British Colonies, and 11,628*l.* from foreign countries.

The exceptional causes, to which in my last report I attributed the increase in the value of the imports for that year, and which was as nearly as possible equivalent to the amount of the decrease in the present year, would tend to show that the return is not in reality below the ordinary average.

The value of the exports was 194,972*l.*, being 799*l.* in excess of that of 1866, an unusually favourable year, the value of exports to the United Kingdom being 179,829*l.*

The sugar exported during the year amounted to 11,145 hhds., being 160 hhds. in excess of the previous year, which in itself showed an increase of 30 per cent. over the exports of previous years, thus clearly indicating that the sudden advance in the exports of 1866 was not owing solely to the results of a favourable season, but may rather be considered as an indication of steadily progressive cultivation. Of rum, 1,731 puncheons were exported, showing a decrease of 95 puncheons, of molasses 1,209 puncheons, against 1,063 in the previous year, showing an increase of 146 puncheons.

Though the export of arrowroot came up to the large amount of 12,441 barrels, it fell short by upwards of 2,000 barrels of the export of the previous year. This decrease is owing to a cessation on the part of the small growers in cultivating the products which to them has never yielded a profitable return. There is a falling off in the export of cocoa, which shows 15,660 lbs., against 26,640 lbs. in the previous year. The same remark applies to cotton, the returns being 68,768 lbs., against 82,600 lbs. in 1866.

Gaols and Prisoners.

There were 24 committals for trial before the Court of Grand Sessions during the year, and 14 convictions, being identical with the result of the previous year. 365 prisoners were sent to gaol by the magistrates; of them, however, 137 were debtors, thus reducing the number of the general committals to 228.

General.

The Registrar General in his report says that during the year the health of the Colony has been fair; no disease of an epidemic nature having manifested itself. The season was also propitious for agricultural purposes, the total rainfall being 122 inches, which is above the usual average. Of the atmospheric disturbances that were attended with such deplorable results at St. Thomas and the Colonies adjacent thereto, the only indications that made themselves apparent here were in the shape of a tidal wave which rose in the harbour of Bequia, one of the Grenadine Islands, to the height of ten feet, sweeping away several houses situated in the neighbourhood of the beach, but without any loss of life. As this event was coincident in date with one of a similar but much more serious nature that occurred at St. Thomas it is to be presumed that the origin of both may be attributed to the same cause. The violent hurricane that occurred at St. Thomas on the 28th October was entirely unfelt in this Island. Public tranquillity was preserved during the year; and though I cannot speak in such favourable terms of the general commercial prosperity of the Colony as it was my good fortune to do when alluding particularly to the successful results that attended agricultural enterprise, still I do not consider that any class of the community has serious cause for complaint.

I have, &c.

The Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, &c. &c. &c. (Signed) GEORGE BERKELEY.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
St. Vincent, August 12, 1867.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to place before your Excellency the abstracts of the births and deaths in this Colony for the third year of the operation of "The Births and Deaths Registration Act."

2. The births in this year amount to 1604; the deaths to 1092; showing a gain to the population during the year of 512.

ST. VINCENT.

The following is a comparative statement of the births and deaths for the last three years:

* Decrease of five.

3. The number of illegitimate births is not quite so large as in the last year, being 61 per cent. of the total births. The per-centage in each year and in each district appears as follows:

Year.	Proportion of Illegitimate Births.
	Of total Births.	Of Births in Kingstown District.	Of Births in Calliaqua District.	Of Births in Windward District.	Of Births in Leeward District.	Of Births in Grenadine District.

4. The proportion of births in the past year to the population of the Colony is ·049, or four 9-10ths per cent.; the proportion of deaths is ·033 or three 3-10ths per cent. The proportions for each year and in each district during the last three years are shown in the following tables:

5. The birth-rate and the death-rate amongst the white population in the past three years is stated in the annexed table; and by this it will be seen that there is a small but steady yearly decline in the numbers of this class.

6. The deaths in the last year amongst infants under one year of age are ·231, or 23, 1-10th, per cent. of the total deaths; and the still-births are ·087, or 8, 7-10ths, per cent. It will be seen by the subjoined tables that there has been a slight decrease in each in the deaths amongst children under 15 years of age; also that in the past year there has been a decrease in the per-centage of still-births. It will be observed, also, that the mortality in the three years amongst infants under one year of age is less in the town district than in the country districts. It may be a question whether this can reasonably be attributed to the facilities afforded in the town district for medical aid. In the country districts the residents have many advantages to health over those in the town; they are less crowded; they have purer air; they follow more healthy occupations; their food is equally good, is more abundant, and is more easily obtained. The negro of the town is possessed of the same nature and characteristics as he of the country; he is as indolent, as wanting in affection to his offspring, and as indisposed to exertion in its behalf. Give equal credit to the indolent and thoughtless resident of the country as to him of the town for a desire to procure for his child medical attendance, what facilities has the one in comparison with the other? For miles around the one seeks a doctor in vain; within a small area the other has a choice of two.

7. During the past year the health of the Colony has been fair, but diarrhœa has prevailed in some parts, and has caused the increase in the year's death rate. In 1865 fever prevailed more than usual, and there was quite an epidemic of whooping cough. From these two causes the number of deaths in that year was considerably swelled, fevers causing 14, 5-10ths per cent., and lung affections 13, 7-10ths per cent. of the deaths. I have shown in the following tables the per-centage of deaths in each year from those diseases which are most prevalent and fatal to life, and the variation, in the different seasons of the mortality. The beginning and fall of the year are the most unhealthy seasons.

8. In conclusion, I must remind your Excellency that such of the foregoing calculations as are based upon the supposed gross population of the Colony or of any of the districts thereof must be accepted only as approximate, for they are based as to the year 1865 on the census of 1861, without correction for increase or decrease, there having been no registration before that year, and no means, therefore, of correcting the census according to the annual changes in the population. The calculations for 1866 and 1867 are corrected for increase in accordance with the registration.

9. Supposing the population had increased in the three years from the taking of the census in 1861 to the commencement of the registration in 1864, in an equal ratio to the increase in the three years since 1864, there will have now been an addition of about 2,500 (or over 400 per annum) to the population. There has been scarcely any emigration of late years; therefore, add to the above increase by births the immigration during the six years, and the population of the Colony ought at present to be upwards of 35,000. It would be satisfactory to have this estimate verified by another census in this year.

I have, &c.

(No. 502.)

MY LORD DUKE, Windward Islands, Barbados, June 27, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to transmit the Blue Book of Grenada for 1867.

As I only returned to the government at the latter end of last year, I have requested the Colonial Secretary to make me a full report on the state of the Colony, which report I now forward.

I have, &c.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,

(No. 44.)

SIR, Colonial Secretary's Office, June 3, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to submit to your Excellency the Blue Book of this Colony for the year 1867.

Revenue.

2. The total revenue collected during the year amounted to 19,983*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, made up as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
From customs	8,570	17	7
„ tonnage	764	7	8
„ excise	3,340	8	2
„ licences	1,893	5	9

Post office	141	2	10
Assessed taxes, including medical rates	3,011	15	2
Miscellaneous	201	17	6

3. The arrears of revenue for the previous year amounting to 4,886*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, with a loan of 1,000*l.* contracted for the repairs of the roads and bridges in the parish of St. Patrick which were damaged by the inundations in December of the year 1866, made the total available sum for the service of the year 1867 25,869*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*

4. As compared with the previous year there is a decrease in the revenue of 1,156*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, arising principally in the customs duties and in the assessed taxes. The decrease in the customs is chiefly in the following articles, viz. :—

On flour, 781 barrels; rice, 41 tons; sperm and tallow candles, 7 tons; oats, 901 bushels; corn meal, 524 barrels; coffee, 1 ton; and black-pepper, $1\frac{3}{4}$ tons; and in the value on silks, linens, cottons, woollens, and plantation stores, &c., 7,494*l.*

Expenditure.

5. The expenditure was as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
Civil establishment	3,695	15	0
Judicial	4,230	11	7
Ecclesiastical	2,633	10	6

	25,686	19	1

leaving only a small surplus of 182*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.* to meet outstanding claims for that year.

6. There appears a considerable increase of expenditure in 1867 over that of 1866 of 4,483*l.*, arising chiefly in the increase of the police establishment, in the amount for repairs of buildings, roads, and bridges, and from the salaries of the several establishments having been paid on the 31st December of that year, namely, for thirteen months, instead of as formerly at the beginning of the year, in order thereby to facilitate the obtaining a more accurate yearly financial statement of the revenue and expenditure of the Colony.

Bounties in lieu of return passages to India under the authority of the Act No. 380 were paid to 131 Coolies, amounting to the sum of 1,247*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* The sum of 24*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* was paid as compensation to 28 Coolies whilst awaiting for return passages. The balance, viz., 2,000*l.*, of the local loan of 5,000*l.* incurred in 1862, was paid off during the year.

Public Debt.

10. Of the loan of 7,000*l.* incurred in July 1858 for immigration purposes, and guaranteed by Act of the Imperial Parliament 11 & 12 Vict. c. 130, the sum of 3,812*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* has up to 31st December 1867 been invested as a sinking fund for the payment of this debt.

11. The balance of the local loan also incurred for the purposes of immigration was paid off in June 1867.

12. By the Act 377 passed, on the 4th June 1867, a loan was contracted from the immigration fund, "to pay for extraordinary repairs to the roads and bridges of the parish of St. Patrick." This measure was rendered necessary from the considerable damage which was occasioned to the public roads and bridges of that parish by the heavy rains of the 1st December 1866. This loan is made chargeable on the general revenues of the Colony, and the Act by which it is created provides that it shall be repaid in twelve months.

Roads and Public Buildings.

13. No new works were undertaken during the year. Some repairs were done to the Poor House and Lunatic Asylum, to Government House, and to the Parsonage at St. John's, all which were effected under the superintendence of the Committee of Public Buildings.

14. A sum of 300*l.*, which had been inserted in the Money Bill for 1866, for building a causeway over the river Antoine, was re-voted in the Money Bill for 1867, but the work not having been commenced in either of these years no further provision was made in the Supply Act of 1868.

15. The sum for building a Parsonage at St. Andrew's, which had been re-voted in the Money Bill for the year 1867, was also inserted in the Bill for the current year. I have every reason to believe that this work will be carried out by the end of the year.

16. A sum of 300*l.* for building a bridge over the river at Charlotte Town, St. John's, was granted and provided for in the Money Bill for 1867, but no further progress than the calling for and accepting of a tender having been made the sum was re-voted in the Money Bill for the current year.

17. It is greatly to be deplored that the Colony has not the benefit of a skilled surveyor of roads and works; the sums annually voted and expended for the repairs of roads and works would certainly then be more judiciously and satisfactorily applied. No less a sum than 3,833*l.* was expended on roads during the year; and it cannot be said that favourable results have been derived by the application of this large amount of money on 126 miles, which is the whole extent of public roads in the Colony.

18. The addition of a wing of two stories to the Common Gaol, which had been commenced during the year 1866, was completed, and handed over to the Provost Marshal, during the year under review. The upper story consists of four rooms appropriated to debtors, and the lower of four cells for the occupation of convicted prisoners. These apartments are roomy, and are over 1,100 cubic feet of space.

Legislation.

19. Under this head not much progress was made during the year. The Legislature was in session for eleven days. Of the ten Acts passed during the year, beyond the Annual Supply Act there was no other of much importance.

A Probate Bill, recommended by the Executive, having for its object the amendment of the existing practice of the Court of Ordinary, passed by the Council, and which is generally considered to be a necessary and useful measure, was rejected by the Assembly.

20. The Bill for relief of insolvent debtors, and that for the improvement of the sanitary condition of the several towns, and for affording relief in cases of destitution, should any epidemic disease unhappily occur, are important measures still under the consideration of the Assembly.

Civil Establishment.

21. The only change of importance under this head occurred in the office of Attorney General, by the death of Mr. Shervington, in October last. The office has since been conferred upon Mr. A. P. Burt, but who has not yet arrived in the Colony.

22. By the retirement of Dr. Aquart, upon a superannuation allowance of 250*l.*, several important changes were made in the holders of medical appointments; Dr. Orgias was transferred from St. Andrew to St. George, and has also charge of the Colony Hospital, and is surgeon of the Gaol, vice Dr. Aquart. Dr. Lang, health officer of Carriacou, was appointed to the office vacated by Dr. Orgias at St. Andrew, and the appointment of health officer of Carriacou was bestowed upon Dr. R. F. Leith.

23. By the death of Dr. Todd the medical officership of the parishes of St. John and St. Mark became vacant, to which Dr. O. B. Yearwood was appointed.

Pensions.

24. The only addition to this return is the name of Dr. Modeste Aquart. By Act 382, dated 6th August 1867, a pension of 250*l.* is secured to him after a term of 17 years medical service to the Colony, and from his advanced age and infirmity.

Population.

25. In my Registration Returns to 31st December 1866 I estimated the population of the Colony at 35,672, and in my abstracts to 31st December 1867 there appears a natural increase to the population by an excess of registered births over deaths of 485, or 1·35 per cent. This increase is however reduced by emigration, and the population of the Colony on the 31st December 1867 stands at 35,993. The number of births registered was 1,445, and of deaths 960. The birth-rate, including the still-born, was 4·05 per cent., and the death-rate, 2·69 per cent. The marriages were 182, and they were slightly higher than those of 1866. The number of baptisms returned show a slight excess over the number of the births registered; but there were many adult baptisms, the numbers, therefore, of births and baptisms remain almost equal. The burials still continue to be greatly below the number of deaths; but I must remind your Excellency that account is only taken of burials solemnized by ministers of religion, so that those performed by laymen, which are numerous, are not included in my returns. This is one of the defects in the Act which should be remedied.

26. I append my report and returns, from which full information may be obtained.

Immigration.

27. There were no immigrants introduced into the Colony during the year.

28. The total number of Indian immigrants in the Colony on 31st December 1867 was 1725, namely:

	Males	Females.	Total.
Under indenture -	666	206	872
Un-indentured -	481	372	853
Totals - -	1,147	578	1,725

29. The sanitary condition of the Coolie population during the year was far more satisfactory than that of the previous year. There was, however, a decrease among them, by an excess of 13 deaths. The births were 57 and the deaths 70.

Education.

30. There was a small increase of boys in the Grammar School during the year. With reference to the Normal School, the head master remarks, "the average attendance has undergone a trifling diminution." The number of boys was 59.

31. Since the reduction in the scale of charges for tuition in the Grammar School there has been an increase in the number of the pupils. I regret, however, to add, that the number of boys during the year was only 26.

32. The total number of children attending the schools receiving aid from the Colony was 1,618, viz., 1,077 boys and 541 girls; this is by no means a fair proportion of the population.

33. There appears an increase of 200 children attending public schools in the Colony as compared with the number of the previous year.

34. The following return exhibits the increase or decrease for the years 1866 and 1867 respectively of children attending the Grammar and Normal Schools, and also of other schools in connection with each religious denomination.

Years.	Grammar School.	Normal School.	Church of England.	Wesleyan.	Roman Catholics.	Total.	Increase.

1867 -	26	59	738	419	376	1,618	200

Imports and Exports.

35. A decrease of 10,338*l.* appears in the value of the imports as compared with that for 1866. The total value of the imports for 1867 is returned at 111,917*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.* This falling off in the principal sources of revenue may be attributed to a diminution in the agricultural operations of the Colony, and the consequent restriction of supplies, thus materially affecting the action of trade.

36. There was an increase in the value of the exports of 2,962*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* over that of 1866. The total value of the exports is given at 116,199*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.*

37. The subjoined tables exhibit the direction of trade and the value of imports and exports for the last five years.

Shipping.

38. The tonnage of vessels entered and cleared in ports of the Colony during the year was greatly in excess of the previous year. This increase may be attributed to the additional supply of coals imported for the use of the vessels of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company. The colliers contribute nothing to the general funds of the Colony; the only tax imposed is that towards the "Water Fund" of 3*d.* per ton.

39. The following return shows the number of vessels entered and cleared in each of the years 1866 and 1867:—

GRENADA.

Agriculture.

40. The sugar crop of the year 1867 was not as large as that of the previous year, but was in excess of the crop of 1865.

41. The Colony, I regret to observe, shows no improvement as a sugar-producing country. The cause is not only from the effects of low prices in the home markets. When we hear of land yielding in some cases barely a hogshead an acre, and on some few estates the yield sometimes reaching two hogsheads, it must at once be admitted that grave defects exist in the system of culture carried out on the estates.

42. The quantity of sugar shipped during the last five years is as follows:—

	Tons.	Cwts.	Qrs.	Lbs.
1863 -	5,116	16	0	12
1864 -	4,492	15	0	15
1865 -	3,928	0	2	24
1866 -	5,360	14	1	14
1867 -	4,005	12	1	24

43. A very satisfactory increase in the produce of cotton appears. Carriacou may be said to have produced almost the whole of this article.

44. The shipments in 1866 were 87 tons 17 cwt. 0 qrs. 15 lbs. and in 1867 - - 133 „ 15 „ 0 „ 20 „

45. Cocoa is gradually becoming the principal product of the Colony; and it may be consolatory to reflect, that when we perceive Grenada so fast passing out of the category of a sugar-producing country, that we can look upon the cocoa cultivation as a valuable plant in succession to the cane.

46. The quantity of cocoa shipped from 1863 to 1867 is as follows:—

	Tons.	Cwts.	Qrs.	Lbs.
1863 -	522	7	3	0
1864 -	477	2	2	4
1865 -	577	11	1	13
1866 -	631	3	2	21
1867 -	761	4	1	4

Whale Fishery.

47. 12,624 gallons of oil were exported, the produce of whales captured within this Government. The value is fixed at 1,374*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and on the whole the fishery during the year must have been highly successful and profitable.

Gaol and Prisoners.

48. The construction of an additional wing to the gaol has been attended with great advantages; a better classification of the debtors has been effected, and also of convicted prisoners.

49. Further improvements are very much needed, and when the suggestions of the Commission of 1865 shall have been carried out, in accordance with the subsequent pledge given for that purpose by the House of Assembly, the gaol will then be placed in a satisfactory condition for the confinement of prisoners, and for the carrying out of those sound principles so generally acknowledged as necessary for the proper conduct of prison discipline. I regret, however, to add, that I see no reasonable prospects for a speedy carrying out of the suggestions of the Commissioners.

50. No improvement has been made in the laws in regard to insolvency and imprisonment for debt. A Bill for the amendment of those laws was introduced into the House of Assembly by the late Attorney General, and the Bill was read a first time. No further progress appears to have been made with the measure, and the old enactments still therefore remain a blot upon our Statute Book.

51. The number of persons imprisoned for debt during the year was 27. In 1866 there were 19. Of those imprisoned in 1867, 20 were for sums under 80*s.*, and they were consequently maintained at the cost of the Colony.

52. The following return of commitments from 1863 to 1867 shows a decrease during the latter year as compared with those of 1866.

53. Of convictions in the Supreme Court, the numbers were equal in both of the years 1866 and 1867, and of those by magistrates, a decrease of 22 appears.

Commitments.

1867 -	16	1	153	39	209

54. An Indian immigrant was convicted for the murder of his wife, and the extreme sentence of the law was carried out in the month of August.

55. The gaol still maintains its character for healthiness. Two deaths occurred during the year, but the causes were contracted previous to the conviction of the prisoners.

Charitable Institutions.

56. Colony Hospital.—The total number of patients treated during the year was 528.

57. The following is an account of the revenue and expenditure of the charity during the year.

58. In the Poor House there were on 31st December 1867 24 inmates. The number of persons receiving out-door relief from the Poor Law Board was 69. The legislative grant in support of this charity was 500*l.*

In the Lunatic Asylum there were 20 patients in confinement at the end of the year. The number of persons treated during the year was 27. Two were discharged as cured, and five deaths occurred. The legislative grant in support of this institution was 300*l.*

60. In the Victoria Almshouse there were eight inmates at the end of the year. The charity is entirely supported by voluntary contributions.

GRENADA.

Conclusion.

61. Neither the trade nor the agriculture (the latter as regards sugar cultivation) can, I regret to say, be considered to have been satisfactory during the year.

62. The holders of small patches of land, and the proprietors of small sugar mills, appear to be prosperous; indeed they must be so from their increasing number.

63. The Island was happily free from epidemic disease, and was not visited by either pestilence or hurricane.

64. In the month of October a remarkable and curious phenomenon occurred in the harbour of St. George and in some of the out-bays by an extraordinary flow and ebb of the sea. The rise of the sea in St. George's was as high as four feet above the wharf, and the water extended to above 50 feet along one of the streets. On the recede of the sea, in some places, about 30 feet of the Carenage was left bare of water. This phenomenon was marked by an explosion which occurred, and which entirely destroyed the waterworks used by the shipping for watering. Considerable injury was done to some of the houses, but fortunately no lives were lost.

65. On the whole, we have much cause to be thankful to a merciful Providence for being spared those disturbances of nature which unfortunately may be said to have characterized the year 1867, and which principally occurred among the islands of the Leeward group, resulting in such disastrous consequences.

66 The people generally appear contented and happy, and I am pleased to add that, as loyal citizens, they have as usual evinced cheerful obedience to the laws of the Colony.

I have, &c.

(Signed) SAM. MITCHELL,
Col. Secretary.

His Excellency Lieut.-Governor Mundy,
&c. &c. &c.

SIR, Colonial Secretary's Office, Grenada, May 11, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to submit to your Excellency my annual report, and the accompanying abstracts of births, deaths, baptisms, marriages, and burials for the year 1867, which show the results of a second year's registration under the Act 357 of 1865.

2. There were during the year added to the several register books a total of 1,445 births and 960 deaths, and the number of marriages solemnized by the several ministers of religion was returned at 182.

3. These figures, on a comparison, show that the births were 19 less than those registered in 1866; that the deaths, on the other hand, were in 1867 14 less than in 1866; and that the marriages were 21 above the number of the previous year.

4. The natural increase to the population by the excess of births over deaths was 485, whilst, in 1866, the increase was 490. This addition, however, to the population, to 31st December 1867, is slightly diminished by the actual emigration of 164 Coolies, some of whom were transferred to British Guiana, the Government not having been able to obtain employment from the planting body, others, from a term of industrial residence, having acquired certificates, left the Colony for British Guiana and Trinidad.

5. There was no addition during the year to the population by immigration.

BIRTHS.

6. The birth-rate for the year, including still births, was 4·05 per cent. for the population. On a comparison with the previous year, there appears to have been an increase of births in 1867 in the following districts, viz. St. George, St. John, St. Mark, St. Andrew, and St. David. The district of St. Andrew gives the largest figures, whilst in St. Patrick's there was a remarkable decrease of 67 births as compared with the number registered in 1866. There was also a decrease in Carriacou, though an inconsiderable one.

7. A full comparison is given of children born in and out of wedlock during the year in my notes appended to the abstract returns, and I am happy to add that my analysis shows a more favourable state of affairs than the returns of the previous year present.

8. It may be interesting to observe the difference in the fecundity of the under-mentioned places for the periods for which from the returns at hand I am enabled to take comparisons:

Great Britain, 1864	-	3·56 per cent.
St. Vincent, 1864–65	-	4·29 „ „
Grenada, 1866	-	4·07 „ „
Do., 1867	-	3·92 „ „
Antigua 1864	-	3·47 „ „

The above figures are exclusive of the still births. It will thus be seen that the birth-rate in Grenada for the two years has been most satisfactory. In Great Britain the births registered in 1864 were more numerous than in any previous year, and that, notwithstanding this, the births registered in Grenada were, in proportion to its population, one half per cent. above the ratio of Great Britain for 1864.

9. The still births in 1867 were 45, and in 1866 31, or at the rate of one in every 31·11 and 46·22 of the living births for the two years respectively.

10. At Antigua the still births in 1864 were no less than 183, or one in every 6·68 of the living births. At St. Vincent the number was not as large during the year ended 30th June 1865 as at Antigua. The still births were, however, as high as 93, or one in every 13·58 of the living births. It is difficult to assign a correct cause for the apparent great difference in the number of still births registered in Grenada in comparison with those at Antigua and St. Vincent.

11. The results of the two years working of the Registration Act in Grenada show clearly that the returns can be relied upon, and if, as there doubtless may be, a small deficiency in the numbers of births and deaths registered, but few in my opinion escape registration. The Registration Act allows seven days for giving information of a birth or death, and in case of neglect a penalty not exceeding 10*l.* is prescribed. As a proof of a reliable registration I may mention that persons are found generally prompt in giving information, and but seldom is the time allowed to elapse before information is given to the officer of the district.

12. The Grenada returns exhibit the highest proportion of children born out of wedlock as compared with other places. In 1866 the proportion to every 100 births was 63·59; in 1867 63.

In 1864 the rate in St. Vincent was 61·26; Antigua 58·77.

And in England the very low rate of 6·4 per cent. appears.

13. The proportion of the legitimate children born is as follows:

Grenada,	1866,	36·40	per cent.	of the	births.
Do.,	1867,	36·95	„	„	„
Great Britain	1864,	93·59	„	„	„
St. Vincent	„	38·73	„	„	„
Antigua	„	41·22	„	„	„

DEATHS.

14. There were 960 deaths registered, and they were slightly lower than in the previous year.

15. The rate of mortality to every 100 persons living was 2·69. Considering the effects of a West India climate, the death-rate contrasts very favourably with that for 1864 in England, which was 2·38 per cent.; but this rate, however, was considered excessive. In proof of the healthiness of Grenada, I find that the death-rates at Antigua (4·8) and St. Vincent (4 per cent.) were considerably higher than the rate of mortality in Grenada.

16. The maximum number of deaths occurred among adults, that is, persons above the age of 15. Their deaths were almost one half of the total number recorded. The minimum number of deaths occurred among the infants under one year. The rate among them was 25·72 per cent. of the total deaths. At St. Vincent the rate in 1864 was 26·31, and at Antigua 30·11. The infant deaths in Grenada are therefore less than in the two mentioned islands, and from this circumstance a favourable aspect may be taken of some better care being bestowed by the lower orders of the people over their infant children.

17. The classified return of "causes of death" shows that no less than 109 persons died of zymotic (epidemic, endemic, or contagious) or eruptive fevers, and 227 of diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion. Of causes "not specified" there appears 129 such, but from this it must not be assumed that the remaining deaths were accurately determined.

18. I regret to say that this is by no means a reliable return.

19. The Registration Act provides for a column of "causes of death," and establishes a penalty for giving false information; but the Act is quite silent as to certificates, medical or otherwise, of the causes of death necessary to be furnished the Registrar in order to an accurate record of the event. This, it must be admitted, is a very grave defect in the law.

20. The Act requires that the father, or mother, or the occupier, and (in case of a death if the occupier be the person dead) some inmate of the house or tenement in which the birth or death shall happen, shall be the person to inform. It happens that in towns, and principally in the rural districts, persons totally incapable, but by the Act qualified, present themselves before the Registrars as informers, and although in other respects their information may be reliable, yet, as to the cause of death, it is almost impossible in many cases to arrive at a correct conclusion.

21. An Act of the Colony makes provision for a medical man in each district to attend the poor. Notwithstanding this provision, it has happened, and doubtless it is so in the majority of cases, that deaths occur without the knowledge of the doctor. The profession are not totally to blame; but some neglect attaches to them in not answering promptly to a call. In some cases it occurred to my knowledge that the doctor was called for, and did not visit until two days after. The poor are themselves much to blame; generally they wait till the last extremity of a case, and then seek the doctor when too late. In other cases people have been allowed to die under the treatment of quacks and such like practitioners, without the least idea being had of calling the duly qualified practitioner.

22. In the large and populous districts it is quite impossible for a single medical practitioner to visit a scattered people, when the difficulties of travelling and of getting to the residences of the poor are had in view. It becomes dangerous, on account of the state of the roads leading to their dwellings, for a rider safely to get to the assistance of the sick. I think, therefore, that, for districts like St. Andrew and St. Patrick, an assistant medical officer might with great advantage be appointed for those parishes jointly. Some provision might also be made whereby the causes of death might be certified by the medical officer, and the advantages that would therefore be derived by an amendment in the Act, especially in regard to medical certificates of causes of death, cannot be over estimated.

23. Under the head zymotic diseases, the mortality must be taken as embracing every type of fever. The cases of fever, I may add, were principally brain, intermittent, and remittent.

24. Of the sporadic diseases, dropsy was more fatal than any other of the diseases embraced in the first head.

GRENADA.

25. Of diseases of the lungs and other organs of respiration, consumption was prominent during the year.

26. The large number of 227 deaths is assigned to diseases of the stomach, &c. And infants, it will be seen, bear a large proportion of the deaths. Diarrhœa and thrush may be accurately assigned as the chief causes of the high rate.

27. Of the cutaneous diseases, 28 deaths were registered. In St. Patrick's two fatal cases of leprosy occurred. The loathsome disease yaws, which had been prevalent during 1866, considerably abated during the year. From the prompt and rigid treatment and isolation enforced, the cases were not as numerous among the Indian immigrants.

28. The deaths from old age next require notice; and I may remark that the ages varied from 80 to as high as 105 years; two or three persons reached the latter age, and I notice that longevity appears to rest with the women, since their deaths were more than double the number of the males.

29. One hundred and twenty-nine are returned as causes "not specified." I am glad to remark an improvement under this head as compared with the return for 1866, and that, notwithstanding the difficulties of obtaining correct causes, the number "not specified" in 1867 is less than the like return for the previous year.

MARRIAGES.

30. Marriage is regulated by the Acts Nos. 37, 62, 71, 77, 100, and 106 of the Island. The solemnization of matrimony can only be performed by ministers of the Christian religion of every persuasion, after due publication of banns, or upon production of a licence grrnted by the Governor.

31. The number of marriages returned as of 1867 is 182; this is an excess of 21 over those of the previous year. Only 13 couples were married under the authority of the Governor's licence, whilst the remaining number preferred the proclamation of banns. The fees for obtaining a licence of the ordinary are 1*l.* 16*s.*, and the clergyman's fees for marrying and registering 7*s.* It may not be surprising, therefore, notwithstanding the very low scale of fees, that more marriages are solemnized after publication of banns than by licence.

33. The marriage rate for 1867 was in the proportion of 5·10 to every 1,000 of the population, or, in other words, there were 196 persons living to every marriage. In England there were in 1864 116 persons living to every marriage.

PUBLIC HEALTH.

34. The general health of the Colony during the year was, like the previous year, unexceptionable.

35. The June quarter shows the lowest rate of mortality, whilst, as usual, the deaths in the September quarter were of a higher rate. The usual ordinary sickness peculiar to that period of the year, viz., colds and fever, remittent and intermittent, were pretty general; but the fatal cases were not, I am happy to say, as numerous as those of the corresponding period of 1866.

36. The December bears the highest rate of mortality among the other quarters of the year.

37. The Island was free from epidemic disease.

38. Vaccination was performed during the year by the medical officers of each district free of charge to the poor.

I HAVE the honour to transmit the Blue Book of Tobago for 1867, with Lieut.-Governor Kortright's report thereon.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,

(No. 42.) Enclosure in No. 10.

SIR, Government House, Tobago, June 2, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith the Blue Book for the year 1867, in duplicate.

Revenue and Expenditure.

The revenue for the year was 9,840*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*; the expenditure 9,808*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* On the 1st January there was a balance in the hands of the Treasurer of 287*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.*, which, together with the difference between the revenue and expenditure, shows a net balance to the credit of the Colony on the 31st December of 320*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

The import duties under the tariff amounted to 4,214*l.* 4*s.*, which, with 40 per cent. additional, amounting to 1,685*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*, shows the receipts under this head to have been 5,809*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* Compared with 1866, the decrease in the revenue from this source was very trifling.

Public Debt.

The amount due to Her Majesty's Government on account of the hurricane loan was reduced to 944*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.* during the year. Provision has been made by which it is expected that this balance will be liquidated in the present year.

Public Works.

The sum of 200*l.* was appropriated towards the repairs of public buildings during the year. The grant for the repair of roads was 696*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.*; the expenditure 845*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* The sum of 149*l.* 6*s.* was received as commutation money under the Road Act, and became part of the general revenue.

Legislation.

Eleven Acts were passed during the year; they are exclusively of a local character.

Population.

No satisfactory statistics of the population have been kept up since the taking of the census in 1861. The total population ascertained at that period was 15,410; and, according to the present return, the natural increase has been assumed for the six years ended 31st December last at 614 souls, being about 1 per cent. per annum, which, with 225 African immigrants introduced in 1862, would give the total estimated population at 16,249. The number of baptisms registered by the ministers of the respective denominations was 499, and of deaths 341. The number of marriages was 70. An Act for the registration of births, deaths, and marriages having recently become law, it is to be hoped that more accurate details will in future be obtained under this head.

Ecclesiastical.

There are three clergymen in connection with the Church of England, and five churches, and two chapels, which afford accommodation for about 2,750 persons, the average attendance being 1,610 persons. The Moravians and Wesleyans have 15 places of worship, the average attendance at which is stated to be 4,000 persons.

Education.

The number of children attending the day schools of the several denominations was as follows, viz :—

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Church of England -	477	355	832
Wesleyan - - -	295	216	511
Moravian - -	463	359	822
Total - -	1,235	930	2,165

The number of adults and children attending the Sunday schools was of males 472, and of females 556; total 1,128.

Imports and Exports.

The total value of the imports for the year was 54,826*l.*, and of the exports 55,951*l.*

Of the principal articles of produce there were exported 424 puncheons of molasses; 959 puncheons and 50 hhds. of rum; 4,427 hhds. of sugar, the weight of which was about 71,293 cwts. The quantity of cotton shipped was 17,068 lbs. The number of cocoanuts returned as exported was 433,840, of an estimated value of 2,154*l.*

In all respects the year under review contrasts favourably with the preceding one; and with fair seasons and steady markets, we may confidently look forward to a gradual improvement in the prospects of the Colony.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Walker, C.B., to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

(No. 447.)

My Lord Duke, Windward Islands, Barbados, May 8, 1868.

I have the honour to transmit to your Grace the Blue Book of St. Lucia for the year 1867, with the usual report thereon from the Administrator.

2. I cannot, in reference to the revenue and expenditure of the Island, avoid reverting to the circumstances under which I assumed its government in January 1862.

3. It was then the opinion of the West India Committee, and of other independent gentlemen connected with the Colony, that the civil establishment and general expenditure were excessive, and capable of considerable reduction. To some extent I shared in that opinion, and I entered upon my duty with a determination to meet what I considered the just expectations expressed by the Committee on the subject.

4. The correspondence in your Grace's Department affords plenty of evidence to show that no opportunity has been lost of reducing or consolidating the public offices. The aggregate saving has nevertheless been small.

5. On the other hand, several large items of additional expenditure have been entailed on us by the policy of the Home Government. For example, the withdrawal of the Imperial troops compelled us, from having been content with half a dozen policemen, to organize an armed constabulary force of 50 men. The transfer of the payment of the salaries of the stipendiary magistrates from the British to the Colonial treasury at once added 1,000*l.* to the expenditure of the Island.

6. There have been besides to be provided for many important services, which, in these days of competition and progress, could not be avoided in St. Lucia if it were intended to keep its head above water. Of these, I should note the maintenance of the dredge in Castries Harbour, and the subsidy to the small steamer plying between Castries and the outports of the Island.

15,802*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.*

7. I hope that all these things will be borne in mind when the expenditure of the Colony for 1867 as shown by the Blue Book, is contrasted with the amount incurred in 1861 and 1862; and when I add that the little civil establisnment of the Island is in a most efficient and creditable condition, I think that your Grace will admit that we have not done badly. But the lion's share of the merit, whatever it may be, is undoubtedly due to the Administrator, Mr. Grant, who for six years has toiled at his duty with remarkable fidelity and energy.

I have, &c.,
(Signed) JAS. WALKER.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,

(No. 71.) Enclosure in No. 11.

Sir, Government Office, St. Lucia, May 2, 1868.

I have the honour to transmit herewith the Blue Book of this Colony for 1867, with the usual comparative returns annexed.

2. My remarks upon its contents need be but of the briefest description, for the circumstances of the Colony vary so little, year by year, that anything like a lengthy report would be tedious, and almost a recapitulation of former matter. What little I have to record is scarcely favourable, for, whilst last year I was able to show that the revenue of 1866 had exceeded that of the previous year, and could point to the larger crop and other circumstances as the cause of this improvement, I am obliged on this occasion to state that the results of 1867 have, in almost every respect, been inferior to those of 1866. With this general observation, I shall proceed in the usual order and with the utmost possible brevity to institute a closer comparison between the two years.

Revenue.

3. The general revenue of 1867, although collected (with one exception) from the same sources, fell off considerably from that of 1866, and did not come up to the estimate made in July 1866.

	£	s.	d.
Estimated revenue for 1867	14,156	0	0
Actual revenue of do.	13,442	7	1
Deficiency	£713	12	11
General revenue for 1866	15,293	12	4
Ditto 1867	13,442	7	1
Decrease	£1,851	5	3

This decrease is attributable principally to the falling off of the import duties (which was caused in part by vessels which were expected at the close of the year not arriving until the beginning of the current year), to a less amount being collected from the duty upon rum consumed in the Colony, and to the transfer of the rents and sales of lands, which had reverted to the possession of the Crown, from general revenue to a special fund (the Casual Revenue Account).

	1866.	1867.	Decrease.
Import duties	6,527	5,231	1,296
Tonnage duties	735	646	89
Rum duties	5,003	4,664	339
Fees, fines, and forfeitures	797	706	91
Miscellaneous	715	573	142

4. The Customs returns show a decrease in the importation of almost every article, in some cases to a considerable extent. For instance, the quantity of flour was less by 2,664 barrels, and of meats, "salted and cured," by 28,137 lbs. The supply of "salt-fish" was nearly the same as the year before. The fact that ground provisions were plentiful will account to some extent for the great falling off of the trade in flour.

5. The annexed table shows the total revenue of the Colony for the past year :—

	£	s.	d.
General revenue	13,442	7	1
Education	525	2	11
Roads and bridges	1,232	10	4
Immigration	1,439	18	9
Military property fund	239	5	9
Castries Harbour dredge fund	120	2	3
Loan fund	353	9	1
Casual revenue fund	304	2	5
Total	£17,656	18	7

The last heading of this statement is a new one. An Ordinance was passed in April 1867, which came into operation in July last, under which all casual revenue of the Crown (other than droits of the Crown and droits of the Admiralty) has been paid in to a special account, instead of, as heretofore, being carried to the credit of the general revenue.

ST. LUCIA.

Export Duties.

6. The tariff remains the same, but the crop, the mainstay of the Colony, being short of the quantity produced last year, less was realized from this item of revenue.

	£	s.	d.
The amount collected, and carried to the education fund, was	157	11	1
„ „ to the road and bridges fund -	690	14	3
„ „ to the immigration fund - -	1,234	16	8
£	2,083	2	0

The amount raised in 1866 was 2,293*l.* 2*s* 4*d.*; the decrease therefore is 210*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.*

7. The usual amount was taken from these duties to pay the interest on and instalments of the Guaranteed Loans to St. Lucia (18,000*l.*), and the remainder went to benefit the different funds; namely :—

	£	s.	d.
Education fund - - - - - -	157	11	1
Road and bridges do. - - - -	495	2	3
Immigration do. - - - - -	21	16	8
£	674	10	0

Imports and Exports.

		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
8.	1863 - - -	69,583	0	0	83,711	17	5
	1864 - - -	90,363	1	3	111,383	15	11
	1865 - - -	70,757	10	8	107,321	8	4
	1866 - - -	91,504	13	8	109,402	18	8
	1867 - - -	71,138	2	8	93,831	10	4

The declared value of the exports is less than in the three preceding years. The difference in the value of the principal article of export, sugar, was 11,804*l.*

Expenditure.

9. The general expenditure exceeded the estimate slightly, and was also greater than the actual expenditure of the previous year.

	£.	s.	d.
Estimated expenditure of 1867 - -	14,248	4	0
Actual do. do. - - - -	14,295	11	7

Expenditure of 1866 - - - -	13,939	14	2
do 1867 - - - -	14,295	11	7
Excess £	355	17	5

The difference may be attributed to the greater amount expended upon "Works and Buildings," "Public Vaccination," "Hospitals," and to the introduction of a new item of expenditure, a subsidy to an Island steamer.

	Expended. in 1866.			Expended. in 1867.			Increase.
Works and buildings - -	45	4	8	328	6	0	337	1	4
Subsidy to Island steamer -	-	-	-	129	11	8	129	11	8
Vaccination - -	-	-	-	50	12	0	50	12	0
Hospitals - - -	495	11	2	581	5	8	85	14	6

10. The total expenditure of the Colony was as follows:—

General expenditure - - - - -	14,295	11	7
Education (less 500*l.* included in general expenditure) -	566	4	1
Immigration - - - - - -	1,761	10	0
Roads and bridges - - - - -	953	14	3
Military property - - - - -	233	7	5
Loan fund (principal and interest repaid) - -	353	9	1
Castries Harbour Dredge Fund do. - - -	223	3	6
Total £	18,386	19	11

It should be added that the revenue for general purposes was insufficient to meet the year's expenditure, and 670*l.* had to be temporarily applied from the floating balances of special funds to meet the deficiency, in order to avoid the inconvenience of letting part of the liabilities belonging to 1867 remain over until this year.

Local Revenue and Expenditure.

11. The revenue raised by the Corporation of Castries amounted to 904*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*, and their expenditure to 753*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* The latter was of the ordinary description, and included the first contribution to liquidate the amount borrowed to purchase a dredging machine to deepen the water near the wharves.

Public Debt.

12. The guaranted public loans to the Colony amount to 18,000*l.* The amount of stock in the three per cent. annuities in the hands of the managers of the loan for its redemption had increased at the close of the year to 7,050*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* The balance due at the same period to the roads and bridges fund on the 1,000*l.* loan was 254*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.*, and to the immigration fund on the loan of 660*l.*, borrowed to purchase the dredge, 594*l.*

Roads and Bridges.

13. The number of persons who performed "statute labour" on the roads at the first turn out in the year was 3,847, and at the second period 3,294. They gave altogether 21,423 days' labour, which at 1*s.* 3*d.* a day would represent 1,338*l.* 19*s.* 0*d.* But it need hardly be added that this kind of labour cannnot be measured by the same standard as hired labour. The people who turn out idle part of their time, and work as lightly as they can during the remainder of their hours of employment. A great part of the public road cannot be repaired by the labour thus obtained at all, and the repairs which are effected by it consist of little more than clearing the drains and scraping the surface of the road. 616*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.* was also expended upon the repairs of the roads and bridges; but in the more uninhabited district the roads are, and always I am afraid will be, mere tracks, in many places more like dry watercourses than what they profess to be. In dry weather they are just passable, but in the rainy season, and in 1867, it rained the whole year through, the passage over and through them is anything but agreeable.

Legislation.

14. Ten Ordinances were passed by the Legislative Council, all of which have been confirmed. No. 1. 15th February. This was the customary Ordinance which is passed to cover the supplementary estimates of the previous year for the sums spent in excess of the votes. The estimate amounted to 129*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.*

Nos. 2 and 3. 13th February. These Ordinances were for the purpose of granting to Mr. Knaggs and Mr. Gedge patent rights in certain improvements in the manufacture of sugar and rum and in the apparatus employed therein.

No. 4. 13th April. This Ordinance provides for the appropriation of the casual revenue of the Crown in the Colony (other than droits of the Crown and of the Admiralty,) including the revenue arising from the sale of the estates and effects of persons who have died intestate and without heirs and next of kin. It provides that all such revenue, which shall hereafter by order of the Crown be paid into the public treasury, shall be appropriated by the Legislature to such public purposes as they may think fit and proper. Heretofore the revenue from these sources has been carried to the credit of the general revenue, and applied to the ordinary expenditure of the Colony.

ST. LUCIA.

No. 5. 13th April. The object of this Ordinance is to abolish the practice of attaching the salaries of public officers or others employed by or under the Government in the hands of the Treasurer, and it was introduced because the system was considered prejudicial to the public service. It declares that no attachment of this nature shall be allowed in any of the courts of this Island from and after the first of this year. Existing attachments are of course protected.

No. 6. 13th April. The Ordinance gives greater facilities to the mail steamers to make this a coaling station. It relieves all vessels importing coal for their use from all dues except the Harbour Master's fees, and allows the coal to be landed and stored without payment of duty. These privileges were in part given by the Ordinance of 1840, which is repealed by the present enactment.

No. 7. 13th August. A steamer having been started by private enterprise to ply along the coast of this Island, it was deemed expedient to assist so desirable an object by giving a Government subsidy. Under this Ordinance an annual grant of 150*l.* is provided, subject to certain conditions.

No. 8. 13th August. This is the annual tax and appropriation Ordinance, and is similar to the one passed for the previous year. The estimated general revenue for 1868 is 14,355*l.*, and expenditure 14,333*l.* 4*s.*

No. 9. 13th August. This Ordinance covers a vote of 200*l.* for building additional wards to the Lunatic Asylum.

No. 10. 13th August. A great many Coolies having registered themselves for back passages, and it being anticipated that many more would follow their example, it was deemed advisable to authorize the Governor to issue bounty to those who might be desirous of commuting their claims to a free passage back to India for a sum of money. The amount fixed by the Ordinance is a sum not exceeding 10*l.* for adults, and not exceeding 5*l.* for children (infants excluded).

Works and Buildings.

15. The Government buildings have been repaired, the Poor Asylum greatly improved in a sanitary point of view, and in its internal arrangements for the purposes of an hospital, which it in reality is. The back cells in the Castries Gaol have been made more secure, additional wards commenced at the Lunatic Asylum (they are just completed). The piers of the suspension bridge in the Roseau Valley have been substantially repaired, and one of the bridges leading out of Castries entirely renewed, besides other works which need not be enumerated in detail.

Education.

16. The fund at the disposal of the Board of Education is unfortunately becoming less every year, owing, first, to the grant of 500*l.* from the general revenue not having been paid in 1864, because the Ordinance stipulated that it should be paid out of any surplus in the Treasury, and there was none in that year (since repealed and altered), and, next, to the diminished exportation of logwood, on which a duty of eight shillings per ton is imposed, and the proceeds carried to the education fund. No new school was opened during the year, but those in existence have been carried on with a slight increase in the number of scholars. There is no charge made in any of these schools.

Prisoners.—Crime.

17. The Gaol Calendar shows that a greater number of persons were committed in 1867 than during the previous year, 592 as against 541. 39 of them were tried at the sessions, of whom 4 were acquitted, and 35 convicted. In one case, for "arson," the jury were discharged, as they could not agree upon their verdict. The prisoner was remanded until the next session, when he was convicted, and sentenced to three years hard labour. The longest term of imprisonment was 12 years. It was a case of cutting and wounding, in which sentence of death was recorded, but commuted to the term of hard labour mentioned. The other commitments were from the magistrates' courts, and for the most part for offences of a slight character. Shot "drill" has been recently introduced into the Castries Gaol as a penal exercise.

Agriculture.

18. The crop of the Island fell short of that of the previous year, as will be seen from the following table, which shows the quantity exported in each of the last five years.

ST. LUCIA.

Most of the rum made is consumed in the Colony, but almost the whole of the other articles included in the table are exported.

Immigration.

19. At the close of the year there were 1,207 Coolie immigrants in the Colony. Those by the first vessels, the Palmyra and Francis Ridley, completed their eight years' industrial residence in May and June. This year two other lots (by the Victor Emanuel and Zemindar) have fulfilled their time, and only those by the Ulysses remain to serve out the time required to qualify them to claim a free passage back to India. The first-named Coolies having evinced a disposition to avail themselves of their privilege to a back passage in great numbers, it was deemed advisable to give the Governor power to allow bounty (up to 10*l.*) to those who might desire to commute their right for a sum of money; and the plan adopted in British Guiana, requiring the Coolies registering for back passage to make a deposit to cover the expense of outfit for the voyage, was acted upon. Up to the present time nearly 400 have applied for and received bounty, and about 230 have registered for a passage to India in the autumn. Those who have received bounty have not yet shown any disposition (with a few exceptions) to quit the Island for the larger Colonies of Trinidad and Demerara, and it is to be hoped that they will settle down here, and become permanent colonists. The total cost of this immigration to the Colony, including the amount which will still have to be paid for the redemption of the 15,000*l.* loan and the interest upon it, will, I estimate, not fall far short of 40,000*l.* This outlay represents the services obtained from 1,535 persons of all ages for eight years (five of them under indenture), or 5,000*l.* a year. And a considerable deduction would have to be made from this number, which is the total number of Coolies, men, women, and children brought to the Colony, to arrive at the number of those who could be classed as efficient labourers. I do not find that the crops of the Island have been so much increased since their introduction as might have been expected, and I am afraid that if many leave the Island their loss will be seriously felt, for some estates are almost wholly dependent upon them now for labour. What is to be feared is, that the native labour, which the Coolies must to some extent at least have replaced, will not find its way back to the estates, and that as the Colony has not the means of continuing immigration the position of proprietors of estates will, after the great outlay which has taken place, be worse than before. It may be that the crops of the Island would have been diminished had there been no immigration. One thing is worthy of remark. In 1858, the year before immigration commenced, the crop was about the same as in 1853, which was the year before the year when cholera ravaged the Colony. I subjoin a table showing the amount of sugar exported in each year from 1853 to 1867 (inclusive), as illustrative of the remarks which I have made as to the effects of immigration. The condition of both Coolie and African immigrants during the past year has been uniformly favourable. During that period 125 of the former were admitted as patients into the "Free" Hospital, of whom 104 were discharged cured, and four removed by death. This institution will be closed at the end of the current quarter.

Miscellaneous.

20. The sanitary condition of the Island has been very good, and it has altogether escaped the ravages of earthquakes and hurricanes which have been so severely experienced in St. Thomas and other colonies.

Great hopes are entertained that this may be selected as one of the stations for the Mail Packet service. The harbour of Castries is admirably adapted for such a purpose, and less expense would have to be incurred here than probably at any other place in the West Indies. Its position too, as regards the termini, Southampton and Colon, is favourable. At present the steamers on the southern routes trans-ship and occasionally coal here.

(No. 158.)

My Lord Duke, Leeward Islands, Antigua, September 12, 1868.

I have the honour to forward to your Grace the Blue Book of Antigua for the year 1867, together with my report thereon.

Revenue and Expenditure.

1. Tthe revenue is returned by the Treasurer at 52,215*l.* 1*s.* 7½*d.*, and the expenditure at 47,652*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.*, leaving an apparent surplus of 4,562*l.* 12*s.* 4½*d.*; this sum, however, includes balances in the treasury on account of special funds to the extent of 1,156*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*, thus reducing the balance on account of the general revenue to 3,406*l.* 0*s.* 6½*d.* But, as has been stated in previous reports, these returns exhibit receipts and payments at the Treasury, and do not represent the actual financial position of the Colony. When the outstanding assets and liabilities are taken into consideration, it will

3. The actual revenue derived from taxation for the year was therefore short of the expenditure by nearly 15,000*l.* This was in a great measure owing to the circumstance of no provision having been made in 1866 and 1867, during my absence from the Colony, for paying off the instalments and interest on the earthquake loan, amounting together to 10,650*l.*

4. The annual charges attending the cost of constructing the St. John's water-works, and the appointments made under the provisions of the Resident Magistrates' Act, have also tended to increase the expenditure of the past year.

5. There is no doubt that at the present moment, owing to adverse circumstances, and to the neglect to provide for the payment of the earthquake loan, that the expenditure of the Colony is considerably in excess of the Revenue. Means are now being adopted for reducing the expenditure, and for increasing the revenue.

Public Debt.

7. The public debt stands at 58,448*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* This includes the sum of 30,000*l.* borrowed for the construction of the St. John's waterworks.

Public Works.

8. Saint John's waterworks. This most important undertaking, for supplying the city of St. John with water, was commenced in September 1865, and finally completed in June 1867, at a cost of 30,000*l.* The reservoir is at an elevation of 145 feet above the level of the sea, and contains 500,000 gallons of water. There are 14 standpipes in the city, from which water is taken without any restriction both by day and night. At intervals of 50 yards hydrants are laid down to the number of 220, for protecting the city in case of fire. The supply of water is estimated at about 75,000 gallons daily. The Water Commissioners report that the demand for house service is daily increasing. A supply pipe for the shipping has been carried to the public wharf. The advantages of the undertaking are not confined to the city, but extended to the populous villages of Gray's Hill, Gray's Farm, Green Bay, a large portion of Five Islands district, Saint Mark's and Bishop's villages. Water has also been introduced at the Gaol, Police Office, Holberton Hospital, Poor House, and Lazaretto.

9. The fire brigade is by an act of the Island placed under the charge of the Water Commissioners, and they have recently imported two of Messieurs Shands and Mason's reel and ladder carriages, carrying 800 feet of hose, together with ladders, and all necessary tools and implements.

The Saint John's Public Cemetery.

10. The funds necessary for enclosing the Public Cemetery have been voted, and the work has now been completed. The cemetery will be opened in October, and the burial grounds within the city will be closed on that date.

Legislation.

11. Twenty nine Acts were passed during the year. Ten relate to the revenue. Six are for continuing certain Acts. Among the most important measures of the session of 1867 may be mentioned the Act for making better provision for the conduct of the Executive Government of the Island of Antigua. This Act relieves the Colonial Secretary from the duties heretofore devolving on him as Registrar and Secretary of the several Courts of Record in the Island, and creates the office of Auditor General at a salary of 400*l.* per annum.

The Act to re-organize the fire brigade.

The Act to define the jurisdiction of the Vice-Chancellor.

The Act for appointing district marriages.

The Cotton Act.

The Act to facilitate the auditing and inspecting of public accounts.

The Act for the more effectual protection of Her Majesty's naval and victualling stores.

Political Franchise.

12. The Act to amend and simplify the Legislature of Antigua reduces the number of electoral districts from 14 to 11, but the qualifications for members and voters, as fixed by the Franchise Act of 1842, are not in any way altered. Four hundred and twenty-six voters are registered for the whole Island.

13. The number of registered voters for the several divisions is as follows:

Division.	No. of Representatives.	Registered Voters.
1. City of St. John - -	2	235
2. Division of St. John - -	1	35
3. Dickenson's Bay and Five Islands	1	7

8. Nonsuch - - -	1	16
9. Belfast - - - -	1	10
10. Willoughby Bay - -	1	5
11. Falmouth and English Harbour -	1	14

14. The newly constituted Legislature consists of twenty-four members, namely, the Colonial Secretary, the Treasurer, the Attorney General and Solicitor General, who are ex-officio members, eight members nominated by the Crown, and twelve members chosen by the qualified electors of the several divisions.

Population.—Births, Marriages, and Deaths.

15. It is gratifying to remark that a very considerable improvement has within the two last years been observable in the health of the Colony. The returns of the Registrar General show that the death-rates for the years 1866 and 1867 have been considerably lower than in the four previous years.

Education.

18. A grant of 1,000*l.* per annum is made by the Legislature of the Colony for educational purposes. In 1867, 49 schools were in receipt of Government aid, of which 20 were Church of England, 21 Moravian, and 8 Wesleyan, having together 3,218 names on the books, and 1,797 children in attendance, showing a decrease, as compared with the previous year, of 287 on the books and 325 in average attendance.

Imports and Exports.

19. The comparative value of imports and exports for the years 1866 and 1867 is shown below:

20. The crop of 1867 was but 7,050 hogsheads, against 17,300 shipped in 1866. This circumstance, together with the reduced rate at which cotton has been valued, will explain the cause of the great falling off in the value of the exports. The cotton crop shows a small decrease as compared with 1866.

23. The Antigua Public Library is under the direction of 13 trustees, appointed by the Governor. There are 39 first-class subscribers, paying 20*s.* per annum, and 34 second-class subscribers, paying 10*s.* per annum. The salary of the clerk, 80*l.* per annum, is paid from the public treasury; and a yearly grant of 50*l.* is made by the Colonial Government for the purchase of books. The books belonging to the library exceed 5,500 volumes. The trustees report that the interest taken in this valuable institution was manifested in the year 1867 by the delivery of 7,948 volumes, of which 1,665 were books on history, biography, science, and art.

Charitable Institution.

24. Holberton Hospital.—This hospital is supported by an annual grant of 1,250*l.* from the public treasury. The number of patients during the year, and the results, have been as follows:

Enclosure in No. 13.

President Pyne to his Excellency Colonel Hill, C.B.

(No. 56.)

Government House, Plymouth,
Montserrat, July 19, 1868.

Sir,

I have the honour to transmit to your Excellency the Blue Book of Montserrat for the year 1867, with my report thereon.

Taxes, Duties, and Fees.

The most important alteration in these sources of revenue has been the abolition of the poor rates, which amounted to about 700*l.* per annum. This reduction was conceived solely as a means of relief to the taxpayers as the taxation of the country was found to be somewhat excessive.

By an amendment in the Tariff Act, passed towards the close of 1867, the following articles were exempted from duty, in addition to those previously admitted free, viz., "machinery for the manufacture of sugar, lime-juice, or cotton, ploughs, "hoe-harrows, chaff-cutters, cane-bills, manures, hoes, and oil-cake." At the same time the ad valorem duty on imports not specifically taxed was raised from 7½ to 10 per cent.

There has been no variation in the fees charged in the Colony from those of last year.

Revenue and Expenditure.

The principal sources of revenue are the import and export duties and the land tax, the latter being at the rate of 15*s.* per 100*l.* of the assessed value of all real property. At present these taxes are supplemented with an additional five per cent. as "wharf tax," which augmentation, however, will cease at the end of the current year.

The year 1867 commenced with a deficit of 282*l.* against 680*l.* of the previous year. The aggregate revenue received during the year amounted to 4,007*l.*, being 1,036*l.* less than in 1866. This falling off is attributable mainly to diminished receipts from imports and exports, cotemporaneously with the termination of special taxes raised to cover certain unusual disbursements of the preceding year. It is gratifying, however, to observe, that, accompanying this loss of revenue, was a considerable reduction in the expenditure, which stood at 3,710*l.*, against 4,126*l.* of the year 1866.

The following is a statement of the current public account for 1867, on the 31st of December last:—

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
To balance in chest, 31st Dec. 1867	15	2	4½	By arrears of expenditure of 1867 -	314	6	5½
Arrear of revenue of 1867 - -	63	14	6
	78	16	10½
Deficit of 1867 on current accounts -	235	9	7
£	314	6	5½	£	314	6	5½

It is difficult within the narrow space prescribed in these tables of revenue and expenditure to distinguish definitely the items which strictly belong to the finance of each particular year, as the transactions, obligations, and repayments of other years are often unavoidably welded together.

Thus it would appear from the figures before us that the balance at the wrong side at the end of 1867 was 235*l.*, against 282*l.* of the previous 12 months, and against 680*l.* of the year 1865.

These figures are technically correct, as representing mere records of each year's monetary transactions, but they are worthless as indicating any just comparison of the true deficits of each year, which must be sought rather in a statement of the Colony's assets and liabilities for each successive period.

The following memorandum represents the excess of the country's liabilities over assets for the last five years:—

Public Roads.

Bad roads are proverbially characteristic of mountainous countries. The highways of Montserrat are not, however, below the average of what would be found in localities of similar geographical formation. The mode of repairing the roads has hitherto been of a very primitive kind. Some of the most intelligent of the road surveyors have recently commenced to macadamize, and, as might be expected, the portions of the road so repaired have become substantial and useful for traffic.

All the public roads of the Island are annually repaired by statute labour, under a Road Act which renders every person between the ages of 16 and 60 liable to serve for fixed periods during the year, or else to provide a substitute.

This Act works very satisfactorily, and the inhabitants accept the necessity for some such provision, and give cheerfully that portion of their labour which is required of them.

It was, perhaps, through an oversight in passing this law, that no exemptions were made for professional men. At present even the clergymen of the Island are summoned out "to attend with a hoe, bill or cutlass, and a basket, and at the hour of seven o'clock "in the morning, then and there to labour repairing the highways, as directed, for the "full time of eight hours, under the penalty of 1*s.* sterling for each day, to be recovered "as the Act directs."

Legislation.

Nine Acts were passed by the Legislature in 1867, viz.:—

1. "An Act to grant to Her Majesty a tax or duty on certain articles exported from this Island."
2. "An Act to give jurisdiction to justices of the peace to punish summarily petty thefts and aiders and abettors therein."
3. "An Act to abolish the office of Loan Commissioners, and to transfer the duties to the Treasurer of the said Island."
4. "An Act to naturalize Antonio Cruz."
5. "An Act to naturalize Joseph Figara and John Defratés."
6. "An Act to provide for the registration of births, deaths, and marriages in Montserrat."
7. "An Act to provide for the execution of the duties of the office of coroner."
8. "An Act for the regulation of weights and measures."
9. "An Act to amend and consolidate the laws relating to the care of the poor and lunatic."

Proclamations.

The proclamations were entirely of a local nature, and needed no comment.

Civil Establishment.

The establishment in 1866 and previously was very large for this small Colony, and efforts have since been made to effect a reduction.

The cost of supporting so large a staff of officials is disproportionate to the necessity for its existence, and is more than the country can afford.

The following reductions have been made:—

Being a reduction of 368*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.*

The Police Magistrate is made ex officio the Coroner, without additional remuneration. The Provost Marshal is made by law Inspector of Weights, &c. also, without additional remuneration. The office of Inspector of Police is held gratuitously,

The appointments marked with an asterisk were altogether abolished. These retrenchments have not impaired the efficiency of the service in the slightest degree.

It will be borne in mind also that these reductions were made simultaneously with the remission of the poor rates, which caused a diminution of the revenue of 700*l.* per annum, already referred to under the head of Taxes, &c.

It was likewise found necessary to create the office of Auditor of Public Accounts, at a salary of 90*l.* a year, as much irregularity arose from the custom of having the accounts periodically audited by unpaid committees appointed by the House of Assembly. These committees never did their work with anything approaching to correctness or efficiency.

Towards the end of 1867 a regular system of book-keeping by double entry was introduced in the Treasury, and I am glad to be able to state that the management of the financial departments of the Government is creditable and satisfactory.

Population.

The population is estimated at 8,480, increasing at the rate of 1·82 per cent. per annum. No census has been taken since 1861, but I should say that this estimate is tolerably correct.

	Number.
Population by census of 1861	7,645
Registered births for 1862 to 1867	1,762
Registered deaths for same period	927

Average annual increase of 139$\frac{1}{6}$ or 1·82 per cent.

I subjoin a comparative statement of births, marriages, and deaths for the years 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867.

It is gratifying, however, to observe the continuance of the large excess of births over deaths for the year itself, the former being nearly double the latter.

Political Franchise.

The last general election in this Island was held in December 1865, the result of which was a return of representatives the majority of whom seem to have been specially charged by their constituents with the obligation of effecting a complete change in the form of government under which the country had lingered for so many years past. Accordingly, the first step of the new Legislature was the abrogation of the Legislative Assembly, and a repeal of all Acts creating or amending the same.

Provision was at the same time made for the formation of a Legislative Council, to be constituted entirely of Crown nominees, to be nominated from time to time by Her Majesty the Queen, under Her Royal Warrant or Her Sign Manual or Signet, or by Her instructions through one of Her Principal Secretaries of State.

Thus has passed away the last remnant of representative government in this Island, after un uninterrupted existence of 200 years.

In Montserrat the white population is only one per cent. of the whole. It has never, apparently, assumed a much larger proportion. The educated classes were conspicuously in a minority, consequently the wholesome influence of public opinion, which is the mainstay of representative government, was entirely wanting.

The people have now voluntarily surrendered their electoral privileges; a power which they seem never to have understood, and therefore never to have appreciated. It would, however, appear, that though the mass were wholly ignorant of the legitimate use of the formidable weapon which they wielded, the most enlightened of them were obviously alive to the disastrous consequences of its misuse.

In bygone days, when resident proprietors were at hand, the country commanded the accumulated wisdom and intelligence of the land. These gentlemen had both leisure and capacity to devote to the interests of the country, and they took their seats in the Legislature without opposition. The elections were mere formal gatherings of such a moiety of the electors as cared to attend, and the inhabitants generally were utterly indifferent as to the choice of candidates, their only anxiety being that there should be no lack of the usual festivities to celebrate the occasion.

It is now, I think, universally admitted that the only suitable and effective form of government for small and isolated communities is that which is enjoyed in what are termed Crown Colonies, where the executive administration is under the immediate control of the Crown, and where the evils which flow from irresponsible government cannot exist; for experience has shown that under certain conditions what is ordinarily termed "responsible government" is quite consistent with the utter absence of any individual responsibility whatever.

Among the results of the emancipation was the growth of that unhappy system of absenteeism which, nearer home, was the bane of Ireland. And, under the entirely altered circumstances which followed, proprietors became replaced by agents, whose whole time and energy were necessarily devoted to the management of their estates. They, struggling on, ever anxious and hardworked, had no time to devote to local politics.

The people now, for the first time left to themselves, found that they would in future have to select their representatives from among a new class of candidates who presented themselves on the hustings, and henceforth it would seem that the Legislature, as constituted, did not command the respect and confidence of the bulk of the population.

From my own observation, I should say that the change in the constitution was not accomplished before it was peremptorily needed.

I found the country bowed down with the weight of an unwise and inequitable taxation; more than half the sugar plantations deserted and out of cultivation; not a public building left that was habitable; 5,000*l.* of debt, and the salaries of the public officers many months in arrear; nothing, in short, remaining of the old régime but the records of its effete and languishing existence.

Agriculture.

It will be observed that there has been a considerable diminution in the export of sugar in 1867, as compared with the immediately preceding years. As a counterpoise to this, however, I may state that the crop for 1868 is singularly abundant.

I subjoin a statement of the quantities of the export of agricultural produce for the years 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867.

There has been an increase in the production of cotton, but the Island generally is found to be unfavourable to the growth of this plant. The almost perennial moisture which overhangs the mountains, while it is the sugar planters' best friend, is prejudicial to the crops of the cotton grower, the effect of dampness being to rot the pod before it arrives at maturity, often even before it blossoms.

Notwithstanding the large amount of uncultivated properties which hang idle for want of capital to work them, I have no fear as to the future prospects of the Colony. Montserrat will, I anticipate, generally improve, and eventually regain a position in wealth and prosperity by no means behind other West Indian islands.

The largest landowners in the Colony are the Messrs. Sturge of Birmingham. They have invested considerable sums of money in the reclamation of abandoned estates, and by their success and industry other proprietors are stimulated to exertion. This firm have extensively embarked in the cultivation of the lime tree, and this branch of their undertaking, I am informed, is both promising and remunerative. The lime juice which is yielded is exported both in its raw state, for the use more especially of the royal navy and the mercantile marine, and in a concentrated form, to be converted by chemical process in England into citric acid. There is every reason to anticipate that there will continue to be a ready market for this kind of produce, and that ultimately it will prove a source of wealth to the country. It is a species of trade which is capable of high developement, and the lime tree flourishes remarkably well in this Island.

Education.

There are nine day schools in connection with the Church of England. The number of scholars on the school books is 591, 283 boys and 308 girls, with an average attendance of 189 boys and 206 girls. There are also three Sunday schools, with an average attendance of 160 boys and 200 girls. The salaries of the teachers, amounting to 108*l.*, are paid from the Consolidated Fund. The Colony has hitherto contributed nothing towards the maintenance of these schools, but 50*l.*, as a commencement, was voted for this service in the estimates for the current year.

The denominational schools in the Colony are chiefly supported by voluntary contributions recived from England.

The Roman Catholic day school is at present closed from want of funds for its support.

The Wesleyans have four schools, with an average attendance of 67 boys and 55 girls; and three Sunday schools, with an average attendance of 145 boys and 214 girls.

Shipping.

The shipping may be said to have been identical with that of the previous year. The following is a schedule of the vessels entered and cleared during the year 1867:—

From May to October 1867 an Admiralty survey was commenced and terminated. This survey was conducted by the West Indian Survey Department, under the command of Captain Parsons, R.N. It embraced the interior of the Island as well as the surrounding waters, and was of a minute and comprehensive nature. The result has established, that though the Colony possesses no land-locked harbour for shipping, yet that good and safe anchorage is to be found in the roadstead. Authentic charts can by now in all probability be obtained by application at the Hydrographical Department of the Admiralty.

Gaols and Prisons.

The subjoined tabular statement supplies the necessary information on this subject:—

Charitable Institutions.

There are no charitable institutions in this Colony maintained by voluntary contributions. The only establishments of this nature are the Poor House, Hospital, and Lunatic Asylum, kept up entirely at the public expense. The number of the inmates at any one time averages from 50 to 60, at a monthly charge of 54*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

Currency and Weights and Measures.

The currency is nominally the same as in Great Britain, though the Spanish and American gold and silver coins are current, and colonial bank notes of the neighbouring islands are also in general circulation.

The weights and measures are the imperial standard.

General.

This Colony still continues to merits its enviable reputation of being the most healthy of the Antilles.

The inhabitants are eminently of an orderly and quiet disposition, respectful to those in authority and obedient to the laws.

There is a plentiful demand for labour.

Excellent fish abound close to the coasts. Fruit is everywhere abundant, and the cultivation of vegetables and all ground crops needs but slight attention. Hence there is no excuse for extreme destitution; yet the amount of 650*l.* now defrayed from the general revenue, and annually expended in relief to the poor, is, in comparison with the number of the population and comparative cheapness of provisions, exceedingly high. The old and infirm must always remain a legitimate charge on the country's resources; but it is hoped that a stringent Vagrant Act will shortly absolve the Government from the necessity of maintaining in idleness indolent persons who should be earning their own livelihood.

Writing now in the middle of the year 1868, I might add that many extensive improvements have been effected in some of the public buildings and institutions. The Courthouse has been thoroughly repaired, and re-roofed, with an outside covering of corrugated galvanized iron; a material which is found best suited to withstand the heavy rains and deteriorating effects of a tropical climate.

Extra cells, substantially built and well ventilated, are now available in the Lunatic Asylum.

A plentiful supply of fresh water has been secured for the use of the Poor House and Hospital by leading down and through the premises one of the mountain streams.

Additional accommodation has likewise been obtained in the Gaol, and Mr. Moule's dry earth conservancy system of sewage has been introduced with admirable success into every public department of the Island.

These matters will, however, more appropriately form the subject of the report to accompany the Blue Book for the year 1868.

My Lord Duke, Leeward Islands, Antigua, September 19, 1868.

I have the honour to transmit a Despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of St. Kitt's, forwarding the Blue Book of that Colony for the year 1867.

I have, &c.

(Signed) STEPHEN J. HILL,
Governor-in-Chief,

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,
&c. &c. &c.

Lieutenant-Governor Mackenzie to Governor Hill, C.B.

(No. 129.)

Sir, Government House, St. Kitts, September 17, 1868.

I have the honour to transmit to your Excellency the Blue Book of this Island for the year 1867, with the following report thereon, which I trust will be found satisfactory.

Legislation.

In the year 1867 several Acts of an important character were passed, of which the most noticeable are those which were rendered necessary by the great fire which destroyed the town of Basseterre on the night of the 3rd July 1867.

By these Acts, Nos. 13 and 14 respectively, provision is made for the purchase of such lands and walls as may be required, in order to widen and straighten the streets and generally improve the appearance of the town, as well as add materially to its security by blocking up the narrow alleys that formerly made the spread of fire so difficult to prevent. The tax imposed by Act No. 13. is also destined to provide a fund for obtaining an adequate supply of water, which, it is estimated, can be done at a cost of about 6 or 7,000*l.*

The cost of the town improvements, it is supposed, will be about 7 or 8,000*l.*, and the tax imposed for three years will in all probability produce in that time the amount necessary to defray the expense of both undertakings, by which the town of Basseterre will be so materially improved.

The Act in question imposes an additional tax of 25 per centum upon the amount of the several duties on imports, exports, and liquor licences, payable under Acts Nos. 95, 113, 133, and 220.

In the course of the same year two Acts were passed, Nos. 9 and 17, 1867, re-constituting the vestry of Anguilla.

The number of the vestry has been reduced from 13 to 7 members. The former number was much in excess of that which so small a community could hope to furnish respectably.

As the Militia Act expired in the month of August 1867, a new Act was passed (No. 11, 1867), in no way different from the Act previously in force, except that the 44th clause of Act No. 187, dated the 16th August 1862, which was deemed to approach too nearly to the legalization of martial law, was omitted.

The continual increase of the expenditure at the Cunningham Hospital induced the Legislature to pass an Act (No. 12, 1867,) by which a limitation of the number of patients to be admitted into the hospital was fixed. The law provides that no more shall be received than the establishment can conveniently hold, although more than double that number had been frequently crowded into its wards. In other respects the new Act is very similar to No. 226, of the 18th December 1865, which preceded it.

The only other Act of any importance passed in 1867 is No. 16, for regulating burials. This Act provides that a medical certificate of the cause of death shall be produced before any corpse may be legally interred.

Basseterre Corporation.

This institution which was brought into existence by Sir Benjamin Pine in the year 1861, did not answer the expectation of its founder. The original Act, No. 175, dated 6th May 1861, had to be altered in many respects by Act No. 212, dated 31st January 1865, and even with the amendments contained in the last-mentioned Act it failed to work satisfactorily, and ultimately had to be abolished by the Act No. 1, 1868, which was passed by the Legislature at the end of year 1867. The town of Basseterre is now placed under the supervision of the Surveyor of Roads and Superintendent of Public Buildings, who is responsible to the Governor alone for due order and cleanliness of the town.

Public Buildings.

The public buildings are all in good order, and require very little to be expended upon them. The two piers in the town of Basseterre suffered very much from a gale of wind and swelling of the sea in October last; the estimated cost of repairing them, 662*l.*, has been recently voted in the estimates for this year, and the work is now in hand, and they will soon be in good order. The once beautiful church of St. George's remains in the ruinous condition in which the fire in July last year left it; the Legislature has recently passed a Bill authorizing the Governor to borrow from the loan to be raised in England the sum of 8,000*l.*, in order to effect its restoration. This amount is to be repaid by continuing the 25 per cent. additional tax on all imports and exports for three years longer, and I am in anxious hope that the measure will be sanctioned by Her Majesty. In the meantime Divine service is held in the Poore Memorial schoolroom on Sundays, and the weekday services (Wednesday and Friday), together with the administration of the Holy Communion, every other Sunday in the small chapel of ease in Irish Town, which has lately been put into excellent order by private subscriptions.

Prisons.

I have so recently given my reasons in my Despatch No. 50, dated 16th March 1868, why the improvements recommended by the Secretary of State in respect of the separate system, and the working of the prisoners sentenced to hard labour within the walls of the prison, instead of on the roads and streets, cannot now be carried out, that I have nothing more to add on this head of the service.

The following return shows the number of prisoners committed during the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867, with some particulars which may be interesting on this head.

Revenue and Expenditure.

The revenue of the Island keeps up steadily, and no fresh taxation has been deemed necessary during the last year, except that already alluded to under the head of Legislation, for improving the town of Basseterre. The revenue and expenditure for the last ten years were as follows :

St. Kitts.

Year.	Revenue.			Expenditure.
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
1858	23,356	19	5	17,013	10	10
1859	17,844	10	10	18,105	15	0
1860	20,691	7	1	21,723	6	5
1861	20,283	5	1	21,433	18	1
1862	22,292	15	11	21,371	15	10
1863	21,972	2	3	22,154	12	0
1864	19,445	5	6	21,257	5	4
1865	23,476	3	1	22,259	7	10
1866	24,504	12	5	24,925	17	6
1867	26,317	1	7	26,092	17	6

Thus it will be seen that for the last three years the revenue has just been about equal to the expenditure. The balance in the treasury on the 31st of December 1867 was 10,748*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.*, but this balance was available for the salaries and other standing charges incurred during the last quarter of the year 1867.

Imports and Exports.

The following returns of the imports and exports for five years, from 1863 to 1867 inclusive, show that the prosperity of the Island has not retrograded.

Return of Imports from 1863 to 1867 inclusive.

By the foregoing return it will be seen that the trade of the Island keeps up steadily, there being very little difference in the several heads of the value of the importations, especially for the years 1866 and 1867.

The above return shows a falling off in the crop of 1867, occasioned by a dry season; nevertheless the estimated value of the produce of that year has exceeded that of the preceding one, owing probably to the increased value of West Indian produce in the English market.

Education.

The following statement from the Principal of the Grammar School, who is ex-officio Inspector of Schools, will I trust be satisfactory. It appears that the fire of last year affected the interest of the Grammar School as well as other institutions:—

"The average number of pupils for the year 1867 was 18¼.

"The year commenced with 25 old pupils and one new, but ended with 11 only, the diminution arising from six boys having gone in due course to England, two leaving for private causes, two away from long illness, and six leaving through the effects of the disastrous fire in Basseterre. This last-mentioned cause has also operated to preclude many new pupils from being entered at the Grammar School, one only having been added to the opening number of 26.

"As regards the standard of the school work, it may not be irrelevant to remark, that the parents of pupils who have been sent to England have without exception given the most favourable reports of the standing and progress of their sons."

Of the industrial schools the Inspector makes the following report:

	Average Number of Pupils attending daily during the Year.	Amount of Fees received from the Children.
Church of England Schools - -	628	$ 589·08
Wesleyan „ - -	436	$ 407·79
Moravian „ - - -	400	$ 416·21
Grand Totals - -	1,464	$ 1,413·08

"The average of daily attendances shows an increase of 115 over that of the year 1866, and the amount of fees an increase of $ 35·51.

"The increase in attendance would have been considerably more, but for the effect produced during the last two quarters of the year by the fire.

"The number of names sent in from the different schools for the Christmas public examination was 95, and the number of children in actual attendance 72, showing an increase respectively of 8 and 11 over the corresponding numbers for 1866. The prizes were fairly merited, and the general result of the examination satisfactory. The teachers as a body are at the present time much superior to those of bygone years."

General.

The year 1867 was fraught with much distress to the inhabitants of the town of Basseterre by the great fire of the 3d July, which destroyed, with some few exceptions, every building, and thereby rendered homeless several thousand of its inhabitants. Happily, by prompt and energetic measures, carried out by the Relief Committee whom I appointed on the occasion, food and clothing were liberally distributed to the suffering poor through a grant from the Legislature of this Island, as well as by liberal contributions from England and the neighbouring Islands; a number of small tenements have since been erected out of these funds, which afford shelter to such poor families as were entirely destitute of the means of rebuilding their houses.

I must take this opportunity of publicly thanking all those kind friends, far and near, who so generously came to our aid at such a trying time.

The health of the Island, notwithstanding all the distress entailed by the calamity just referred to, has, I am thankful to say, under Providence, been very good, and to all appearance things are looking brighter, and the people are cheerful and happy.

Enclosure in No. 15.

Captain Mackenzie to Colonel Hill.

Sir, Government House, Saint Kitts, July 1, 1868.

I have the honour to transmit to your Excellency the Blue Book for Nevis, with the following observations thereon.

Taxes and Duties.

The duties on imports and exports are the same as they have been since 1857, with very little alteration.

The state of the finances rendered it necessary that a loan should be negotiated at the Colonial Bank, for 1,157*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, to repay which a tax of 25 per cent. on the existing duties had to be levied. This measure has improved revenue, and placed the finances of the Island in a healthy state.

Public Debt.

The balance due under this head on the 31st December 1867 was only 907*l.* 10*s.*

Legislation.

The following Acts were passed during the year 1867, viz.:—

An Act to abolish excise duties, and to impose an additional tax on sellers of liquors. By this change a real gain of 200*l.* has been realised.

The excise tax was open to fraud, which was committed to a large extent by distillers. Any reform in a measure of this kind must be hailed as an era of progress in Nevis, after smuggling for so many years had detracted from the public revenue to such an amount that its normal condition was known only as one of continued bankruptcy.

The Act to abolish parish rates was reported in the last Blue Book.

The Incumbent Estates Acts have been entertained by the Legislature, and are now the law of the land.

Also an Act to grant a pension to the late Chief Justice, who retired from bodily infirmity. This measure requires no comment.

An Act to establish a police force. This merely perpetuates a previous enactment.

An Appropriation Act, devoting 7,591*l.* to the public service.

An Act to raise by loan 1,200*l.* for the public service, to pay a debt which had become overdue.

An Act for the protecting the growth of cotton from robbery and illicit dealing. A measure solicited by cotton growers, and will no doubt be productive of good effect.

An Act to regulate the Coroner's office, founded on the Imperial system.

An Act subsidising the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, recommended by Her Majesty's Government.

An Act to raise by loan 1,000*l.* to the public service.

Political Franchise.

There has been no change in this respect.

Council and Assembly.

In 1867 a single Legislative Chamber, composed of the Lieutenant Governor as President, the Colonial Secretary and Solicitor General ex-officio members, three nominee members and five elected members, was framed, in lieu of the former Legislative Council and House of Assembly.

Pensions.

This head of public expenditure has been increased by the annual allowance of 100*l.* to the late Chief Justice.

Agriculture.

Under this head it is satisfactory to state that a steady improvement goes on. Cultivation has been largely extended, and a large amount of agricultural machinery has been introduced into the Island; drainage has also been much improved.

The sugar crop of 1867 was, however, owing to severe drought, singularly short, viz., one third below the usual average.

Cotton.

Cotton, which during the American war was largely grown and exported, is now thrown out of cultivation, as being unremunerative. Sugar exported 2,006 hogsheads.

Prisons.

This establishment has engaged much attention. There has been an increase of prisoners convicted for petty offences, induced, in all probability, by the short crop, low wages, and lack of general improvement.

There is one charitable institution supported at the public charge. This institution works well at a moderate cost it affords shelter to 36 aged poor and infirm.

Medical aid is supplied as circumstances require; there are rooms also set apart for sick seamen, who receive attention gratuitously.

There is a library in Charlestown, which is only in its infancy at present, and requires the fostering care of the public to give it health.

In conclusion, it gives me pleasure to remark that Nevis is improving in its agricultural, mercantile, and financial affairs, and, under proper supervision, is capable of being made a charming and delightful little Island.

The change in her political constitution has already been fruitful of much good, and if the nearer union between her and the sister Island of Saint Kitts be consummated, it is to be expected that a future of prosperity, progress, and happiness may be safely calculated on.

SIR, Tortola, November 6, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith the Blue Book for the year 1867, together with my report thereon.

I very much regret that I have been unable to forward these returns before this time; but the delay has been caused by the destruction of the books of the sub-treasurer at West End in the hurricane; the destruction of some, and mutilation of others, of the books of the prison, and the general disarrangement of all the offices, caused by the hurricane; added to which is the paucity of men, either official or otherwise, of ability to collect and arrange the information required. And my own time being so fully occupied with the relief money and accounts, the restoration of public buildings, &c., I have been unable until very recently to afford my services in the compilation of the Blue Book. I trust that His Grace the Secretary of State will be pleased to accept this my apology for the delay.

REPORT on the VIRGIN ISLANDS BLUE BOOK for the YEAR 1867.

Revenue and Expenditure.

1. The revenue of 1867 exceeded that of 1866 (including balances from the previous years) by 285*l.* 8*s.* 6¼*d.* This increase appears to have been occasioned chiefly by the increase in 1867 of the Import duty on flour and cornmeal of 2*s.* per barrel, and increase of Export duty on cattle, and by incidental receipts from auction sales of wrecked goods.

The increase would have been greater, but in the early months of the year the prevalence of cholera at St. Thomas materially impeded the trade with that island.

The expenditure in 1867 was in excess of that of 1866, as shown at pages 32 and 33, by 285*l.* 8*s.* 6¼*d.*, while there was on 31st December a debt still due by the Colony of 189*l.* 4*s.* 8½*d.*; together, 474*l.* 13*s.* 2¾*d.* This was attributed to the increase of prisoners, and the strict quarantine which was rendered necessary to be maintained against St. Thomas for cholera, and the few sporadic cases of smallpox which occurred in this island, also the increase of relief to the poor.

Public Debt.

2. The public debt, as stated at page 44, was purely for the service of 1867, and is included under the head of expenditure in paragraph 1 of this Report.

Militia.

3. The militia cannot be called efficient. The artillery corps is selected from the most respectable of the townspeople, and the infantry from the country labourers, who are generally excessively dull of comprehension; and the training of them is, consequently, a very difficult task. The expense incurred was 34*l.* 15*s.* 10½*d.* for clothing, pay of the armourer, drummer and fifer.

Public Works.

4. The only public work in 1867 was the repair of the pier, just previously to the disastrous hurricane of 29th October, which it was fortunate had been completed, and so prevented the entire destruction of this most useful landing place. The sum expended upon it was 49*l.* 19*s.* 4¾*d.* The hurricane, nevertheless, seriously damaged it, but it has since been properly repaired.

Legislation.

5. There were five ordinances which became law during the year. The chief of these was the "Constitution Ordinance." This ordinance abolished the elective franchise, and thus put an end to electioneering feuds, and the return by irresponsible persons of members entirely ignorant of their duties as legislators alike to their constituents and to the Government, and who were consequently entirely biassed in their work by private feelings. The present system of three official members, the president administering the government being the chief, and having a casting as well as a deliberative vote, and three unofficial members nominated by the Crown, has worked remarkably well. There are no boisterous meetings such as characterized the former legislative assemblies.

The Jury Ordinance reduces the number of jurors to six in criminal cases, and abolishes juries in civil cases in toto. These provisions have since been altered, and either plaintiff or defendant may now require a jury; if they do not, before or at the trial of the cause, the judge decides alone; and in all cases the jury is to consist of seven.

Certain qualifications are necessary for jurymen. A jury list is prepared by the Provost Marshal, and submitted to the chief judge, who selects therefrom 18 names. The persons so chosen are then summoned to attend the court, and are bound under penalties to perform the duties of jurymen. On the whole, this system appears well adapted to the altered circumstances of the Colony.

The Steam Navigation Company's Ordinance exempts all vessels of any steam navigation company from payment of any tonnage or other dues, saving import duty on articles not for the use of such companies. This ordinance, from the geographical position of these islands, it was hoped, would induce the establishment in them of a depôt for steamers coaling and obtaining supplies.

The Supplementary Import and Export Duty Ordinance increased the duty on flour from 3*s.* to 5*s.*, on cornmeal from 2*s.* to 4*s.*, and on the exportation of horned cattle from 2*s.* to 4*s.*

Population.

6. The population of these islands, by the returns of the registrars, appears to be increasing. Upwards of 30 per cent. of the 170 deaths recorded were either during the hurricane, or soon after, caused by wounds received during and exposure to its virulence.

Ecclesiastical.

7. The parish church in Road Town, and the three chapels in connection with the church, were destroyed by the hurricane, as were also four out of the seven Wesleyan chapels.

Education.

8. The number of children taught in the several schools during the year is greater by 132 than in 1866, notwithstanding that the schools were not re-organized after the hurricane until this year.

The grant of 80*l.* per annum for educational purposes is divided by the Commissioners of Education among the several schools, according to the average daily attendance of children between five years and twelve years of age. No school which does not average 20 children daily is admitted to participate in the grant.

Imports and Exports.

9. The imports of 1867 are in excess of those of 1866 by 1,088*l.* To the vigilance of the sub-treasurers in the out islands are we indebted for a more correct return of imports. The exports have decreased by 1,621*l.*

The almost entire cessation of trade with St. Thomas during the early part of the year, owing to the existence of cholera in that island, and the neglect of the cultivation of cotton, will in a great measure account for the diminution of exports. In 1866, 45,900 lb. of cotton, value 1,545*l.*, were exported; and in 1867, 22,975 lb., value 378*l.*

Gaols and Prisoners.

10. The loss of some of the books of the prison, and mutilation of others by the hurricane, caused great difficulty in making up any return of the number of prisoners. They have, however, been prepared as accurately as circumstances would allow.

There were 37 more prisoners in 1867 than in 1866, who, with the exception of one for rape, and two for sheepstealing, were principally for petty thefts.

11. It has been impossible to maintain proper discipline in the temporary prison since the hurricane. In the first instance a small room of nine feet square was the only place which would be found to secure the prisoners. The consequence was that those for minor offences had to be released to make room for those of graver ones; and, fortunately, at that time, there were no female prisoners.

The ground walls of the gaol not having been blown or shaken down, and the upper floor left on the walls, a rough roof was put on with steps to lead into the roof, which was divided in two apartments, one for the turnkey, the other for the matron; and the lower part formed two wards, one for males, the other for females, the gaoler occupying the bathing room in the prison yard which had been repaired for his use.

The plan on which the prison is now being built will allow of better classification than has ever been effected here, as also for isolation, which will in all probability have a deterrent effect on the commission of crime.

SIR, Government House, Roseau, December 29, 1868.

I HAVE already (Despatch No. 132, of 24th October) acquainted your Excellency with the circumstances, namely, the illness and death of the late Colonial Secretary, which have caused a delay in the compilation of the Blue Book Returns of this Colony for 1867.

I have now the honour to forward these returns, together with my report thereon.

REPORT on the Blue Book Returns of Dominica for the Year 1867.

Taxes and Duties.

An Act, styled the "General Tax Act, 1867," to raise a fund in aid of the revenue of the island, was passed at the commencement of the year. It repealed the "General Tax Act of 1857," and the "Tax Act of 1865," together with the amending or altering Acts supplementary to these, and substituted in lieu thereof certain other provisions.

The principal changes effected were these:—The export duty on cocoa was increased from 6*d.* to 1*s.* for every 100 lbs.; the export duties on arrowroot, limejuice, charcoal, and hides were abolished, and a new duty of 4*s.* imposed upon every head of cattle exported. An annual tax of 20*l.* was imposed upon bankers, and of 1*l.* upon butchers. The tax payable by barristers or attorneys-at-law was reduced from 10*l.* to 6*l.*, that payable by medical practitioners from 8*l.* to 6*l.*, and that by druggists from 6*l.* to 5*l.*

The remaining taxes or duties payable under the repealed Acts were mostly continued at the same rates.

Revenue and Expenditure.

The gross revenue of the year was 14,168*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.*; the gross expenditure 13,782*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.* These amounts include, on the side of revenue, a balance from 1866 of 794*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*; and on the side of expenditure, the contingent claims outstanding against the Colony on the 31st of December 1866, incurred in and due in respect of that year, but paid in 1867. The net revenue of 1867 was 13,369*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.*, against 14,321*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* in 1866 (exclusive of the loan of that year), and against 13,271*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* in 1865. The net revenue, therefore, of 1867, shows a slight increase upon the revenue of 1865, but a decrease of 952*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* as compared with that of 1866; the decrease being chiefly in the receipts from import dues, from export dues, and from the house tax. With respect to the decrease in the receipts from the house tax,—a decrease of 307*l.* 18*s.*,—this is due to the repeal of the tax on houses on estates.

As I observed when writing at the commencement of the year upon the accounts of 1867 (Despatch No. 20, February 1868), the feature to be noticed in the revenue of the Colony is the amount derived from the Customs Import Duties, and that derived from the Excise Duty on rum; the two together not realizing 7,000*l.* in a population of 27,000.

As I remarked at the time with respect to this, something may be due to evasions of the revenue laws, the facilities for which are not wanting, something to high duties imposed upon imports, and something, perhaps, to the nature of ad valorem duties placed on articles difficult to assess fairly; but, on the whole, the receipt must be taken as the test of the power of consumption of the population, and of its condition.

Public Debt.

The public debt of this Colony consists of two liabilities, which are as follows:—

1. The amount due to the Imperial Government on account of the Hurricane Loan of 1836.
2. The amount due to the Colonial Bank and others on account of the loan of 1866 raised for the service of the island.

The former was a loan of 10,000*l.*; the latter one of 4,100*l.* In order to understand the position of the Colony, and the amount now due by it in respect of the first of the above-named liabilities, where it is a debtor to the Imperial Government on account of the Hurricane Loan of 1836, it is necessary to refer to the transactions that have passed in connection with this debt.

The loan (10,000*l.*) was advanced to the Colony in March 1836, and was to be repaid in ten years from the date of the advance, with interest after the rate of 4 per centum. This arrangement, however, was never carried out; but towards the reduction of the loan there was eventually repaid, by the year 1860, the principal sum of 4,595*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, leaving unpaid the residue of the principal, together with considerable arrears of interest.

The Act of 23 & 24 Vict. cap. 57. authorized the reduction of the rate of interest from 4 per centum to 3¼ per centum, as also the capitalization of the arrears of interest due, which, together with the residue of the principal, was put by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury at 8,083*l.* in that year (1860); and the whole was to be paid off by twenty annual instalments of 555*l.* 15*s.* Five such instalments were paid up to the 31st March 1865, when the last payment was made. The financial condition of the Colony then becoming embarrassed, the Imperial Government again gave a favourable consideration to the position of the local Government; and an Act was passed (30 & 31 Vict. cap. 91.) in the course of the year (1867) of which this Report treats, authorizing the postponement of the further payment of the instalments until the 31st March 1870, when an increased annuity is to be substituted for the former annuity; the payment of the said increased annuity to commence on that date, and to be made in the ten subsequent years.

The debt due to the Imperial Government, therefore, may be placed at 8,336*l.* 15*s.*, which includes the interest computed to the 31st March 1880, when the last instalment is due.

The other liability of the Colony is that to the Colonial Bank and others, the original amount of which was 4,100*l.*

Besides the payment of the interest due upon this sum (at the rate of 8 and 9 per centum), there was repaid, of the principal, 1,000*l.* in 1866, and 1,250*l.* in 1867, leaving on the 31st December in the latter year a residue of 1,850*l.* due by the Colony.

Public Works.

In these, some of the most pressing and necessary repairs only were effected.

A portion of the sea wall which had been for some time in a dilapidated condition was restored, at a cost of 170*l.*

In a severe gale that was experienced in October a heavy sea carried away a part of the foundation of the public jetty. The means of the Colony, unfortunately, have not admitted of its immediate restoration. The expenditure on public buildings and works during the year 1867 was 493*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.*

Upon the maintenance and repair of the public roads and bridges of the Island 812*l.* were expended, besides the amount paid for the salaries of the inspector of roads, the road-wardens, and the clerk to the Road Commissioners, and for other miscellaneous charges; the total expenditure under the head of roads and bridges being 1,153*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* The sum of 812*l.*, above-given as the actual sum expended on the repair and maintenance, does not, however, represent the full measure of what is contributed by the Colony to these purposes, manual labour and personal service having been, in addition, bestowed upon the roads.

The maintenance and repair of the public roads and bridges are the subject of a separate and special provision, under which all persons, except ministers of religion, between the ages of 16 and 50, are liable to contribute labour for so many days in the year, on the public roads, or, in lieu thereof, to pay a certain money commutation.

Some elect to labour, some to pay the money commutation; and the Commissioners of Roads thus have both means at their disposal, subject to certain restrictions. The amount of road money received during the year was 1,241*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*

This is a special fund, and cannot be diverted to other services; but the item is included in the gross amount of the revenue of the Colony I have elsewhere given.

Legislation.

Six laws passed and came into operation in the course of the year. Of these, three deserve notice:—

The first, an Act to enable excise officers to act as revenue officers for the better protection of the revenue; the second, an Act for carrying into execution in Dominica "The West Indian Incumbered Estates Acts 1854, 1858, 1862, and 1864;" the third, the "General Tax Act, 1867," to which I have already referred at the commencement of this Report. Of the remaining three, two were Acts granting patent rights to inventions for improvements in the manufacture of sugar and rum; the third was to supply a slight verbal omission in the "Rum Duty Act" of 1866.

I may here observe, however, that, besides the six Acts above-named, five other measures of some importance were passed by the Legislative Assembly at the latter end of the year; but as they were not assented to, and consequently did not come into operation until the commencement of 1868, they will be placed among the legislative enactments of that year, and not of 1867. DOMINICA.

Population.

The census of 1860 returned the population of Dominica at 25,065.

The Registrar General of the Colony places it at 26,599 at the end of the year 1867, showing an increase of 1,534 in the seven years. During the year 740 births were registered against 539 deaths, an increase within the year of 201. A comparison of the Registrar General's returns for 1867 with those for the preceding year, 1866, shows 740 births in 1867, against 721 in 1866; 539 deaths in 1867, against 519 in 1866; 125 marriages in 1867, against 225 in 1866.

Ecclesiastical.

The population of the Island as above shown is estimated at 26,599.

Their denominational proportions, given in round numbers, are as follows:—

Roman Catholic - - -	23,000
Wesleyan - - - -	2,000
Church of England - - -	1,000

The establishment of the Roman Catholic Church consists of a bishop, a vicar-general, and 10 priests.

The Wesleyan Mission has two resident missionaries in the Island.

There is one minister of the Church of England, the rector of St. George.

The number of ministers of religion, I presume, may be considered as being in sufficient proportion to the number of the population, regarding the subject from a numerical point of view. It is to be observed, however, that the charge (taking the average) of each of the 10 ministers of the Roman Catholic Church is more than double, in point of numbers, that of any of the ministers of the other denominations. It is also to be observed that the population of the Island is a scattered population; while the mountainous character of the country, and the want of carriage roads and carriage conveyance, renders communication difficult and tedious. Therefore, the aggregate of the numbers of the population does not convey any satisfactory indication of what is sufficient or insufficient for their requirements in this respect; and there are necessarily many parts very inadequately provided with religious ministration.

The Roman Catholic clergy are supported by voluntary contributions. The Wesleyan Mission is maintained by the Wesleyan Missionary Society. The establishment of the Church of England alone is provided for by the Colony. The present provision dates from the year 1830; but provision had previously been made and from time to time continued from the year 1798. The annual charge upon the general revenue on account of the establishment is 376*l.*, the rector's stipend being 320*l.*

Education.

There was an increase in the number of scholars on the books of the public or Government schools during the year 1867, of 141; the returns for that year showing 587 scholars, against 446 in the previous year. This increase is due to the establishment of a school at Laroche, in the parish of St. Patrick, which brought together 139 children before the close of the year.

The Government Board of Education continued during the year a grant of 40*l.* in aid to the Roman Catholic boys' school in Roseau, which numbered 133 boys, being 38 less than in 1866.

The Board gave assistance also to a private school of 32 pupils in Roseau.

Thus the number of scholars in the schools belonging to the Government, or assisted by it, was as follows:—

	Boys.	Girls.	Total.
Government schools - -	432	155	587
Schools assisted by Government -	133	32	165

Making in all a total of 752 scholars.

The expenditure by the Government during the year on education, including the salary and expenses of the inspector of schools, was 685*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*

Besides the schools above referred to, which were either Government schools or schools assisted by the Government, there were private and denominational schools supported and conducted by the different religious establishments in the Island.

DOMINICA.

Being independent of pecuniary assistance from the Educational Board they were also independent of the control or inspection of the board.

The returns which the various denominational ministers have been good enough to furnish show the number of schools and scholars as follows :—

Roman Catholic schools, besides the school for boys already mentioned as assisted by the board :

In Roseau, a school for girls, numbering	182

The summary of education, then, in the Island, for the year 1867, may be thus set forth :—

Number of children receiving eduation in Government schools and in schools assisted by the Government	772
Ascertained number of children receiving education in other schools	665

Making a total of 1,417 children receiving education out of a population of between 26,000 and 27,000.

This is scarcely a sufficient proportion.

Referring more particularly to the share taken by the Government in education, the grant for 1867 was 700*l.*, of which, as shown above, 685*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* was actually expended. The education of 752 children is not an adequate result for the amount of expenditure, and many parishes and localities were unprovided with the means of education.

There are, however, local circumstances to be taken into consideration which render the diffusion of educational means always a matter of some difficulty. I refer to the scattered condition of this population of 26,000 or 27,000 over a mountainous country, the nature of which creates distances and difficulties of communication ; to the early age in which children are employed in agricultural pursuits ; and to the very frequent indifference on the part of the parents.

Nevertheless, there were many improvements of which the system was susceptible ; and the Educational Act expiring on the 31st December 1867 a new Act was passed, coming into operation in 1868, under which the extension of educational means has been very considerably promoted throughout the country. These results, however, belong to the Report for 1868.

Imports and Exports.

The total declared value of the imports into the Colony during 1867 was 51,047*l.* 8*s.*; this is against 43,558*l.* in 1864, 52,374*l.* in 1865, 61,188*l.* in 1866. From the United Kingdom (direct), the value of imports was 16,701*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* ; from the British Colonies, 28,289*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.*; from foreign countries, 6,056*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.* But nearly the whole, or 26,021*l.*, of the imports from the British Colonies was from Barbados, and was of British goods. Of other Colonies, 1,475*l.* was from Nova Scotia, the imports being lumber and shingles.

The greater part of the imports from foreign countries was from the French West Indies, and consisted of butter, candles, dried fish, furniture, indigo, leeches, linens and cottons, olive oil, potatoes, gin, refined sugar, and wines.

The principal articles of which there was a decrease in the imported quantities in the general importation, as compared with 1866, are flour, glass, haberdashery hardware, leather, tea, and tobacco.

The total declared value of exports from the Colony in 1867 was 95,579*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, against 106,452*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* in the previous year.

The decrease was in the quantity of sugar, the value of the sugar exported being less by 13,362*l.* than in 1866. There was also a decrease in the exports of animals and arrowroot.

On the other hand, there was an increase in the exports of cocoa, coffee, molasses, rum, and wood.

I noticed in my Report of last year that attention had been of late given to the cultivation of cocoa. There had been a slight increase in 1866 in the export of this article upon that of 1865; and the export of 1867 shows an increase of 34,978 lbs. upon that of 1866. The total export of cocoa during the two years was as follows:—

	Lbs.
1867	189,244

In the export of coffee also the increase is noticeable. The quantity exported in 1867 has more than doubled that in 1866, the respective figures being as follows:—

	Lbs.
1867	23,913

I should not be justified, however, in holding this increase out as an indication of any particular impetus or attention having been given to the cultivation of this article.

The cultivation of cocoa is comparatively of recent date, but coffee was the original staple produce of the Island.

I have reason to believe, from what I have since learned, that the quantity of coffee exported from this Island in former years considerably exceeded the amount stated in my Report of last year, namely 2,000,000 lbs., and that it may be more correctly represented at between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 lbs.

The difference between these figures and those of 1866 and 1867 show to how trifling an extent the cultivation is continued; and, indeed, since the blight of 1831, almost every attempt to revive the cultivation has failed. As much of it, however, as is still produced is of a very fine quality, some portion being of the Mocha plant, which was successfully introduced many years ago. It is to be noticed that nearly the entire quantity exported, that is 22,290 lbs. out of 23,913 lbs., is taken to the neighbouring French islands.

Of the total, 95,579*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, value of exports in the year, 86,335*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* were to the United Kingdom; 4,706*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* to British Colonies, mostly to Barbados; and 4,538*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* to foreign countries, mostly to the French and Danish West Indies.

Shipping.

The shipping returns for the past three years show the number of vessels and amount of tonnage entered and cleared, as follows:—

Entered.

	Vessels.	Tonnage.
In 1865	241	7,965
In 1866	193	7,493
In 1867	325	7,778

Cleared.

	Vessels.	Tonnage.
In 1865	237	8,211
In 1866	187	6,630
In 1867	299	7,785

Of the total tonnage entered in 1867, 1,409 was from Great Britain; 3,569 from British West Indies; 1,254 from French West Indies. Of the total tonnage cleared in 1867, 2,754 was for Great Britain; 2,656 for British West Indies; 936 for French West Indies.

Gaols and Prisoners.

There is but one gaol in the Island, that in Roseau. It is capable of containing in separate cells 21 prisoners, or, including the debtors' and untried prisoners' cells, 25 prisoners; but where more than one prisoner sleeps in a cell it is capable of containing 85 or 90 prisoners.

The greatest number of prisoners in confinement at any one time in the year was 40.

The total number of prisoners committed in 1867 was 299, being less by 46 than in the previous year. There were 19 cases of sickness and one death in the course of the year.

Of the 299 prisoners committed, 169 were males and 130 females; 245 could not read; 21 were prisoners for debt, and 117 for road default. Road defaulters are those who have refused or neglected to comply with the obligations of the law, which requires annually a certain personal labour, or, in lieu thereof, a certain money commutation payment, towards the repairs and maintenance of the public roads and highways.

Attention has been of late directed to the large number of these defaulters, the number imprisoned by no means representing the total number of defaulters; and a Bill is now before the Legislative Assembly by which it is hoped to provide a more efficient prevention of such default, and so at the same time to reduce the large number annually imprisoned for it.

Deducting the number of debtors and the number of road defaulters from the total number of prisoners committed, there were, therefore, 161 prisoners committed in 1867 for criminal offences.

Charitable Institutions.

Relief of the Poor.

The system is one of in-door relief, but out-door relief is also given in certain exceptional cases. The poor-house is under the direction of a board of guardians, and under the immediate superintendence and charge of a resident master and matron.

A medical attendant is attached to the establishment.

The returns for the year are as follows:—

Number of inmates remaining on 31st December 1866		95
Admitted in 1867		120
Total number of inmates in 1867		215
Died in 1867	25
Discharged in 1867	86
		111
Remaining on 31st December 1867		104

The number of persons to whom out-door relief was given during the year was at the average rate of 28 persons weekly.

Lunatics.

A lunatic asylum is connected with the poor-house establishment, being under the same direction and superintendence. There is also a resident keeper.

There were two lunatics in the asylum at the close of 1866, and one was admitted during the year, leaving three remaining on the 31st December 1867.

The total cost of the poor-house establishment and lunatic asylum in 1867 was 1,507*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Deducting the amount of the fixed salaries paid to the medical attendant, the master and matron, and the keeper of the lunatic asylum, namely 290*l.*, the contingent expenses of the establishment and asylum were 1,217*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

Infirmary.

The Roseau infirmary is under private management. It is, however, principally supported by the Colony, which supplies the medical attendance, together with an annual grant of 160*l.* in addition.

Without this assistance, indeed, it could scarcely be kept up, for it appears that its total income in 1867 was only 224*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, of which, as has been shown, 160*l.* is contributed by the Colony. Its expenditure, including arrears from 1866, was 251*l.* 13*s.* 11½*d.*

The returns furnished by the trustee, who is the rector of the English church in the Island, show the number of patients admitted and treated during the year, as follows :—

Number of patients remaining from 1866		25
Admitted during 1867		137
Total admitted and treated during 1867		162
Died	27
Discharged	116
		143
Remaining on 31st December 1867		19

Orphanage.

The Female Orphan Asylum attached to the Roman Catholic convent, and supported by the Bishop of Roseau, I noticed in my Report of last year, together with its management, and the beneficial results it was calculated to produce.

The number of inmates in 1867 is given at 66.

A grant of 125*l.* to the institution was made by the Colony in the course of the year.

I HAVE the honour to forward in duplicate the Blue Book of this Colony for the year 1867. As its transmission has already been much delayed, I will not detain it longer for the purpose of attempting any detailed comment, especially as the circumstances of the Colony during the period to which it refers presented no peculiar feature, and I could add little if anything to the observations made on previous occasions.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Major-General Sir F. CHAPMAN, K.C.B., R.E., to the SECRETARY OF STATE for the COLONIES.

(No. 27.)

MY LORD DUKE, Government House, Bermuda, April 10, 1868.

IN forwarding the Blue Book for Bermuda for the year 1867 I have the honour to furnish the following observations:—

1. Taxes.

No alterations have taken place from those authorized in 1866.

2. Revenue.

There is a decrease of 2,099*l.* in the revenue of 1867 compared with that of the previous year, but this is to be accounted for by an unusually large quantity of rum and other spirits having been entered for duty in the early part of 1866, in anticipation of the duty being raised 50 per cent. on the former, and 20 per cent. on the latter.

3. Expenditure.

The expenditure is within the revenue. It is less than last year's, and as the salaries of some of the principal public officers of the Colony have been for the first time defrayed from local sources, and the causeway works have formed a new charge, it bears a favourable comparison with the revenue.

4. Public works and buildings.

A very important work has been commenced, connecting St. George's, viâ Long Bird Island, and by a causeway through Castle Harbour, with the main islands westward. This work when completed cannot fail in providing a good and safe communication for the military, and a good road for the ordinary traffic of the Colony.

The Military Telegraph has also been established throughout the Islands from St. George's, viâ Hamilton and Gibbs Hill, to Her Majesty's Dockyard in Ireland Island, and proves to be a great convenience to all classes. A branch from the main line to Mount Langton places the Governor in immediate communication with the other stations.

The public highways and colonial buildings have been maintained in fair order, but a larger amount will be required for their repair in the forthcoming year than was voted for 1867.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor SEYMOUR to the Earl GRANVILLE, K.G.

(No. 24.)

MY LORD, Victoria, March 2, 1869.

I HAVE the honour to forward the Blue Book of this Colony for the year 1867, together with a Report from the Acting Colonial Secretary.

2. The United Colony is of such vast extent and presents so many peculiar features that I feel I had better postpone to another opportunity a general consideration of its resources and position.

3. From the copy of the addresses interchanged between the Council and myself at the commencement of the present legislative session, which I beg leave to lay before your Lordship, you will see that there is but little fear for the future existing among the people.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FREDERICK SEYMOUR.

The Right Hon. the Earl Granville, K.G.,
&c. &c. &c.

Colonial Secretary's Office, November 20, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith to your Excellency the Blue Book of the Colony of British Columbia for the year 1867.

2. I regret the delay which has taken place in compiling this book, but it is the first Blue Book prepared since the union of the two formerly separate Colonies of Vancouver Island and British Columbia, and the difficulties and delays inseparable from obtaining returns and information in a new and sparsely peopled country have in this case been more than ordinarily experienced, and the compilation of the book correspondingly retarded.

3. For the same reason, viz., that this Blue Book is virtually the first of a new Colony, it is not possible with any degree of accuracy to deduce therefrom any just general comparisons with previous years.

4. It is true that the elements of the now united Colony were in existence before, but it must be remembered that those elements were subject to different laws, to different financial systems, to a different form of government, and to a policy affecting them in a manner wholly distinct from their existing condition when united into one accordant whole.

5. There is, however, one point of comparison which can be more justly made now than hereafter, as immediately showing whether union has operated beneficially or otherwise in reducing the cost of the government of the country.

6. This can only be done by going back to the statistics of the year 1865—the year immediately preceding union.

7. No just comparison can be adduced by taking the figures of 1866, for the reason, first, that union was accomplished during that year, and therefore only part of a year could be dealt with; and secondly, that union being confidently anticipated to take place during that year, the circumstances of neither Colony were strictly such as they were in 1865, when union itself even being problematical, each Colony made its own arrangements and carried on its own government independently and entirely without reference to a change, the period of which it was impossible to fix.

8. In the year 1865, it will be found that the sum of 24,308*l.* was expended for the civil establishments of Vancouver Island, and 37,165*l.* for the maintenance of those of British Columbia, making a total of 61,473*l.*

9. In 1867, for the same service for the united Colony the cost is 30,300*l.*

10. Thus it will be seen that in the cost of the government of the United Colony of British Columbia, in 1867, an absolute reduction has taken place of 31,173*l.*, or in other words the country was, in 1867, governed not only at a saving of the whole cost of the civil establishments of Vancouver Island in 1865, but in addition at a saving of nearly 7,000*l.* on the civil establishments of British Columbia during that year as a separate Colony.

11. These are results which I believe are but little known, and certainly seem to be little appreciated.

12. It is true that there is less population now in the country than in 1865, but the difference when fairly considered will be found but little to affect this question.

The extent of territory is the same. The people are scattered over its length and breadth now as then. Individual groups may be smaller, but the same or very nearly the same necessities exist for the preservation of life and property and for the maintenance of peace and order. Wherever reduction on account of decrease of population could be made with safety, it has been carried out, but after all it has only amounted to the saving of the salaries of two magistrates and a few constables. One breach of the peace resulting from inadequate provision for its maintenance might cost the Colony more than the pittance saved. For instance, during 1867 an emeute at Cariboo resulted in an outlay, to restore order, of over 1,700*l.* Had the force of constables at the magistrate's disposal been larger, the whole affair would in all probability never have occurred.

13. The reduction in the cost of the civil establishments of the country may therefore principally be attributed to amalgamation of offices and duties, brought about by arrangements arising out of union.

14. The estimated white population of the Colony in 1867 is 10,000. In 1865 the united white population of the two Colonies was estimated at 12,000.

15. There is another question of interest which naturally arises from a consideration of the altered circumstances of the territory. If the public burden has been so much lightened by the decrease in the cost of government has any change taken place in the rate of taxation?

16. This question of taxation is necessarily a most difficult one to determine. So many extraneous circumstances, so many varying incidents are mixed up with it, that, at the best, any result arrived at must be taken as more or less inconclusive. However, I trust, I shall at least be able to show that there is substantial ground for asserting that union has resulted in a considerable decrease of the individual contributions of the people, although opinion may possibly differ as to the actual amount of that decrease.

17. In the two Colonies, in 1865, there was raised by actual taxation, in round numbers—

In Vancouver Island - - - -	33,052
In British Columbia - - -	108,380
making a total of - - - - -		141,432
In 1867, in the United Colony, the sum of - - -		86,602
or a reduction on 1865 of - - - - -		54,830

18. The diminution of population creating a falling off in the revenue does not account for the difference. The consumption may be taken to be proportionately the same.

The country was not more impoverished in 1867 than in 1865. In short the extraneous circumstances affecting this question may fairly be treated as alike in both years. Therefore it follows that in the year 1867 the public burdens were lighter than in 1865.

19. For instance, taking the number of the white population simply as a standard and as a matter of comparison, it will be found that in 1865 the taxes raised give 12*l.* per head of the white population. In 1867, 8*l.* 10*s.* Other things then being equal, here is an absolute reduction of taxation in 1867, after union, of 3*l.* 10*s.* per head over 1865, before union,—more than one fourth.

20. And this, I believe, is the conclusion as nearly approaching the truth as it is possible to approach it in a question of this character. The average rate of taxation per head during 1867, since union, was less by more than one fourth of its amount antecedent to union.

21. I have taken the white population simply as a standard of comparison, and it must not be assumed for one moment that the whole revenue is contributed by them, or that in 1865 they paid, per head, 12*l.*, or in 1867, 8*l.* 10*s.*, by way of taxation. What the exact proportion may be it is impossible to determine: It may not be very much more than one-half of this sum. It must be remembered that the native besides the white population are large consumers of dutiable goods, and also that there is not a small consumption of dutiable goods by transient visitors from the neighbouring American territory, and by the crews of ships calling at the ports of the Colony.

In 1867, too, the contribution to the revenue by the native population must very largely exceed that of 1865. In 1867 the whole native population of Vancouver Island are included in the consumption to a far greater extent than in 1865, for in that year the revenue being raised by direct taxation, and no customs duties being levied in Vancouver Island, the native population in their staple articles of consumption to a considerable degree escaped taxation. Now under the altered financial system the native of Vancouver Island contributes to the revenue equally with the white man in proportion to his consumption.

22. In viewing this question of taxation it must also be borne in mind that so far as the white population of the Colony is concerned it is principally an adult population. The number of children bears no proportion to the average of an older community.

23. And there is still this further to be explained. The amount of revenue contributed by the people to the general government, as herein quoted, is almost the entire amount of the public burden. With two exceptions only, there are throughout the entire Colony no municipal governments levying and collecting local taxes, and in the case of these two exceptions the local revenue raised is so small as to be almost insignificant.

24. The yield of gold during the year is a matter not affected by union, for the mines of Vancouver Island have not as yet realized the expectations formed of them. The estimated export of gold from British Columbia during 1865 was 579,000*l.*, in 1866 600,000*l.*, and in 1867 700,000*l.* The actual export is probably much larger than this in each year, for it is impossible to ascertain what portion of the yield may be carried out of the Colony on the persons of individual miners. The data, however, from which the above figures are compiled is the same in each case, and therefore they may be taken as bearing a fair relative proportion to each other. Notwithstanding the population was less in 1867 than in 1865 and 1866, still the yield of gold was greater. The number of miners engaged was about the same as the preceding year, viz., 3,000. This gives the very large average earning per head of 233*l.*, a result, I believe, not to be equalled by any other mining country in the world.

25. I am not aware that there are any other really useful and interesting points to which, in forwarding this Blue Book, I can call your Excellency's attention. Next year many other subjects will present themselves from which valuable statistics can be deduced.

26. In 1867 the Colony of British Columbia was certainly passing through a period of commercial depression. It was, however, not singular in that respect; local causes may have enhanced the depression, but it was by no means entirely attributable to them. Other countries besides British Columbia suffered during that year, and what affected one was not without its effect upon the other. But, notwithstanding, towards the close of the year trade in British Columbia was found to be upon a more secure and substantial basis than had ever before prevailed. A more legitimate business was done. There was less of speculation, and bad debts were reduced to almost a minimum. People had begun to discover that it was not alone from the produce of the gold mines that they should seek to extract a living. The general producing qualities of the country had consequently become more developed, more permanent settlement had taken place, and, in short, at the close of the year a more hopeful feeling pervaded all classes than had been experienced since 1863.

27. The elements of wealth are to be found within the Colony to an almost unprecedented degree. It rests with its people whether this wealth shall continue dormant, or shall bear fruit to the building up of a rich and flourishing country.

I have, &c.

No. 6.

SIERRA LEONE.

No. 6.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir A. E. Kennedy, C.B., to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

(No. 69.)

My Lord Duke, Government House, Sierra Leone, June 19, 1868.

1. I have the honour to transmit the duplicate Blue Book of Sierra Leone for the year 1867.

2. As I did not administer the government for any portion of that year your Grace will not expect me on the present occasion to offer any detailed remarks.

Revenue.

3. The state of the revenue is satisfactory, notwithstanding wars and disturbances of some years standing in neighbouring territories, which have affected trade injuriously to a serious extent.

4. The revenue for 1867 amounted to 65,522*l.* 0*s.* 7¼*d.* against 62,263*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* in 1866.

Expenditure.

5. The estimated expenditure for 1867 was 53,058*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.*, while the actual expenditure reached 68,638*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* It must, however, be remarked that the cost of maintenance of the colonial steamer was not included in the estimate.

6. I transmit detailed returns showing the amount of revenue received at Sierra Leone for the years 1866 and 1867, and returns showing the difference between estimate and expenditure for the year 1867, with comparative statement of the same.

Debt.

7. The Colony may be stated to be free from debt.

Public Works.

8. The expenditure on works, finished and unfinished, amounted to 5,640*l.*, and a further serious outlay will be required to renew or repair public buildings, the majority of which are in a state of dilapidation.

Pensions.

9. Pensions have largely increased, and a further increase must be anticipated to remunerate past services in a climate such as this.

Education.

10. I refrain from offering any information beyond what the statistical tables supply, your Grace having recently sent an experienced school inspector from England, who has ere now reported to your Grace. There is great room and necessity for improvement, and an eager desire among all classes to avail themselves of a better and more uniform system of education.

General remarks.

11. The general condition of the Colony may be regarded as satisfactory.

12. The people are progressive, loyal, and contented. The neighbouring chiefs and their subjects have made great advances in civilization and intelligence. I observe remarkable changes in this respect since I administered this government fourteen years ago.

13. The Sherbro river and country was then little known or appreciated; when I (among the first white men) visited and examined it fifteen years ago, it was a stronghold of slave dealers and one of the principal marts on the coast. The sale of slaves is now unknown there.

14. At "Bendoo," the spot where I first landed, was a barbarous stockade, bristling with rusty guns, and garrisoned by a fierce and formidable horde of savages; on this spot now stands a decent church, where I lately heard the service performed with as much reverence and propriety as in any parish church in England.

15. A "Porrah bush," where pagan rites were performed and human sacrifices were offered up, adjoined the stockade. The "Porrah bush" has disappeared with the stockade, and in its stead I saw a flourishing crop of sugar cane growing.

16. Plain facts such as these express more forcibly than words the great blessing of British rule over this hitherto benighted country, and ought to satisfy the most sceptical that our expenditure of life and treasure has not been all in vain.

17. The people are only now awakening to know and feel the great boon which England has conferred upon them. Notwithstanding the sad neglect and delay in placing the means of education within the reach of the people, and the wrong direction often given to philanthropic efforts, they have advanced in a remarkable degree.

18. When I formerly administered this government there was, I believe, but one coloured minister of the Anglican church in the Colony; there are now eighteen ordained and educated native clergymen of the Church of England alone in this Colony, many of them the sons of liberated Africans, who by their example and teaching are rapidly leavening the whole mass. These gentlemen are mainly supported by the voluntary contributions of their congregation and the public.

19. Our settlement at "Bulama" at the mouth of the "Jeba" and "Bulola" rivers is admirably situated for the development of commerce and the spread of civilization.

20. The great want which strikes a common sense and impartial observer is that of a better class of men to carry out the beneficent views of Great Britain,—a want that can only be supplied by making this branch of the public service more honourable and more attractive.

21. Men of character and capacity will never be found to serve in this climate for the poor pittance which most of the public servants receive, with little chance of promotion and without hope of removal to a better climate. Such conditions are calculated to discourage and demoralize most men.

22. There is an ample field for the exercise and employment of the energies and talents of able men in Her Majesty's settlements on this coast, and all the failures and disasters which have occurred are traceable to the false economy of employing cheap officers.

23. The large and increasing commercial interests alone demand more care and ability than have hitherto been brought to bear upon them.

24. I was conveyed to this coast in 1852 in the first commercial or cargo steamer which ever visited it (the "Forerunner"). The same enterprising company now run two steamers monthly with mails, cargo, and passengers. They are so unequal to carry the increasing produce from the coast that a third steamer per month is about to be put on the line; and I entertain no doubt that but a short time will elapse before there are first-class weekly steamers from England.

25. The death of the old inveterate and influential slave-dealing chiefs, which cannot be far distant, will inaugurate a new era in industry and commerce.

26. These men, long inured to war, turbulence, and man-stealing, can never be expected to adapt themselves to the new circumstances which the abolition of the slave trade has brought forth.

27. The slave trade is undoubtedly at an end, and never can revive till a new market for them can be found.

28. When the remaining slave-dealing chiefs die out I apprehend a large portion of our naval force may be withdrawn for all purposes save the protection of trade.

I have, &c.

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT of the Estimated and Actual Expenditure of the Colony for the year 1867.

No. 1. Salaries, Fixed.—Several of the officers being on leave of absence during the year, and only half pay being drawn by the acting officers, makes a difference between the amount estimated and that expended. No account has been furnished by the agents general showing what amount of pay has been issued to officers in England.

No. 2. Salaries, Provisional and Temporary.—This excess is occasioned by extra clerks being employed in the following departments,—Secretary's Office, Registrar General's Office, Printing Establishment, and Police Office.

No. 3. Allowances.—This increase is to be attributed to an allowance of 5*s.* per diem being granted to the police magistrate in charge of the mountain district for forage for two horses.

No. 4. Contingencies.—The following departments, viz., Secretary's, Treasurer's, Printing, Auditor's, Judicial, Educational, Medical, Gaol, and Managers, having drawn this year much under the amount estimated will explain the reason of the difference.

No. 5. Pensions, Retired Allowances, and Gratuities.—With the exception of 50*l.* granted to the widow of the late manager, Vincent, only 143*l.* 14*s.* 3*d.* has been expended in the Colony under this head. The balance is for pensions paid in England, of which no account has been rendered to the treasury by the Crown agents.

No. 6. Revenue Services ex. of Establishment.—This excess it chiefly caused by an allowance to the commissioners for settlement of claims to Crown lands at British Sherbro.

No. 7. Administration of Justice ex. of Establishment.—The sum of 100*l.* having been granted to Captain Bravo, the commissioner of the supreme court, who sat during the absence of Chief Justice Carr, will explain the reason of an increase under this head.

No. 8. Ecclesiastical ex. of Establishment.—An extra grant of 100*l.* to the native pastorate, and a grant of 50*l.* to the church at Sherbro, will account for this increase.

No. 9. Education ex. of Establishment.—Out of the amount voted to be at the disposal of the board of education, only 40*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* was drawn previous to its suspension, 120*l.* was granted to the C. M. Society and native pastorate schools, 100*l.* to the Wesleyan Mission Schools, 25*l.* to Lady Huntingdon's School, and 10*l.* as prizes to the grammar school.

No. 10. Hospital ex. Establishment.—The decrease between the amount voted and that expended is to be attributed to fewer patients being admitted into the hospital.

No. 11. Police and Gaols ex. Establishment.—The amount expended for clothing for the police has been very small this year. There has also been a decrease in the amount for subsistence of prisoners in the districts. The gaol items have been much under the estimate.

No. 12. Charitable Allowances.—The amount under this head, a "Grant towards the relief of the poor of this Colony," is drawn quarterly, and disbursed by the colonial chaplain. It has, however, not been customary to send to the treasury a return showing who are the recipients of this charity.

No. 13. Rent.—The amount of rent voted for the government schools, 130*l.*, had not all been drawn out up to the end of the year. The item for police barracks, under which is borne rent for the manager and sub-collector at British Sherbro, is under the amount estimated.

No. 14. Transport.—The increase under this head is caused by amounts paid for passages of managers, police, and others to and from Bulama, Sherbro, Isle de Loss; also for oxen-men to and from Madeira.

No. 15. Conveyance of Mails.—Out of the amount voted only 84*l.* has been paid for the conveyance of the mail between Freetown and Sherbro.

No. 16. Works and Buildings.—Under this head 3,700*l.* was voted for general repairs, &c., and 2,000*l.* for Government House. Out of the former item 3,613*l.* has been expended, viz., articles purchased, 1,354*l.*; pay of mechanics, 1,761*l.*; pay of sawyers, 80*l.*; pay of oxenmen, 208*l.*; board of oxenmen, 4*l.*; cattle provender, 77*l.*; oxen imported, 55*l.*; repairs at the Cape House and in the districts, 49*l.*; and a small amount for coal and sundries. 916*l.* for the purchase of pine boards appears to be the only item defrayed out of the 2,000*l.* voted for Government House.

No. 17. Roads, Streets, and Bridges.—This large increase is to be attributed to many bridges requiring repairs in the districts, in making new roads and bridges at British Sherbro, and to the purchase of materials and pay of mechanics and labourers.

No. 18. Miscellaneous services.—The increase under this head is owing to 230*l.* 5*s.* 3*d*, paid for costs and charges in the case of Rolet v. The Queen for customs seizure.

No. 20. Aborigines.—The amount spent for this service has been considerably under the estimate, rents and customs 309*l.*, board and lodging 108*l.*, presents 122*l.*, education of sons of native chiefs at the grammar school 108*l.*, and a grant of 30*l.* to the Pongas mission school.

No. 19. Advances.—Nothing is estimated for under this head, as the amounts advanced are afterwards repaid.

No. 21. Drawbacks and Refund of Duties.—Not estimated for. Out of this amount 69*l.* was for refund of duty from the customs.

No. 22. Remittances.—Not in estimate. This amount has been sent to the agents general to meet expenses incurred by them on account of the Colony. No account has been sent to the treasury showing how it has been disbursed.

No. 23. Repayment of Deposits.—Not estimated; this is chiefly from the amount deposited on account of the Wilberforce Testimonial.

No. 24. Colonial Steamer.—Not on the estimate; the "Corra Linn" not having arrived out when it was prepared for 1867.

No. 25. Wilberforce Testimonial.—This being a grant of Council after the estimate was passed, it could not appear in it.

On comparison of the estimate for 1867	53,058
with expenditure for same year	68,638
there will be shown a difference of	15,580

in excess of disbursement over estimate.

This difference of 15,580*l.* between the estimate and expenditure for this year arises from nothing having been estimated for the following services: Advances, Drawbacks and refund of Duties, Remittances, Repayment of Deposits, Colonial Steamer, and Wilberforce Testimonial, as per remarks Nos. 19 and 21 to 25. But on comparing the revenue with the expenditure, viz.:—

Revenue	65,522
Expenditure	68,638
there is only an actual excess of	3,116

And had the bonds, as per remark No. 1 of Comparative Statement of Revenue, been paid prior to 31st December this deficiency would in a great measure I think have been covered.

SIERRA LEONE.

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT of the Revenue of Sierra Leone for the years 1866 and 1867.

No. 1. Customs.—This deficiency is to be attributed to the new ordinance which gave six months to pay the bonds instead of three months as before, consequently bonds which would have fallen due before 31st December were not paid until after that date.

No. 2. Licenses.—This difference is owing to fewer wholesale and retail licenses for spirits being taken out in Freetown, although there has been an increase in the rural districts. Marriage licenses have been fewer this year, but there has been an increased number of boat and canoe licenses issued, and additional auctioneers and pilot licenses.

No. 3. Rents ex. Lands.—The rents of the general markets have continued the same as those of last year. There has been a falling off in pound fees, which is to be attributed to the effects of the last cattle ordinance, but an increase from rents of pews in St. George's Cathedral (some back amounts having been paid up) and also from factories.

No. 4. Taxes.—There has been a decrease in the amount of house and land and road taxes from Freetown, and house and land tax from Bulama, but an increase from the rural districts of the Colony, although no road tax appears to be collected from the 1st eastern and a small amount from the mountain districts.

No. 5. Fines, Forfeitures, and Fees of Court.—A slight increase of fees in the new court of summary jurisdiction. Also of fines and fees from the supreme court, the former imposed on jurors for non-attendance. A decrease of police fines and fees for Freetown, but increase of the same in the rural districts. Very few claims to grants of lands has caused a falling off in fees from the land commissioner's office. The registrar general's fees are very nearly the same as last year, but there has been an increase in fees from the sheriff's department. There has been an increase of stoppages of pay imposed on subordinate officials for neglect of duty and disobedience of orders.

No. 6. Fees of Office.—Only five grants for land have been issued this year.

No. 7. Land Sales.—This amount is chiefly derived from sale of lots in the new burial ground. This year the first sale of land in British Quiah for 41 acres was effected.

No. 8. Sale of Government Property.—A larger quantity of condemned government stores sold. Also oil drippings from the Cape light house.

No. 9. Reimbursement in aid of Government Expenses.—This increase to be attributed to more soldiers being in civil confinement. There has been a smaller amount paid for convict labour from the public. School fees and repayments on account of Crown agents are nearly the same as last year.

No. 10. Miscellaneous Receipts.—The amount of 480*l.* on account of the "Corra Linn," paid by the Crown agents occasions an increase under this head, but there has been a smaller amount received on account of tithes from the rural districts.

No. 11. Hospital Stoppages.—Fewer liberated Africans have been admitted into the colonial hospital this year.

No. 12. Advances repaid.—This is for sums which have been advanced to district managers, surveyor, and others, and accounted for. The amount advanced and repaid this year is within 10*l.*

No. 13. Postage.—The establishment of the bi-monthly mail has caused an increase in the number of letters sent to and from England.

No. 14. Deposits.—This head of service is very uncertain, the amount this year is chiefly from a deposit of 756*l.* on account of the Wilberforce Testimonial, and 400*l.* lodged in the chest by one Harry Thomas.

No. 15. Parliamentary Grant.—Governor Blackall being absent on leave, half salary was drawn by the officer administering the government.

No. 16. Special Receipts.—This head of service was introduced into the accounts in 1866, but the revenue derived from that source should have been carried to "Miscellaneous Receipts."

No. 17. Colonial Steamer.—The revenue under this head is received from the commissariat on account of the parliamentary grant for the steamer "Corra Linn."

The total amount of revenue for 1867 appears to be in excess of that for 1866, but deducting the amount paid for the colonial steamer it will be seen to be less. I do not think, however, that the actual revenue has been less, as the new ordinance connected with the customs, as per remark No. 1, prevented many bonds which would have fallen due under the old system being paid into the treasury until some time after the expiration of the year.

Revenue and Expenditure.

	£	s.	d.
The revenue of 1867	21,641	5	10
exceeded that of 1866	15,781	14	9
by	5,859	11	1

This increase arises mainly from augmented duties on wines and spirits and on tobacco, and from an ad valorem duty on imports, a considerable increase having at the same time taken place in the quantity of duty paying articles imported. These duties were imposed to remedy a falling off in the revenue, and were in operation during a part only of 1866, but during the whole of 1867. Accordingly, in 1867 the duty on spirits produced 3,211*l.* as against 2,046*l.* in 1866, on wine, 1,864*l.* as against 676*l.*, on tobacco, 1,995*l.* as against 786*l.*, and the ad valorem duty, 2,102*l.* as against 716*l.*

The export duty on ground nuts collected in 1867 also exceeded that in 1866 by 627*l.*

The expenditure of 1867, 18,664*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.*, exceeded that of 1866, 17,681*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, by 982*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* The accounts of 1867 are charged with an extraordinary item of 2,528*l.* 6*s.*, the price paid for a building to give accommodation for the offices of the various Government departments and now used for that purpose. By the purchase the Colony is relieved from a rent of 200*l.* a year formerly paid.

Imports and Exports.

The trade and production of the Colony show a considerable increase. The value of the imports and exports of the two years under comparison were as follows, viz.:—

United Kingdom	104,367	8	0
France	37,565	13	0

Legislation.

The principal legislative measures of 1867 were—

1. "An ordinance to amend the law of evidence," incorporating in the colonial code the provisions of certain recent imperial Acts on this subject;
2. "An ordinance to amend the laws relating to jurors and juries;" and
3. "An ordinance to regulate procedure in the court of civil and criminal justice."

The two latter are designed to facilitate the working of the new system of administering justice introduced in 1866. As the period during which the system has been in operation is too short to afford any reliable results I purposely refrain from making any remarks regarding it.

Works and Buildings.

The bridges in the Combo district having fallen into decay, mainly through the ravages of the white ant on the timber of which they are constructed, it has been necessary to renew them. They are not yet finished, and will require a large outlay in 1868 to complete them.

At the Oyster Creek ferry (which is maintained by the Colonial Government) a toll on passengers and cattle used formerly to be levied. This was remitted during the administration of my predecessor. But, as I consider it a most reasonable impost, I have directed the toll to be collected as formerly. It is willingly paid by the people, and its product will not only relieve the colonial chest from a heavy annual demand for the maintenance of the ferry, but also return a surplus to the revenue of the colony.

The enlargement of the church, which was undertaken, during my temporary absence, by the acting administrator, will I fear entail a heavy charge on the Colonial funds. The enlargement, however, was much required; and the church, which was very small and uncomfortable, is greatly improved.

Extensive repairs on Government House will soon be inevitable, the whole of the woodwork being decayed and destroyed by white ants, as well as the furniture.

In all public works undertaken here the cost of labour is a heavy item, amounting often to two thirds, or near as much as three fourths of the whole. This arises not only from the comparatively high rate of wages, but also from the idle and dilatory habits of most of the native workmen. The evil seems only capable of being met by an efficient and trustworthy superintendence.

Schools.

The school of the Established Church has, I regret to state, been much neglected; but I have placed the same amount on the estimates (100*l.*) as has been given to the Wesleyan and Roman Catholic schools, which will enable a schoolmaster, books, &c. to be provided.

The Roman Catholic and Wesleyan schools are numerously, but not regularly, attended.

Military.

The left wing of the 1st West India Regiment is stationed at Bathurst, consisting of 7 officers, 12 serjeants, 3 drummers, and 183 rank and file, from which a detachment is stationed at Cape St. Mary's, consisting of 1 officer, 1 serjeant, and 19 men, and one detachment of 1 officer and 12 men at Port Bullen.

There are no regular troops now stationed at McCarthy's Island.

Gaol.

The gaol at Bathurst has been repaired. It is clean and well ventilated, and the accommodation fully suffices for present requirements.

General.

The health of the community has been generally good throughout the whole year.

The crop of ground nuts, the staple article of exportation, has been exceptionally large, during this as well as the preceding year, and trade has been, on the whole, flourishing.

In the habits of the native population there is yet much room for improvement. Even among those who have been most closely and longest in contact with European usages and ideas there is a want of regular and steady industry, a carelessness and improvidence, lying, thieving, and in many cases an addiction to intemperance and other vices of civilization much to be lamented. But it would be unjust to others were I to refrain from adding that there are many persons to whom the above remarks (which I regret to be obliged to make) are no way applicable, and who on the contrary are intelligent, sober, and industrious.

Of less immediate, but of the wider concernment than anything relating to the Colony, is the welfare of the numerous tribes who inhabit the surrounding countries. I am induced to go thus beyond the subject of this report for the purpose of calling attention to what must be regarded as a most serious hindrance to the civilization of Africa. I mean the wars which are of almost constant occurrence between hostile tribes, or combinations of tribes banded together against a common enemy.

In these wars, life is sacrificed, the means of subsistence is destroyed, cultivation is neglected, industries are paralysed, disease and starvation follow. Europeans find the hazards of the trade become so great as not even its large profits serve to counterbalance.

Although nothing can put a stop to these wars but the gradual introduction of civilized and peaceful habits, I cannot but consider that it would tend towards lessening their frequency were arms and ammunition not so freely introduced as an article of commerce by European traders among the natives, as is the case at present.

And I go to the length of urgently recommending that if practicable their importation should be absolutely prohibited.

It would be necessary however that any such measure should be arranged and carried out in concert with the French Government; since no restrictions that the British Government could impose in the Gambia would be of any real avail unless a similar course of policy were pursued in the French settlements on the Senegal north of the Gambia, and Casamanza on the south.

But if the French would concur, and heartily co-operate with us, in suppressing this most pernicious traffic, I think an important step would be gained towards relieving Africa from probably the greatest curse by which she is now afflicted.

Nancy Rendall.—Charged under the Vaccination Ordinance with refusing to have her child vaccinated.

Hezekiah Stapleton, duly sworn, states "I am one of the colonial vaccinators. On the 1st of the present month I went into prisoner's yard and asked her if her child was vaccinated, and she said no, but it could be done; but afterwards, through the mother's persuasion, refused, and sent the child somewhere out of the way; and that example prevented other people from having their children vaccinated."

Mrs. Rendall cautioned, that the vaccination ordinance must be complied with under penalties, and dismissed for the time.

No. 5.

EXPLANATION of the difference between the number stated in Return No. 1 and the aggregate of the numbers 2, 3, and 4.

1. The number of births during the year were 118, and the deaths 66, leaving a difference of 52 children.

2. The aggregate number vaccinated during the year exceeded the number of births by 145, in consequence of the vaccination of the latter number of grown persons.

3. The difference between the number of births and the number of children in respect of whom penalties or sentences of imprisonment have been inflicted, under the second section of the Local Ordinance of the 2d April 1856, is 117.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir A. E. Kennedy, C.B., to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

(No. 57.)

My Lord Duke, Government House, Sierra Leone, July 15, 1868.

I have the honour to transmit herewith the Blue Book of the Settlement of the Gold Coast for the year 1867, accompanied by the Administrator's Report thereon.

I trust that, considering the adverse circumstances with which the Administrator has had to contend, your Grace will consider the general statement satisfactory.

I have, &c.

(No. 63.)

Sir, Government House, Cape Coast, June 11, 1868.

I have the honour to enclose to your Excellency the Blue Book of this Settlement for the year 1866, with a report thereon.

2. Your Excellency may not be aware that no Blue Book has been sent from this Settlement for several years. I therefore crave indulgence for the imperfections of the one now forwarded, and trust to be able to furnish much fuller information in next year's report.

I have, &c.

His Excellency Sir A. E. Kennedy, C.B., Governor in Chief.

Report of the Blue Book of the Gold Coast 1867.

Taxes and Duties.

The taxes and duties levied in 1867 are similar to those levied in preceding years.

Revenue and Expenditure.

The revenue of 1867 differs but little from that of 1866, although the latter is increased by a large receipt on account of "special payments" for sundry services. In reality the receipts for 1867 show a decided, though moderate improvement.

The expenditure for 1867 is less than that for 1866, the amounts standing thus:

	£	s.	d.
Expenditure 1866 - - -	11,589	15	7
Expenditure 1867 - - - -	10,993	5	3

Public Debt.

The debt to the Crown Agents amounts to 1,055*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.* on the 31st December 1867. As the convention of 5th March with Holland will probably shortly enable us to obtain a better revenue, and the parliamentary grant for this year exceeds that of last year by 1,000*l.*, this amount will be easily covered.

Military Posts.

The only habitable forts are Cape Coast Castle and Anamaboe, and Fort William, the others being more or less ruined. The two first-mentioned buildings are in tolerable repair, and the guns in good order.

Fort William, situate about 225 feet above the sea, shows an excellent light, visible about 20 miles in clear weather.

Public Works.

The only work worth noticing is the road to Akropong from Accra, a distance of 45 miles. This work is steadily progressing under the superintendence of the Basle Mission.

Legislation.

No ordinance of much importance has been passed, if we except Nos. 5 and 6, which contain provisions for 1868, and do not come into operation until that year.

No. 1 of 1867 was much required, and works very well, giving satisfaction and security to all in sales by auction.

Civil Establishments.

The changes that occur in this department on the Gold Coast are very numerous, owing to the constant and quickly recurring absence of Europeans, and the incapacity and dishonesty of the native employés.

There are no changes worthy of special remark.

The police are very inefficient, and require to be recruited from other than local sources. A radical change is in contemplation. The cost of the new scheme being probably about the same as heretofore.

I think the printing department should be separated from the chaplain's duties. It is at present very inefficiently performed. In fact the Colonial Secretary superintends it. Many good printers are to be obtained from Sierra Leone.

Pensions.

These remain the same as the preceding year, with the exception of two deaths. They are very small, and are given to old servants of the African company, and to emancipated slaves.

Population.

It is of course impossible to arrive at a correct estimate of this "item" in so large and unexplored a region. Competent judges assume 400,000 to be a close estimate. They can muster an army of about 50,000 well armed men, and are very clannish in their feelings. The European population suffered very much in 1867 from losses by sickness.

There is no system of registration, and very great obstacles are presented towards effecting one. The superstition of the natives throws great difficulties in the way of any such scheme.

Ecclesiastical.

The Wesleyan and Basle Missions work exceedingly well. The system of the latter is especially practical; and their settlements in the mountains of Aquapim are worthy of a visit. They combine practical with religious instruction, and to that end have work-shops and artificers, ranking as lay brothers in their stations. They have turned out many excellent workmen, and have erected many good buildings, such as schoolhouses and chapels throughout the eastern districts of Accra, Aquapim, and Croboe, to which their labours are confined.

Their coffee plantations and farms in Aquapim bring them in fair returns. But, in consequence of the war in Germany in 1866, many of their accustomed sources of contribution in that country and in Switzerland failed them, and plunged them into debt.

The Wesleyan system appears more popular with the semi-educated Gold Coast African, as not involving anything like manual labour, which is unfortunately at a discount with them. The missionaries do much good, however, and have a strong civilizing influence.

Education.

While the Wesleyan and Basle Missions have an excellent and successful system of schools the Government institutions are at a low ebb. The girls school has revived a little, but the boys school for the present does not exist, the master having been found so incompetent that it was necessary to dispense with his services. A suitable teacher will, if possible, be obtained this year from Sierra Leone.

Imports and Exports.

The imports and exports are very good, showing a considerable increase over former years.

The imports amount to - -	206,920
Those of 1861 amount to - -	162,970
Showing an increase of - - -	44,000 in seven years.

And the exports for similar periods show a steady increase, being in 1867 160,291*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* (not counting Dixcove, whence no returns were obtained), while in 1861 they amounted to 145,819*l.*

General remarks.

I am of opinion that the people have made marked progress towards civilization during the past ten years. Should the convention for an interchange of territory with Holland on the Gold Coast finally come into peaceful operation, and by obtaining good officers a thorough system of collection of revenue be instituted, the yearly revenue cannot in a year or two be estimated at less than 25,000*l.* per annum from all sources. Much will depend upon the political aspect of the settlements, but such a revenue would enable the local government to work much good. For road-making, prisons, district hospitals, &c. the want of funds is much felt; and means are also required for extending the influence of our Courts of Laws which at present are limited to Cape Coast and Accra.

The want of water in the dry season is a great drawback on the Gold Coast. The better classes rely upon their own tanks for a collection of rain water during the bad season; but the poor people are much distressed at times, and I have known water selling in Accra at 2½*d.* per gallon, a heavy sum to a poor native.

Crime in these settlements is principally confined to offences of a secondary class, such as larceny, panyarring, forgery, and cheating. Murder is rare (except in time of war). When it occurs, it is usually on provocation, or in consequence of a quarrel, and committed in heat. Wife murder appears common in the eastern districts. Human sacrifice, I regret to state, still exists in parts, but it is severely punished when practicable.

The standard of morality is low, and the vile "customs" of the natives, still existing, appear to have no object but drunkenness, riot, and dissipation. These "customs" take place on certain occasions, such as burial of the dead, &c. The most objectionable is the "yam custom" or "Black Christmas," which takes place in August, and at such seasons, unless restrained, the natives generally fight, and resorting to arms many deaths are the result. They are gradually being abolished in the towns of Cape Coast and Accra, and I trust will soon disappear from them for ever.

Agriculture remains still in a poor condition. The natives appear to have an insuperable objection to tilling the ground beyond what is absolutely necessary for their subsistence. A good deal of attention however is paid to the palm tree, but nature has been so bountiful in this respect that but little care is needed. Cotton, requiring steady labour and supervision, is quite neglected in Fantee, and but sparsely cultivated in the Eastern Districts.

LAGOS.

No. 9.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir A. E. Kennedy, C.B., to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

(No. 42.)

Government House, Sierra Leone,
October 3, 1868.

My Lord Duke,

1. I have the honour to transmit the Blue Book (in duplicate) for the Settlement of Lagos for the year 1867, with the Administrator's Report thereon, which shows a most satisfactory progress in the trade and revenue of the Settlement.

LAGOS.

2. This Settlement, but a few years since notorious as the stronghold of slave dealers on this coast, is rapidly becoming a place of commercial importance, and will by these unerring means disseminate the blessings of order and civilization among the surrounding tribes.

I have, &c.
(Signed) A. E. KENNEDY,
Governor in Chief.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,
&c. &c. &c.

(No. 60.)

Government House, Lagos,
September 14, 1868.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith the Blue Book for the year 1867. I regret that I have not been enabled to forward it sooner owing to my late absence from the Settlement when I visited your Excellency at Sierra Leone, together with a great pressure of other business which has compelled me to delay its transmission.

2. There are some peculiar circumstances connected with this Settlement which renders the establishment of the police force somewhat large for the number of its population. The inhabitants of the town and island of Lagos amount to 35,000, and the roughly estimated number of the rural population being about 75,000.

3. From the adjacent territories, possessing governments which exercise little or no control over the lawless portion of their population, this settlement is often visited by the scum of the inhabitants of these countries, who frequently come over in gangs for the purposes of theft and fraud; as an instance, I enclose copies of night report of police inspector furnished me only yesterday, by which your Excellency will observe, as I have above stated, that the Island of Lagos attracts to its shores migratory gangs of thieves who, tempted by its comparative wealth, endeavour to enrich themselves by plundering the property of its inhabitants. I have caused to be taken the number of persons who have crossed from the main land, at Ebute-Metta, to the wharf or landing place of Ebute-Ero, between the months of February and July,—they number 116,992; also those going from the said wharf at Lagos to the before-mentioned wharf on the main land during the same period,—they number 112,668. It is therefore apparent that by this single ferry alone 4,324 more people came into Lagos than the number who went out; but this is only one single ferry; to this number must be added those who come to and embark from the several wharves on the Island at which are landed passengers to and from Lagos to Porto Novo and the Western District, and to and from Lagos to Ikorodu (a point of departure to the interior and the Niger); also the markets of Ijebu and the Eastern District. From the great influx of strangers above enumerated at the one point, viz., Ebute-Ero, coupled with the rapidly enlarging dimensions of the building area of the town of Lagos, it is almost impossible to estimate what may be the extent to which the increase of the population may attain in a few years.

4. From the foregoing observations as well as the following tabular statement I think it will be apparent that while the wealth and population of the Settlement maintains its present onward tendency, the increase of crime may be considered not unproportionate to the increase of its population.

—	Police Court.			Chief Magistrate's Court.
	Felonies.	Misdemeanors.	Totals.	Offences against the Person.	Offences against Property.	Total.	Total Convictions.
1865 - -	149	321	470	19	48	67	537
1867 - -	276	647	923	9	53	62	985

5. It will be observed that our revenue is at present almost entirely derived from our customs dues, and that therefore the population have not yet been brought to feel the weight of direct taxation; but there can be no doubt that a very large amount of revenue may be raised from various sources in the course of a few years, but it will require to be gradually and judiciously introduced amongst a people unaccustomed even to the slightest system of direct taxation.

6. The customs revenue for the year 1867 amounted to 25,640*l.*, showing an increase over that of 1866 of 6,402*l.*; this addition may be accounted for by the increase of confidence in the Government of the Settlement, whose presence and beneficial action influence in a very great degree the continuance of peace in the immediate neighbourhood of its frontier, upon which peace and quietness the prosperity of the trade of Lagos in a very great measure depends; also to the increase of the exports in palm kernels and cotton, and to the late introduction of the groundnut and beni-seed trade. The following statement will demonstrate the increase of the trade in the articles above enumerated:

Customs Revenue, 1866 - - - -	19,237	4	6½
Do. do. 1867 - - - -	25,640	0	5
Increase - - - -	6,402	15	10½

Palm Kernels.

1865 - - - - - - -	2,664	15
1866 - - - - - - -	7,196	0
1867 - - - - - - -	13,619	0

Cotton.

	Cwts.	qrs.	lbs.
1863 - - - - - -	45	1	25
1864 - - - - - -	1,899	2	18
1865 - - - - - -	3,874	0	24
1866 - - - - - -	6,802	1	22
1867 - - - - - -	7,112	1	18

Beni-seed.

	Tons.	cwts.
1864 - - - - - - -	2	10
1867 - - - - - - -	298	10

The groundnut trade commenced here in 1866, when eight tons were exported. In 1867, 173 tons were exported. The introduction of these products in the export trade of the Settlement will eventually contribute largely to the increase of its revenue, as it will enable the merchants to engage themselves in the purchase of these articles during those months which had previously been dull and stagnant, the palm oil trade occupying only some six months of the year.

7. The following statement of the increase of imports and exports for the last five years will, I trust, be considered satisfactory.

Imports and Exports.

Year.	Imports.			Exports.
1863 -	171,146	13	6	153,341	7	3
1864 -	120,796	11	3	166,093	8	1
1865 -	114,284	5	7	175,636	1	2
1866 -	220,976	4	4	262,699	9	4
1867 -	321,977	19	10	513,157	18	3

The decrease of the imports in 1864 and 1865 was due to the disturbed state of the frontier, caused by the war among the adjacent tribes, still it must be observed that our exports continued steadily on the increase, even during that depressed period.

LAGOS.

1866 and 1867 present a steady increase in both imports and exports, and the present healthy and active state of trade, together with the quietness which prevails in the immediate neighbourhood of our frontier, leads me to anticipate that there will be no material diminution in the Return under this head for the following year.

8. In land sales an increase of 51*l.* 9*s.* is shown over that of 1866, very little having been effected in the selling of country Crown lands:

Revenue, 1866	64	1	0
Increase	51	9	0

9. Land Revenue.—Under this head is a decrease of 135*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* below that of 1866; this is partly in consequence of the unsatisfactory working of this department, which I have now removed to my own office. In next year's Report I trust to be enabled to show that the arrangement has been attended with a satisfactory result:

	£	s.	d.
Ditto 1867	119	5	0
Decrease	135	13	6

10. Rents exclusive of Lands.—Owing to a very limited demand for gunpowder and the remains of a large stock on hand, which had been imported in the years 1864 and 1865 to meet the demands from the interior by the tribes then at war, a less quantity has been stored, and consequently the revenue under this head has fallen below that of 1866, of 124*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*

	£	s.	d.
Revenue, 1866	241	15	11
Ditto, 1867	117	7	0
Decrease	124	8	11

11. Postage.—Under this head is shown an increase of 55*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* over that of 1866; this arose from the money order business which commenced in February 1867, with the United Kingdom and Sierra Leone; also the increased correspondence by the bi-monthly mails. The subjoined statement of the operation of the Money Order Office will show the ready appreciation of the public for the benefit of the accommodation thus afforded them; and the experience of the present year (1868) proves how largely the amount of the business of this branch may be expected to increase, money orders having been issued amounting to 14,227*l.*

Expenditure	96 3 4	109 2 3	95 17 4

N.B.—The decrease in the number of newspapers is caused by the publication of the local paper (the "Anglo African") having ceased at the end of 1865, and that of the "Iwe Irohin" having also ceased in consequence of the press of the latter paper having been broken up and plundered by the Egbas in October 1867 when the Christians were expelled from Abbeokuta.

N.B.—The Money Order business was only established in 1867 and the issues commenced on the 1st February. From 1st January to 4th September 1868, 1639 orders have been issued amounting to 14,227*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*

12. Licenses.—Under this head appears an increase of 69*l.* 10*s.* over that of 1866, owing to the increase of the retail of spirit licenses, and to more boats and canoe licenses having been issued.

Revenue, 1866 - - - - -	906	10	0

Ditto, 1867 - - - - -	133	17	11

14. Fines, Forfeitures, and Fees of Court.—Under this head is shown an increase of 279*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* over that of 1866, from a greater number of cases heard in the several courts within the Settlement.

Revenue, 1866 - - - - -	711	0	$6\frac{1}{4}$
Ditto, 1867 - - - - -	990	3	9
Increase - - - - -	279	3	$2\frac{3}{4}$

15. Parliamentary Grant.—An apparent decrease of 660*l.* shown under this head is to be explained by the balance of the grant due to this Settlement for 1865, and which was drawn for over and above the Parliamentary Grant of 1866.

16. Sale of Government Property.—Under this head is a decrease of 78*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* below that of 1866, occasioned by Calabar mats made in the gaol, smaller number being sold in consequence of the Government requiring these articles for public works, and from the sale of presents from native chiefs a less sum having been realized.

LAGOS.

17. Reimbursement in aid of Expenses incurred by Government.—An increase of 8*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.* over the previous year has arisen from fees received for the care of sick seamen admitted in the Colonial Hospital established in the latter part of 1867.

Ditto, 1867	48	10	4

18. Government Vessels.—Under this head is an increase of 319*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* over that of 1866, acquired by the services of the colonial steamer "Eyo," in towage of vessels, and the landing and shipping of goods and produce.

	£	s.	d.
Revenue, 1866	168	1	1
Ditto, 1867	487	5	7
Increase	319	4	6

19. The whole increase of revenue for the year 1867 over and above that of 1866 amounts to 6,158*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, viz.:

	£	s.	d.
Total Revenue, 1866	23,816	11	8¼
Ditto, 1867	29,974	13	11¼
Increase	6,158	2	3¼

20. In reporting the expenditure for the year 1867, I must observe that the items under this head are in many cases both exceptional and large, arising from the pressing wants which so frequently present themselves in a new and rapidly increasing settlement, as well as from sanitary measures which from time to time are brought to my notice and require immediate attention; added to which the laying out of certain portions of the town of Lagos in blocks of buildings (wherein fires have taken place) and separated by broad streets; is a measure imperative and admits of no delay, seeing that the demolition of houses damaged by fire must necessarily cost less than the pulling down of houses in a complete condition, and is consequently attended with less expense to the revenue. The increase of expenditure under the head of "Roads, Streets, and "Bridges," for 1867, is 2,192*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.* over that of 1866, of which was expended in

2. Part payment of a sum of 1,023*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*, incurred by a military expedition sent for the purpose of making roads through the Western District	863	2	4
3. Part payment towards the erection of a Custom House Pier; it has been completed and opened for traffic, at a cost of 817*l.* 15*s.*, which will be reimbursed to the Treasury by the 31st December 1869; the advantage of loading and unloading at this pier will make themselves apparent to the public, and it will after 1869 become a remunerative investment	419	12	4

A temporary building has been hired for this purpose, as from the state of the revenue it had been heretofore only possible to make provision for cases of extreme need.

26. Establishments.—It will be observed that there is an apparent decrease of 597*l.* under this head; but really this is not the case, part of the salaries and allowances due for the quarter ended 31st December not having been drawn until subsequent to that date.

27. Pensions, retired allowances, and gratuities.—The apparent decrease under this head of 222*l.* 10*s.* is also fictitious, part of the pensions due for the quarter ended 31st December not having been drawn until subsequent to that date.

28. Administration of justice exclusive of establishments.—The increase under this head of 25*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.* is caused from more inquests being held than in 1866.

29. Ecclesiastical.—The amount of 75*l.* was paid out of the sum of 100*l.*, granted by the administrator in Council toward the erection of a new church, in course of building by the Church Missionary Society.

30. Education.—The sum of 50*l.* was granted for the education of orphan children of slaves from the surrounding countries by the Administrator in Council. An excess of 6*l.* 18*s.* was spent under this head.

31. Police and gaols.—A decrease of 757*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* has been occasioned by the clothing and necessaries for the civil and armed police force for the year 1867 having been obtained from England, instead of being purchased in the settlement.

32. Conveyance of mails.—An increase of 45*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* is owing to the establishment of postal communication with—

34. Drawbacks and refund of duties.—Under this head is shown a decrease of 829*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.*, occasioned by the repeal of ordinances for allowing drawbacks on goods exported to Porto Novo.

35. Aborigines.—The increase of 610*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* arose as follows, viz.:

	£	s.	d.
1. Mission to Ibadan and Oyo whereby peace was secured to the surrounding country, and our trade continued undisturbed -	326	15	5
2. Part payment of mission to Dahomey to obtain release of Church Missionary Society's Catechist, "Doherty," and others - -	73	2	6

36. Repayment of loans.—One half of the loan of 500*l.* 0*s.* 7½*d.*, contracted in 1865, consequent upon the expenses incurred by the settlement in maintaining the blockade of the Egba territory prior to driving the Egbas from our frontier in 1865, was paid during this year. I may observe that the balance with all interest has since been paid off.

No. 11.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lieut. Governor Keate to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

(No. 133.)

My Lord Duke, Government House, Natal, December 9, 1868.

I have the honour to forward to your Grace the Blue Book for Natal for 1867, and to offer my excuses for its late transmission. Its compilation has again been retarded by the collection of the agricultural statistics, which are still, I fear, hardly sufficiently accurate to justify the expense and trouble they entail upon the colony. My absence in Basutuland, and subsequently the long and laborious session of the Legislative Council, prevented my giving earlier attention to the preparation of my Report upon it, which I now enclose. In it I have endeavoured to bring under review the whole period which has elapsed since the Blue Book for 1862 was sent home by Lieut. Governor Scott, no report upon the state and prospects of the colony having been made since that date until now.

I have, &c.

Report on Blue Book for 1867.

Revenue.

1. The financial period which I propose to pass in review, extending from the beginning of 1863 to the end of 1867, is of a striking character and well worthy of study.

2. The system on which the public revenue of Natal is raised has for its basis the customs duties upon imports. With the exception of a special impost falling exclusively upon the native population no other of the several heads of revenue specified in the schedule of taxes, duties, and fees contained in the Blue Book can be said to be in the nature of taxation imposing a general burden. They are for the most part charges which fall upon individuals in certain circumstances of their lives over which they have more or less control. The progress of the colony, therefore, as illustrated by the condition from year to year of its public income, can be clearly and very conveniently traced in the fluctuations of its customs revenue.

3. There are special reasons why this course should be adopted in examining the financial history of Natal. Its customs returns have been peculiarly affected by causes other than those which may be said to lead by a natural process to a rise or decline in receipts from this class of imposts.

4. In the report upon the Blue Book for 1862 a tabular statement was given exhibiting from 1844 to 1862 inclusive the shipping and trade of the Colony inwards and outwards, with the amount of customs dues collected. The following is a similar statement brought up to the close of 1867.

In the earlier years included in this return, that is between 1844 and 1858 inclusive, trade had been irregular and fitful, but in the succeeding years, from 1859 to 1863 inclusive, there was an advance as steady in process as it was remarkable in extent. The value of imports increased 160 per cent., that of exports 58 per cent.

5. During this latter period of five years the population had been augmented, though not largely, by immigration from England, Holland, and Germany, and by the introduction of coolies from India for employment in the cultivation of sugar. But this increase in producing power within the Colony is quite insufficient in itself to account for the advance mentioned. The import and export returns are the exponents, not only of the internal trade of the Colony but of its commercial relations with the interior, with the Orange River Free State, and the Trans Vaal Republic, which border upon it. It is mainly to the nature of this trade and the conditions under which it has been carried on that we must look for a solution of the problem.

6. The reputation which the Colony had been gradually achieving as a producer of sugar, coffee, and wool no doubt contributed to enhance its credit, but it is to external influences brought to bear upon the Colony in one shape or another rather than to the development of its own resources that its apparent prosperity at the close of 1863 is due.

7. Nor was this period the culmination or turning point of its fortunes. In 1863 the imports into the Colony were valued at 473,333*l.*, its exports at 158,565*l.* In 1864 the former had risen to 591,686*l.*, the latter to 220,267*l.* With the next year a decline began, which as regards imports has been, with a slight fluctuation last year, progressive, and rapidly so, up to the present time. The returns for 1867 give the value of imports at 269,580*l.*, less than half the amount at which they stood only three years before in 1864, and to which they had taken five years to advance. The exports, on the other hand, after falling concurrently with the imports in 1865 and 1866, recovered themselves, and at the close of 1867 reached the highest point they have attained to since the establishment of the Colony, viz., 225,671*l.* This circumstance is in itself sufficient to cast a suspicion of unreality and fictitiousness upon the trade which resulted for a succession of years in such inflated imports.

8. The credit which the Colony enjoyed in the period embraced between the years 1859 and 1863 had enabled its government to raise loans in the English market for carrying on works for the improvement of the harbour of Port Natal, and for introducing coolie labour from India. The expenditure of these funds no doubt contributed to some extent to swell the customs revenue. But this enhanced credit was the parent of a less healthy growth. The establishment of new and competing banks in number far beyond the requirements of the Colony, and of land and loan companies of various kinds followed quickly upon it. The ease with which money was obtained from these sources produced a system of speculative trade with the interior which while it lasted poured wealth into the public treasury in the shape of duties upon excessive imports.

9. Speculation in land grew up together with and kept place with that in trade. In the earlier days of the Colony the largest portion of its Crown lands had been granted away with lavish hands and was already in the possession of persons who held them, not for cultivation but for a rise in price. This of itself was an obstacle to real progress. Circumstances arose in 1864 to add to its evil effects. Proposals were made for constructing railways in Natal, and a belief sprung up that these if carried out would enormously enhance the value of land. Speculative sales commenced, estates passed rapidly from hand to hand and at prices apparently increasing, but resting solely on credit. To support these transactions an unprecedented demand for discounts arose. The banks, in order to meet it, not only made calls upon their shareholders but attracted depositors by raising the rate of interest they allowed upon deposits from 4 to 8 per cent. A sort of paper currency of deposit of title and mortgage deeds was created, for as each sale was effected money was raised upon it, not to pay for it, but to support further speculations in land or trade. Traders, speculators, and monetary institutions were thus sinking deeper and deeper into debt, but like the excessive imposts these dealings in land, while they lasted, had the effect of pouring money into the public treasury.

10. A demand for Crown lands naturally accompanied this increase, fictitious as it was, in the price of land. The revenue from land sales, which in 1863 had undergone a decline as compared with 1862 of 1,005*l.*, exhibited in 1864 a sudden rise of 6,412*l.* But these speculative conveyances of granted lands operated to the advantage of the revenue in a more direct manner. The transfer duties, which on an average of years may be said to have gone on increasing steadily at the rate of about 1,000*l.* per annum, showed in 1863 a sudden augmentation of 5,080*l.*, which was kept up with a further addition of 842*l.* in 1864.

11. It is clear that the state of apparent prosperity thus reached, and the rates of progress achieved thus far, could only be maintained by a continuance of the circumstances and conditions under which they were produced. It was necessary that there should be an influx of population from year to year by means of immigration from Europe, without which local consumption and the production of staples for export would languish; that the value of land should at least not diminish, and that trade with the interior should not cease to be active and remunerative.

12. With regard to the first condition I need only here remark that the stream of emigration from Europe has never been very strongly directed towards South Africa. A more rapid addition to the consuming and producing powers of the Colony would no doubt have alleviated the evils that afflicted it in the succeeding years from other causes, but it is not to any check or cessation in this respect that those evils are to be attributed.

13. At the end of 1863 and during 1864 the selling price of land was at its highest point, at from 7*s.* to 8*s.* per acre. At that time the mortgages registered in the office of the registrar of deeds amounted to about 800,000*l.* In the early part of 1865 the point was reached when this state of things could no longer be maintained.

14. Trade with the interior must always be uncertain in its character. It is a trade with a population in an unsettled state. It depends to some extent on the success of the hunter of wild animals, and it has to undergo a rivalry with the merchants of the neighbouring Cape Colony. In its natural and healthy condition this trade would merely represent the value of British manufactured goods taken in exchange for the wool, ivory, and feathers sent down from beyond the boundary of the Colony, a traffic suited to support a trading settlement rather than a powerful colony. Yet it was by ventures in this trade that the edifice of the prosperity of the Colony had been mainly built up.

15. These ventures were based upon and pushed forward by a most reckless system of credit. The cost of the goods supplied was represented on the one hand by the lands held in security for advances made by the monetary institutions of the Colony, while on the other the profits on the transactions themselves rested on no better foundation than the credit given to purchasers who were beyond the range of British law.

16. While this over-trading was at its height the functions of ordinary business were to a great extent superseded by forced auction sales. Such was the keenness of competition among the banks that separate bills passed by purchasers to auctioneers and by auctioneers to settlers for the same transactions were discounted with equal facility, the nature of the security tendered being but little regarded in either case.

17. Renewed hostilities between the boers of the Orange River Free State and the native tribes around them came in to add to the growing difficulties of the situation; the stock farmer up country became impoverished, trade even of the most legitimate kind was paralyzed, and to crown all the Courts of the Free State were closed, so that every hope of realizing, at least till a very distant day, outstanding claims was taken away.

18. The disasters which thus fell upon all who were engaged in what is called the Overberg trade were reflected upon every other interest. Unfortunately the banks and trust companies, which had either been established or whose operations had been enlarged during this season of speculative excitement, had not escaped the contagion of example. They had themselves in many instances become engaged and entangled in enterprises not within the range of their proper action, and had incurred liabilities out of all proportion to their capital. All, even those whose business was conducted most consistently with the ordinary principles of banking, fell into the fatal error of advancing money largely and lavishly on the security of lands whose selling price was measured, not by the value they had acquired from the industry of applied to them, but by sanguine anticipations of future possibilities which have not been justified by events. By a process easily traced and understood a large portion of the lands of the Colony have thus passed into the hands of companies and monetary institutions.

19. The embarrassments which about this time began to be felt by the mercantile classes in England and elsewhere influenced no doubt in some degree the commercial fortunes of Natal, and contributed to hasten, though they had but a remote share in producing, the catastrophe which ensued. In 1865 business came suddenly to a standstill, capital invested in goods and buildings became unremunerative, and in many cases a total loss. A rapid fall in the value of land succeeded; money, and no longer security, was asked for. The banks, while making heavy calls upon their shareholders on the one hand, brought pressure on the other to bear upon their creditors, many of whom were also shareholders. Several of these institutions, whose capital had come to be represented almost entirely by land, and other securities of a like nature which had suddenly ceased to be saleable or capable of realization, succumbed to the blow, and something very like a general insolvency ensued.

20. The revenue of the Colony, which as I have shown had been rapidly stilted up by the artificial aid of excessive imposts and speculative land sales, fell with still greater rapidity on the sudden withdrawal of these props. The customs returns for 1864, which may be called the last year of inflation, exhibit an increase in the quantity of every article imported, and give their total value at 591,686*l.* against 473,333*l.* for 1863. The total value of exports for that year, as compared with the previous year, stands also at an advance of no less than 61,700*l.*; but, in the articles which represent commercial dealings with the interior there is already a falling off. Spirits, sugar, cotton, and other items of colonial produce appear upon these Returns as exports for the first time, or at least for the first time in any appreciable quantities. The total value for the year is made up by the substitution of these for others on which the Overberg trade was based. The customs revenue was the highest yet yielded in any year. It reached 59,829*l.* against 47,213*l.* in the previous year.

21. In 1865 and 1866 the decline was very rapid. The value of land has gone on falling from that to the present time till it has reached the nominal price of two shillings and sixpence per acre, but it is in fact scarcely saleable. The debt on the land has in the meanwhile gone on increasing till it has risen, according to an estimate that may be taken as reliable, to 1,200,000*l.* Taking the land as the basis of securities there has evidently been an enormous depreciation of assets with a vast increase of liabilities.

22. In the amounts of imports and of the duties receivable thereon, there was a corresponding diminution. The value of the former fell in 1865 to 455,206*l.*, in 1866 to 263,305*l.* The revenue from customs in the same years declined respectively to 42,067*l.* and 29,362*l.* The general revenue of the Colony fell in an equal ratio. Its aggregate amount from all sources had reached in 1864 the large total of 152,242*l.* In 1865 it had already diminished to 105,104*l.* In 1866 it stood at 92,312*l.*

23. The year 1867, the statistics of which I am more particularly called upon to review, may be said to have exhibited stagnation rather than further progression in the downward course upon which the Colony had entered at the close of 1864. The extreme point of depression seemed to have at length been reached. In the value of imports there was indeed a slight improvement. They rose from 263,305*l.* to 269,580*l.* while the duties levied thereon produced 35,438*l.* against 29,363*l.* received in the previous year. This increase of yield, however, is considerably beyond the proportion which it should bear to the value of the importations. In the latter part of 1866 a law was passed subjecting many items to a higher scale of duties which came into operation in the month of July in the succeeding year. Goods in bond, and especially spirits, were taken out and put into consumption before the date of its coming into force so as to escape the augmented charges; and in the last six months of the year the returns were swelled by the imposition of the higher scale of duties. It can scarcely be said that this improvement in the customs revenue was the exponent, to any great extent, either of revived activity of trade or of increased consuming power in the population of the Colony. Had it been so, the result would have been reflected more fully upon the other branches of the public income. But the whole revenue for the year from all sources, after deducting items which swell the aggregate but are mere matters of account, reached no higher sum than 95,177*l.*, which is but 2,965*l.* in excess of that of 1866.

Expenditure.

24. The annual expenditure of the Colony during the years which in their revenual aspect I have thus endeavoured to pass in review is not less worthy of careful study. In 1862 the gross expenditure had amounted to 113,237*l.*, which in the report upon the blue book for that year is represented as being in excess of the gross revenue by a sum of 3,938*l.*, and to have been met out of the balance in the local Treasury. This was a casual excess only and there had been a like excess in the preceding year. In 1863 and 1864 the requirements of the Colony had been more than met, and the latter year closed with a balance in hand. The transactions of 1865 were the first that resulted in an actual deficiency.

25. The growth, culmination, and incipient decline of the revenue of the Colony, which have thus been traced, were accompanied, as was unavoidable, by a progressive increase of annual expenditure. It would be difficult now to draw a distinct line between those augmentations which were the natural fruit of the expansion of the Colony and those which it might have been possible, and if possible expedient, as judged by the light of subsequent events, to postpone. It is fair to say, with regard to the latter, that however burdensome upon its present resources the actual scale upon which the Government of the Colony is conducted it is by no means disproportionate to the extent and importance of the work to be done.

26. Already in 1861 the attention of the Legislature had been called to the inadequacy of the salaries paid to officers in the public service, but it was not till 1863 that any step was taken to increase them. In 1864 additions to the salaries fixed in the civil list schedule annexed to the Royal Charter were carried into effect amounting to 2,000*l.*, to other salaries to the extent of 1,413*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*, and new appointments were created whose united emoluments reached 1,116*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* Thus an augmentation of 4,529*l.* 9*s.* was made to the fixed establishments of the Colony. In the same year the outlay upon services other than establishments rose from 70,633*l.*, at which it stood in 1863, to 72,601*l.* This increase was pretty equally distributed among all the services. The total excess of expenditure over that of the previous year was about 6,497*l.*

27. In 1865 further additions to the cost of establishments were made in the following proportions: new appointments, 944*l.*; increase to salaries, 276*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* The services exclusive of establishments demanded an outlay of 100,800*l.*, being in excess of that of the previous year by 28,199*l.* The principal increase was in works and buildings, and in the maintenance and construction of roads and bridges. The main cause of the heavy charge for these services, which amounted together to no less a sum than 42,373*l.*, was the erection of a lighthouse on the Bluff at the Port, and the construction of the magnificent iron bridge over the Umgeni river near its mouth, which has been swept away by a disastrous flood during the present year. The seemingly prosperous condition of the revenue had induced the Government, under great pressure from without, to push on these works, and the resources of the Colony were strained to the utmost to allow of their completion. The total additional expenditure as compared with the previous year reached in 1865 29,419*l.*

28. Though the revenue of 1865 had failed by a sum of 12,058*l.* to meet these heavy expenses, again in 1866 the establishments of the Colony were enlarged. Additional salaries amounting to 1,220*l.*, were charged upon this branch of the public expenditure. This, however, was unavoidable. It was in this year that the county of Alfred, a tract of country ceded to the Crown some years before by the friendly chief Faku, was annexed to Natal. It became necessary, therefore, to make provision for placing a resident magistrate in the new district. The emoluments of this officer, and of his clerk and interpreter, together with those of a keeper and assistant keeper of the lighthouse, which was finished in the previous year, make up nearly the whole of the additions to establishments which the legislation of this year produced.

29. At this time but little more remained to be done to put all the establishments of the Colony on the footing which it was considered they ought to hold in relation to each other, and for the purpose of ensuring general efficiency of administration. But side by side with the augmentations of this year appear already some reductions. Abolitions of small offices were effected, which, though resulting in a saving of not more than 292*l.*, indicated at least that the state of the revenue had at length checked the action if it had not yet roused the alarm of the Government and the Legislature. The disbursements of the Treasury for other services fell short of those of 1865 by 17,423*l.*, but they were in excess of those for 1864 by 10,776*l.* The difference, however, was made up of the payment of arrears for certain services due for former years, chiefly for the conveyance of mails and for Colonial military allowances. The total expenditure of this year, as compared with that of the previous year, showed a decrease of 16,750*l.*

NATAL.

30. In 1867 the progress of augmentations of establishments was at length entirely arrested. Offices, chiefly of a minor kind, but including that of an assistant resident magistrate, were abolished, the emoluments of which amounted together to 1,018*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* The whole of this sum, however, was not saved to the public, for to allow of the extinctions of these offices re-arrangements of others had to be made, which, together with some small additional appointments in the country districts, diminished the reduction by 591*l.* 15*s.* The whole charge for establishments, whether under the Royal Charter, special laws, or annual votes, which in 1863 had stood at about 33,344*l.*, reached in 1867 about 39,196*l.*, and this, subject to casual changes, may be taken as the scale on which it is likely permanently to remain fixed for some time to come.

31. The outlay of the Government in 1867 out of general revenue on services other than establishments amounted to 72,806*l.* 14*s.* Of this 8,661*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.* was for public works, been less by 17,451*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* than the expenditure under that head in 1866. But to this sum of 8,661*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.* should be added a further sum of 6,325*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* charged to a loan for public works, making together 14,986*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* as the amount actually disbursed for buildings and roads in 1867, which is still less by 11,125*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* than what was appropriated to those purposes in the previous year. The whole expenditure of this year was less by 7,739*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* than that of 1866.

32. The example of the Cape Colony, which possesses an admirable force of mounted police organized on a peculiar footing, led the government of Natal in 1863, under great pressure from the Legislature, to form a like body on a small scale in this Colony. In the years under review the maintenance of this force, which was soon found to be more burdensome than useful, added to the expenditure of the Colony in the following proportions:—In 1863, 4,500*l.*; in 1864, 3,564*l.*; in 1865, 2,322*l.*; and in 1866, 1,865*l.* The corps was gradually disbanded, and by the end of 1866 it had dwindled from 30 to 6 men. In 1867 it only entailed upon the revenue a charge of 964*l.*

33. In the year 1865 a heavy and unforeseen expense was thrown upon the Colony in connexion with the disturbed state of its north-western border, where hostilities were on foot between the Basuto nation and the Orange River Free State. As an incident in this war a raid was made into Natal by a Basuto chief, named Letsoane, during which two or three kafirs were killed, one white man wounded, and a considerable number of cattle and horses carried off. A force, consisting of a troop of the Cape Mounted Rifles, four troops of local volunteer cavalry, and a small body of infantry, together with 2,000 armed Zulus, under the orders of the Secretary for Native Affairs, proceeded to the frontier. Of these the Rifles and about 1,000 Zulus, and subsequently the Natal mounted police, remained there for about 12 months. The cost of this expedition and demonstration amounted in the aggregate to about 10,000*l.* It was spread over the years 1865, 1866, and 1867, and under the name of special payments swelled the disbursements of those years by 7,474*l.*, 2,249*l.*, and 1,127*l.* respectively.

34. In these years, too, the sum paid as interest upon the loan raised upon debentures for prosecuting the harbour works of Port Natal and to the sinking fund for its redemption rose from 9,000*l.*, at which it stood in 1863, to 14,000*l.* in 1867; that in connexion with the loan for the introduction of coolies from 3,991*l.* in 1866 to 5,941*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* in 1867.

35. The close of the year 1867 found the Colony burdened, as a result of all these transactions extending over the years which I have passed in review, with an unfunded debt of 64,037*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* This aggregate is thus made up.

Deficit of	1865	£12,058 8*s.* 5*d.*

In a special session of the Legislature in the last months of 1866 a law was passed for raising a loan of 100,000*l.* for the construction of public works. A portion of this floating debt, amounting to 30,500*l.*, was by a subsequent amendment of that law in 1867 charged to the monies to be raised under it. This would have reduced the unfunded debt to 33,537*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* But means have not yet been provided by the Legislature for putting this law into operation, and the loan, therefore, remains at present unnegotiated.

36. These successive deficits have been met by borrowing temporarily from the Harbour Works and Immigration Funds, so that the debt is in fact one due by general to special revenue. But these funds have already been so far exhausted by this process that the execution of the purposes to which they are specially applicable must necessarily languish until a progressive and systematic repayment of the amounts drawn from them comes into operation.

37. What is very remarkable in the financial history of these years is, that while this increase of outlay was going on,—an increase in its nature more or less inevitable in all countries, especially young and growing countries, where the province of administration is constantly undergoing enlargement,—up to the very close of 1866 no attempt was made to multiply the sources of the public income. The elasticity of the existing revenue was looked to as sufficient for all purposes and all eventualities, and, as I have endeavoured to show, the circumstances of the time up to a certain date were such as to favour, and even produce this impression. The Legislation of the special session of 1866 did but little towards providing fresh resources. Increased duties upon failing imports, at a time when on the one hand local productions were increasing and on the other personal expenditure was diminishing, while the trade with the interior was at a stand still, were little likely to afford much assistance. Recourse to the obvious expedient of direct taxation, from which the white population of the Colony, except that portion of it which dwells in its two corporate towns and is subject to local rating, has hitherto been free, was in that session, if not entirely repudiated and discarded, at least postponed.

38. Nor did the succeeding session of 1867 produce other results. It was now more than ever to be regretted that the revenue had not been strengthened concurrently with the fresh burdens which were laid upon it, because, when at length its expansiveness ceased to be artificially stimulated, all classes of the community suffered more or less from the collapse which ensued, and there was naturally a great disinclination to impose fresh taxation upon them. An idea was eagerly caught at that all the steps which had been taken could be and ought to be retraced, that the amount of revenue realized at a certain date should be taken arbitrarily as that which the colony could afford to raise, and that the expenditure of the Government should be measured by this standard and not by the current exigencies of the day.

Civil Establishments.

39. It is probable that, however inadequate the footing on which the civil establishment of the Colony stood before it was raised in the manner and by the process I have pointed out, but little would have been done to improve it if the precarious nature of the prosperity which was the occasion of its being dealt with had not so thoroughly escaped notice at the time. It may yet become necessary and politic to take every fair opportunity of reducing it again in any particulars in which its augmentation may have been to any extent premature, or such as could have borne postponement. But, speaking generally, the scale on which it is placed is not such as to justify the assertion that the costly nature of its government is pressing with undue weight upon the resources of the Colony, that is, with a weight which the circumstances of the case do not call for.

40. The Colony of Natal comprises an area of upward of 16,000 square miles. Its population of European descent numbers about 17,000 souls; its Coolie and Kafir population upwards of 250,000. About 10,000 of its white inhabitants may be said to be concentrated in the boroughs of Pietermaritzburg and Durban; the rest are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land. Of the native population there is no concentration whatever; they live in locations, according to their tribes, which it has been the policy of the Government to allot to them in all parts and divisions of the country without exception. It is clear that under these conditions the machinery of administration must be wanting in that compactness which would make its working cheap and simple. Executive control over collections and disbursements of public money, and in the general management of the country, and the administration of civil and criminal justice in their higher and lower branches, become in such circumstances comparatively costly because complicated. Nor should it be overlooked that, with the exception of the incorporation of the two towns, no territorial organization whatever for local purposes has yet been created, so that the Government of the Colony is in every sense of the word centralized.

NATAL.

41. The following is an enumeration of the principal offices by means of which the affairs of the colony are conducted. Against each is placed the amount of remuneration attached to the discharge of its duties.

Civil.

The Lieutenant Governor	2,500
The Colonial Secretary	800
The Treasurer	600
The Attorney General	700
The Secretary for Native Affairs	700

The Port Officer	350

Judicial.

The Chief Justice	900
The 1st Puisne Judge	800
The 2d Puisne Judge	800
The Sheriff	250
Eleven resident Magistrates, 2 at 350*l.* each and 9 at 300*l.*	3,400

It cannot be said that the emoluments enjoyed by these officers are out of proportion to the extent and importance of the work they do or the responsibilities they bear in their respective spheres of duty, or that they are in excess of what is necessary to secure to the Colony a succession of able and efficient public servants.

42. The list of officers given in the blue book, after deducting those I have mentioned and the few clergymen and ministers of different denominations who receive stipends from the Colonial Treasury, contains no less than 66 names. Many of these are the junior officers and clerical assistants of the principal departments, civil and judicial, but the larger number of them is scattered far and wide about the country in receipt of small salaries for various Government purposes, and in the exercise of functions which are highly important in the aggregate. The casual expenditure which follows upon this unavoidable diffusiveness of action, expenditure in its nature uncertain and but little to be controlled, absorbs from year to year an ever increasing portion of the ways and means of the Colony.

Public Works.

43. If the hand of Government must be thus wide stretched and far-reaching, it becomes imperative that the communication between the different parts of the Colony should be good, and be unobstructed at all seasons, and that postal intercourse should be regularly and uninterruptedly maintained. For purposes of transport also, both from and to the interior, this is of vital importance. The development of trade with the Free States across the border, unhealthy as it was in its rapidity and inflation, contributed to swell the requirements of the Colony in this respect. With no local funds or local organization for the maintenance, repair, improvement, and construction of roads and bridges, much of the overwhelming expenditure of the years I have been reviewing, which has embarrassed the general finances of the Colony, is referable to the pressure of these necessities.

44. In the following Return the Public Works of the Colony which have been undertaken during these years have been divided under four heads; the maintenance and improvements of roads and bridges, the erection of new bridges, the construction of other public buildings, and the execution of the harbour works of Port Natal.

Year.	Maintenance of and Improvements of Roads, Streets, and Bridges.	New Bridges.	Other Public Buildings.	Expenditure of Harbour Works and Railway to Umgeni Quarry for conveyance of Stone for Works.

45. The process of road making in Natal is comparatively easy and inexpensive. It is only in places that much constructive skill and labour is requisite. The ox waggon, the ordinary means of conveyance and transport in South Africa, may be said to be to a certain extent its own road maker. It leaves its track along the undulating grassy plains of the country, and the efforts of the road surveyor have to be mainly devoted to regulating the direction and levelling and improving the surface of these so called natural roads. Hardening and metalling are as yet but partially in use; but the country rises in steps, as it were, and at the points of ascent the ingenuity of the engineer has to be called into play, and more heavy and expensive work performed.

46. The country is intersected by a great number of rivers, many of them wide and deep as well as rapid, and all subject to floods. Easy intercommunication is essentially dependent upon every facility being afforded, and every obstruction removed, to the passage of these rivers at all seasons of the year. Hence the great outlay that has taken place on the erection and repairs of bridges, punts, and ferries, and on the improvement of drifts or fords, the details of which are shown in the following statements.

47. But if it was to be expected under such circumstances that works of the nature of these would be pushed on even beyond the verge of prudence the needs of the Colony in other respects were not the less pressing. The Colony had in fact still to house itself. Suitable courts for the administration of justice, both in its higher and inferior branches, had to be erected; adequate office accommodation had to be found for the various departments of the Government, the business of which was growing rapidly, and a sufficiently commodious residence had still to be provided for the Governor of the Colony. Very much had to be done, and much still remains to be done, to supply the country with properly constructed gaols and district prisons in which to institute and maintain a penal discipline for the discouragement of crime. Considerable progress was made in these years in meeting these and similar wants of minor importance, but though the principal works, with one or two exceptions, are still incomplete, the strain upon the resources of the Colony has been proportionally severe. What has been effected, and at what cost, is shown in detail in the following return.

48. The work of the most extended public usefulness which was commenced and finished during this time is the lighthouse, which has been erected on the bluff at the entrance of the harbour of Port Natal. It consists of an iron tower 80 feet in height, situated on a commanding eminence, and is visible at sea in clear weather from a distance of 24 miles. It shows a revolving light, which attains its greatest brilliancy once in every minute. The foundation stone of this edifice was laid on the 22d November 1864, and it was lighted for the first time on the 23d January 1867. It cost the Colony in round numbers about 6,000*l.*, and its maintenance entails an annual expenditure of about 450*l.*

Harbour Works.

49. The long and expensive land carriage required to transport to Durban the sugar and other produce of the Lower Unkomanzi and adjacent districts lying to the southward of the Unkomanzi River induced some of the planters to attempt the establishment of a port at the mouth of that river, whence communication with Durban could be maintained by small vessels. The Unkomanzi River expands near its mouth into a fine sheet of water from 800 to 1,200 feet in width, and having a depth of water varying from 4 to 6 feet at low water spring tides, and from 10 to 12 feet at high water springs. This sheet of water offered an excellent natural harbour for small craft, but the entrance to it was narrow and winding, and barred at its outlet by a sandbank, over which the depth of water varied from 2 or 3 up to 6 feet at top of springs. A small screw steamer, called the "Natalie," was brought out from England by private enterprise in 1861, for the purpose of plying between Durban and the Unkomanzi, and she made several successful trips, crossing the Unkomanzi bar without accident. This vessel was, however, not well adapted for crossing a rough bar and navigating a narrow and tortuous channel, and at length, having attempted to run out of the river at an unfavourable time and with a falling tide, she was wrecked on a sand spit, and although afterwards got off she was never used again in connexion with the Unkomanzi, but was converted into a sailing vessel and employed for other purposes.

50. In the meantime strong representations were made to the Government, by those interested, of the great benefit that would be conferred upon the Southern Coast Districts by improving the entrance of this river, and the civil engineer of the Colony was accordingly instructed to report upon the subject. That officer submitted a scheme for straightening and deepening the channel and scouring the bar, sufficiently to admit of its its being crossed in safety by vessels drawing not more than five feet of water, at an estimated cost of 4,000*l.* His plan consisting chiefly of the construction of a training wall of rubble masonry on the south side of the embouchure of the river, and the removal by blasting of some of the rocks which interrupted the channel. The works were commenced in September 1862 and finished in 1864, at a total cost of 4,705*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*

51. These works have had the desired effect of straightening and deepening the channel in the outlet of the river, and of increasing and regulating the depth of water over the bar. Since the works were completed a small sailing vessel made one or two trips from Durban to the Unkomanzi and back, and on each occasion sailed over the bar; but with this exception no advantage has been taken of the improvements effected. A company was got up about the time of the completion of the works for the purpose of purchasing and bringing out a steam vessel specially adapted for crossing the Unkomanzi bar, but although it was well known that from 5 to 5½ feet was the greatest draught of water that such a vessel should have with full cargo on board, yet it was found when the steamer arrived in November 1865 that she drew 9 feet 6 inches when laden, and that consequently she was quite unsuited for the purpose for which she was professedly procured. Disputes arose amongst the shareholders, and she was finally sent down to the Cape and there sold. Little use has therefore been made of the Unkomanzi Harbour, notwithstanding the amount which has been expended upon it, and as the road southwards from Durban has been much improved within the last few years, and the cost of transport has materially decreased, there is not much likelihood of this harbour being again put to much use unless the discovery of valuable minerals in the neighbourhood should bring it into requisition, or the cultivation of sugar be very considerably increased.

52. Of the unfinished works in progress those which have been undertaken and are being carried on for the improvement of the harbour of Port Natal are of the most vital importance of any to the future development of the natural capabilities of the Colony. A very full report by the colonial engineer upon these works was appended to the Blue Book for 1866, together with a plan of the harbour, showing the various schemes which had been proposed, and partially executed, for increasing the depth of water over the bar which impedes its entrance. The plan at length definitively adopted, and now being carried out with modifications, was designed by Captain Vetch, R.E., of the Harbour Department of the Admiralty, before whom, however, sufficiently correct data of the natural and engineering peculiarities of the locality do not appear to have been laid. Hence the necessity for the modifications introduced by the civil engineer of the Colony, both as regards the design itself and the method of construction. The special object now being aimed at is to close up permanently one channel through which the ebb tide sets, and so to throw the whole scour upon the bar, and thus increase and render more regular the depth of water upon it. From the year 1861, when these works were commenced, up to the end of 1867, the total sum expended upon them amounted to 125,005*l.*

53. If the object for which those works are undertaken were simply to render the harbour more easily accessible to vessels of the ordinary tonnage as at present employed in taking away the exportable produce of the Colony, and bringing to it what it requires of foreign produce for its consumption, it is probable that the amount originally destined for their execution might very nearly suffice for the purpose; but a much larger question than this is involved in the improvement of this harbour,—it is nothing less than its adaptation as a coaling station for large passenger vessels and for the ships of Her Majesty's Navy.

Geological Survey.

54. The existence of coal in Natal has long been known. In the neighbourhood of the places where it is found it is extensively used for domestic purposes, and for like uses it finds its way in small quantities to Pietermaritzburg and Durban. Wood being scarce in the Colony it is an important product even for these purposes. Unfortunately it is found in that portion of the country which is most distant from the sea-board, and its transport from thence is slow, uncertain, and expensive. In 1864 some abortive endeavours were made to procure the construction of railways, and the opening up of these coal fields was among the objects proposed to be secured thereby. In 1867, as a preliminary to a more thorough geological and mineralogical survey of the locality and of the Colony generally, an investigation into the extent of the coal field was commenced, and in the present year trials have been made of the value of Natal coal as compared with English coal for navigation purposes. A report upon these trials made by the surveyor general and civil engineer of the Colony is annexed. These officers give it as their opinion that the results of their experiments shown in the tabular statement appended to their report are very satisfactory as to the value of certain Natal coals for steam purposes when selected with care. A subsequent trial on board Her Majesty's ship "Hydra" led the commander and engineer of that vessel to express like views. A copy of the remarks of the engineer in charge upon the quality of these coals is added to the local report.

55. It has been suggested by those who are most competent to give advice upon the subject that a thoroughly efficient mining engineer should be sent out from England, who should report upon the amount and quality of the coal, upon the cost of its extraction, and upon that of its transport to the port by railways which have yet to be made. The condition of the finances of the Colony must cause delay in carrying out this proposition, but this will be the less to be regretted if to these questions is added, when they come to be considered, the further one of the extension which it will be necessary to give to the Port Natal Harbour Works as at present conducted, so as to render the port available as a coaling station. The solution of the two former questions will produce little practical result if the last be left undetermined. The easy and cheap extraction and transport to Durban of coal from the interior would only lead to its accumulation in the warehouses and on the wharves of the town if the harbour remains inaccessible to ships of the large tonnage now in vogue for carrying passengers and for war purposes. With such a sea as that which runs along the coasts of this portion of South Africa, coaling in the open roadstead, outside the bar, could not be effected.

Public Debt.

56. The expense of the improvement of the harbour of Port Natal has not been defrayed out of current yearly revenue. In 1860 a law was passed authorizing the negotiation of a loan of 163,000*l.* for this purpose, and in that year debentures to the extent of 50,000*l.* as a first instalment were issued; in 1862 a further instalment of 50,000*l.* was raised; in 1865 a third instalment of 10,000*l.*; in 1867 the negotiation of the remainder amounting to 53,000*l.* was effected. This debt bears interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, and is repayable in twenty-three years from the date of each instalment. Including the sinking fund, for its redemption, this loan now entails upon the Colony a yearly payment out of general revenue of upwards of 14,000*l.*

57. The Colony has also raised a loan by debentures of 100,000*l.* for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the introduction of immigrant labour from India. This loan was authorized by a law passed in 1864, and it was taken up in two instalments of 50,000*l.* each. A separate measure, passed at the same time, provided for the partition in the proportions of two thirds and one third between the employers of coolies, and the general revenue of the yearly amount payable as interest upon the loan, and towards the sinking fund for its redemption. It was contemplated that under the provisions of these laws the employer would, by yearly instalments, pay a sum of 15*l.*, the general revenue a sum of 7*l.* 10*s.* for each coolie introduced, making together 22*l.* 10*s.*, which being in excess of the actual cost of introduction, inclusive of all contingencies, would leave at the end of 31 years, when the loan would be paid off, a large amount in hand available for future operations. This calculation was based upon the assumption that during these 31 years 2,000 coolies would be annually introduced into the Colony. The progressive accumulation from year to year of the number of indentured immigrants, and consequently of the instalments of passage money and of the quota from general revenue to be received, was to lead to the formation of an eventual surplus estimated at no less a sum than 116,500*l.*

58. But the condition on which this result depended was not fulfilled. It was perhaps incapable under any circumstances of being fulfilled with the regularity required. Before the second instalment of the loan was negotiated the planters on the coast, who are the principal employers of coolie labour, began to feel the effects of the commercial stagnation and depression the general features of which have been described in the early part of this Report. The advances upon which many of these planters were working became gradually less and less obtainable, and among other more disastrous results a cessation of the demand for coolies ensued. Since the month of July 1866 none have been received. The actual payments into what is called the coolie fund, on account of passages of coolies from India to Natal in these years, 1865, 1866, and 1867, have been as follows:—

NATAL.

From 16th May 1865 to 31st December 1865:
Planters paid on 313 coolies	1,825	18	3

The interest on coolie loan debentures and payments into the sinking fund have been as follows:—

The actual disbursements of the fund for passage money, salary, &c., of agents and establishments, supply of coolie stores, &c., during the years 1865, 1866, and 1867, have been as under:—

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.

In India	3,481	13	6

Thus far therefore the general revenues of the Colony, which are primarily responsible to the holders of these debentures, have been materially assisted in keeping down the interest thereon by the contributions of the employers of this description of labour, but on the one hand neither has the loan been expended in such a way and to such an extent as to lead to the accumulations anticipated, nor on the other has any surplus arising from the transactions of these years been realized, or utilized for the purposes of the coolie fund by actual investment.

* First instalment of loan not having been raised till December 1865.

59. The second instalment of this loan, the application of which to its proper object became suspended by the failure of the demand for coolies, was by a temporary arrangement substituted for a portion of a further loan of 100,000*l.* which by a law passed in 1866 the government of the Colony was authorized to raise for the execution of public works. This loan has therefore not yet been negotiated, but the interest upon the second half of the coolie loan has been thus thrown entirely upon general revenue, which is subjected thereby to a yearly charge of 4,000*l.* It has been proposed to effect a consolidation of all these loans, and the possibility and means of doing so are now under consideration.

Local Revenues.

60. The financial statistics of the corporations of the boroughs of Pietermaritzburg and Durban for the five years under review, as extracted from the blue books for these years, give the following results :—

1863	17,870	18,166
1864	11,742	11,742

1867	8,348	13,784

61. The city of Pietermaritzburg and the town of Durban were constituted boroughs under the provisions of Ordinance No. 1 of 1854, and were proclaimed as such on the 15th of May of that year, having then respectively, as required by the law, a population amounting to one thousand souls. The government conveyed lands to each of them as an endowment to Pietermaritzburg, 26,088 acres, to Durban 6,096 acres. During the same five years sales of land were made by each, which realized the following sums, omitting fractions.

	Pietermaritzburg.	Durban.

1867	467	836

The rise and fall in the value of, and demand for, land, already adverted to, are illustrated by these figures. By private laws passed in 1864 the corporate council of the two boroughs were authorized to raise loans in the Colony or elsewhere to the extent of 50,000*l.* each. The returns given in the Blue Books state the amount of debentures sold under these laws up to the end of 1867 as under.

NATAL.

These boroughs are completely self-governed. There is no official element whatever in the composition of the municipal bodies by which their affairs are administered. They have not on that account been able to ward off or escape from the pressure which, as has been shown, has affected in various degrees and ways the general government of the Colony and every interest in it.

Political Franchise, &c.

62. The constitution of the Colony itself is peculiar in respect to the amount of self-government enjoyed. Its legislation is carried on in a single chamber, consisting of four nominee and twelve elective members. This arrangement is eminently transitional in its nature. It holds an intermediate place between the system on which the government of Crown colonies is conducted and the government by party which prevails in the larger colonial dependencies of the Empire. It fails in the point in which those two systems, however widely different in other respects, resemble each other. It is a point which is essential to good government. In them responsibility and power go together. Like responsibilities attach to the executive of a Crown colony, of a colony where there is party government, and of one organized as Natal is. But in the first the executive can carry its measures by the legislative majority it commands; in the second it is itself the voice of the majority. In Natal responsibility rests with the Governor, who exercises it through the channel of the four nominee members of its legislature, but power rests with the twelve elected members who represent the country. The system is better suited to fine than to foul weather. In good times the machine works smoothly enough. Politics being a science of compromises, government and representatives meet half way and play into each other's hands. But when hard times come and difficulties arise, and greater responsibilities than ever fall upon the executive, the tendency then is, and must be, for the representatives to combine in opposition, and to leave the executive to bear its responsibilities as it best may. The evil of this is twofold. The government in times of real or apparent prosperity is made amenable to pressure, which enhances in its results the embarrassments to be dealt with when altered circumstances supervene; and the co-operation, without which it is powerless to deal with them, is withdrawn at the moment when it is most needed. As the population of the Colony increases, and its interests become more numerous and varied, it will pass beyond this phase of its political history, and a remedy to these evils may then be found in a more extended application of the principles of representative institutions. In the meantime the task of the executive will be one of unusual complication.

Immigration.

63. Efforts have not been wanting to hasten forward the time when it may be possible as well as expedient to effect this extension. It has been stated in an earlier part of this report that immigration from Europe had augmented the population of the Colony to some extent in the years from 1859 to 1863 inclusive. In 1866 recourse was had to this means of developing its resources in a systematic manner. A very competent agent was sent home, and he and the local government had the benefit of the advice of Her Majesty's Land and Emigration Commissioners in England in devising and carrying out a system of selected and assisted immigration which was ultimately sanctioned by the Secretary of State. The main features of the scheme as now in operation are the following. Land grants are offered to immigrants on the subjoined scale and conditions: to a settler with a capital of 500*l.*, or an annuity of 50*l.* a year, 200 acres with a reserve of 400 acres for future purchase; to a settler with a capital of 250*l.*, 100 acres, with a reserve of 200 acres for future purchase; to a settler with a capital of 100*l.*, 50 acres, with a reserve of 100 acres for future purchase. The reserve in each case is open for purchase at any time within five years at 5*s.* per acre. To a settler with less than 100*l.* of capital, but with means to support himself and family till he can raise a crop, a grant of 50 acres is offered without a reserve purchase. Coast lands, as being more valuable, are offered at the rate of one half the quantity of land without any reserve for purchase for each class of capitalists. Legal titles to all allotments will be issued after two years on proof of continuous occupation of the land during eight months of each year. Assistance in the way of rations, loan of implements, waggons, and cattle is given to the extent of the value of 10*l.* to each settler, if he requires it. Pasturage licences for lands are also issued. In the case of those which are near to townships or settlements these licences are terminable by government at the end of each year, but holders of more remote pastoral runs are allowed a pre-emptive right over not less than their whole runs up to the 1st January 1870, at the price of 5*s.* per acre. A contribution of 5*l.*

towards both cabin and steerage passages is also made by the local government under certain conditions as to the price charged by shippers for each whole passage.

64. Up to the close of 1867 the outlay connected with this scheme had amounted to 3,721*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, inclusive of agent's salary and fees, office charges, advertising and travelling, and passages and settlement of immigrants. The number of statute adults sent out stood at that time at 71, 26 grants of 200 acres each had been made, and 30 of 50 acres. The numbers have considerably increased in the current year. A fair share of the emigration which annually leaves the shores of England may now be said to have been secured to Natal by the agent's exertions, and it is satisfactory to know that those who have already become settlers in it are generally contented with their position and prospects. But it is to be feared that the financial exigencies of the Colony may for the present prevent the agent from giving to his operations the full extension of which they are capable. So much of the soil of Natal is now in the hands of companies, speculators, and other absent or unimproving proprietors, that it is of great importance to its welfare and progress that the Crown lands still remaining at the disposal of the government should be allotted with as little delay as possible in such a manner as to ensure their continuous occupation and culture.

Education.

65. The future of the Colony, in its political and social as well as its industrial aspect, will be influenced as much by the training and teaching of the generations which grow up within it as by the quantity and quality of the accessions to its population from extraneous sources. It will be interesting therefore to examine what has been done in this respect during the period under review.

66. The public schools in operation in Natal which come under the supervision of the superintendent of education were of two sorts in the year 1863, as they continue to be now, viz., schools maintained and managed wholly by government and schools receiving grants in aid from government on certain conditions. Of the former there were then three. A high school at Pietermaritzburg and two primary government schools, situated one in Pietermaritzburg and the other in Durban. To these was added in 1866 a high school in the town of Durban. The assisted schools were divided at that time into infant schools receiving a government grant of 50*l.* per annum, district boarding schools receiving a grant of 80*l.*, and five classes of so called public schools receiving grants varying from 70*l.* to 16*l.* per annum. To these were added itinerant teachers receiving grants of 16*l.* per annum. There were in number two infant schools, one district boarding school, three public schools of the 1st class with 70*l.* per annum each, three of the 2d class with 50*l.* per annum each, fourteen of the 3d class with 36*l.* per annum each, eight of the 4th class with 25*l.* per annum each, and two of the 5th class with 16*l.* per annum each, while sixteen itinerant teachers were receiving grants of 16*l.* per annum each. The number of pupils on the books of the government and assisted schools was 789 boys and 583 girls, in all 1371. The total cost to the government of both divisions of the schools in that year was, after deducting the amounts received for fees, subscriptions, and sales of books, 3,051*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*

67. The subjoined tabular statement exhibits the progressive changes which have taken place in all these particulars in the subsequent years.

68. Annexed is a copy of the report of the Superintendant of Education for the year 1867. In it the conditions are set forth on which the several grants in aid are given. By a reference to these the fluctuations in the numbers of schools in different classes in each year will be understood. It is not to be wondered at that the ratio of increase of schools and scholars should under the circumstances of the Colony have received a check in 1866, and that there should have been a small decrease in both in 1867, but rather that the system should have gone on working with so little disturbance.

69. It is perhaps desirable, and it is certainly at present unavoidable, that all attempt at uniformity in the system on which government aid is given to education should be set aside; it is necessary to encourage and to meet private efforts in every shape, but in carrying out this principle, which is easy of application in the country districts where population is scattered, inconvenience has already been experienced with regard to the places where it is concentrated, and especially in the towns of Pietermaritzburgh and Durban. In addition to the government schools there are denominational schools in these two towns receiving grants in aid, and there are others, and many, which are entirely supported by the payments of pupils and by private contributions. It is difficult to see on what grounds these latter schools, if they comply with the rules laid down, should be refused, if they ask for it, the assistance given to others. The support of primary schools in the two towns should be an object of municipal rather than of general government, but unfortunately the law which created the municipalities laid upon them no obligations in regard to education. What those bodies have done of their own accord to further it has had reference to the establishment of collegiate institutions for high class training and instruction.

70. It is clear that as time goes on the number of town schools in private hands, or connected with and managed by religious bodies, will continue to increase, and applications for grants in aid will pour in, which it will be difficult with any fairness to reject, and at the same time scarcely possible to meet. Expenditure will thus augment while efficiency must diminish, for the multiplication of small schools, under teachers not necessarily chosen for their fitness, would end in indifferent teaching, which no supervision could improve. The remedy for this approaching evil would evidently be found in the withdrawal of all grants in aid from private schools established in the towns, and in the extension of the scope and object of the schools which are maintained and managed in each of them exclusively by government.

71. A weak point too in the mixed system in operation is that it supplies no machinery for providing trained teachers for either government or private assisted schools. By limiting in the towns the government contribution to the cause of education in the manner suggested this want might also be met. To do so it would be necessary to substitute for the one primary school in each town two schools, one for boys and one for girls, and to organize these in such a way as to make them the models on which other schools throughout the country should be formed and conducted, while each should be required to train up and maintain a succession of properly qualified teachers of either sex, as the case may be, for distribution among the general body of both government and assisted schools. A detailed scheme for effecting this alteration of system has been drawn up in the shape of a report by the Acting Superintendent of Education, and been laid before the Legislature of the Colony. A copy of this report is also annexed.

Reserve for Native purposes.

72. By the charter of the Colony a sum of 5,000*l.* per annum is reserved out of its general revenues to be applied to the education, improvement, and benefit of its native population. The following statement shows the exact receipts and expenditure of this fund for the five years ending 31st December 1867.

It will be observed that there remained at the close of 1867 a balance in favour of the fund of 9,711*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, made up of unexpended portions of the reserve and of actual receipts in addition thereto. These consist of repayments for ploughs sold on credit to natives to encourage agriculture among them, of the proceeds of the sale of sugar made at the Umvoti Sugar Mill, which is the property of the fund, and of casual receipts from the disposal of other property belonging to it.

73. The regular expenditure of this fund may be said to consist of the payment of a salary to a special surveyor who has duties to perform in connexion with the Kafir locations, of the maintenance of the sugar mill at the Umvoti, established by government as an industrial experiment, and of contributions to educational and other industrial institutions. These contributions have always hitherto been made in the shape of grants in aid to missions and missionary societies of various denominations scattered throughout the Colony.

74. The condition upon which they were at first given was that industrial training in crafts requiring special skill should in every case form a branch of the mission teaching, and that no part of the grant should be expended for the general purposes of the mission. The only exception to this rule was made in favour of the Bishop's School, which was looked upon as a normal training school from which teachers were to be sent to other native schools. In 1864 the superintendent of education, who had been appointed visitor of these schools, made a report upon them in which he recommended a wider and freer distribution of the grants. He evidently thought that the large subsidies for industrial objects had produced little good, and that more was likely to be effected by supporting and encouraging efforts of a less ambitious kind. In accordance with this view small grants were made, varying from 50*l.* to 12*l.* per annum, and instruction in the elementary branches of common education was admitted in lieu of industrial training, but doctrinal religious teaching was still excluded. The increased expenditure which is shown by the return to have commenced in 1865 is due to this cause.

75. No diminution, however, was made at that time, nor subsequently, in the amount of assistance given to the industrial training schools. The acting superintendent of education is now upon his tour of inspection, and he has been requested to report specially upon each of these schools, so that a decision may be arrived at as to whether a continuance of this expenditure is justified by the results. It is probable that it will become necessary to reconsider the whole system, and to decide upon the expediency of maintaining or of doing away with the grants made under the original conditions as regards industrial training, and in the latter case of substituting for them one large industrial establishment under the immediate direction and control of the government in the neighbourhood of the capital.

Gaols and Prisons.

76. The subjoined statement which has been compiled partly from the annual returns in the blue books which are manifestly incorrect, and partly from returns I called for for the purpose of amending them, are still so incomplete that it would be impossible to draw from it any conclusions as to how far prison punishment and discipline have tended to check that disposition to crime among the white and the native population which education and training may diminish but cannot wholly eradicate.

As the question of penal discipline is now in the hands of a commission appointed to consider and report upon it, I shall postpone all comment on this head till I am, through its means, in possession of better material for the purpose.

77. Attached to the gaol of Pietermaritzburg is an asylum for criminal lunatics; that is to say, when the new portion of the gaol was built the old portion, with certain alterations and additions, was appropriated, as a purely temporary arrangement, to this purpose. The asylum is not in a satisfactory condition, nor is it likely to be so till it is removed to a separate building, where the patients may be subjected to less restriction and to more enlightened treatment. This is one of the first of the requirements of the Colony, which it is proposed to meet so soon as its finances are in a state to allow of full advantage being taken of the public works loan. During the five years under review 72 patients have been treated in the gaol. At the close of 1867 there were 16 patients in the asylum.

78. The Colony possesses at present two public hospitals, one in Pietermaritzburg, the other in Durban. In 1855 Sir George Grey, then Her Majesty's High Commissioner at the Cape, finding on a visit to Natal that it had no hospital, undertook to build one on certain conditions out of funds at his disposal granted by the Imperial Government for the general purposes of British Kaffraria. The conditions were that the corporation of Pietermaritzburg should endow the hospital with one thousand acres of its best lands. This was assented to, the hospital was built out of the funds named, and was finally completed by the local government at an expense to itself of about 300*l*. It was then handed over to the corporation under a deed of trust, and has been managed by them since that time. The land when given over was valued at about 10*l*. an acre. Soon afterwards, however, land became unsaleable and could be put to no profit, and as the corporation had no trust funds other than what this endowment might produce, the government was compelled to contribute 1,000*l*. per annum out of general revenue for the maintenance of the hospital, and it continues to do so at the present day. The trustees have in addition expended about 300*l*. per annum upon it out of corporate funds. They are now calling upon the government to relieve them of this charge, and it is probable that some fresh arrangement must shortly be entered into by which the government shall have the control and management of the hospital as well as the burden of its cost, while the borough shall be required to pay, according to a daily scale to be agreed upon, for the maintenance and treatment of its own sick poor. In the five years ending the 31st December 1867, 565 patients had been treated in this hospital, and there were at that time 33 inmates.

79. The hospital at Durban was built by government out of the fund reserved for native purposes, but its use has not been confined to natives. The general government has borne the whole charge of its maintenance, the corporation of Durban having contributed nothing towards it. A like arrangement as to the sick poor of Durban will have to be made with the corporation of that town as with that of Pietermaritzburg. This hospital has had 916 inmates during the five years named, and contained 33 patients at the close of 1867.

Concluding Remarks.

80. In the years which have been thus statistically examined the Colony was passing through a state of feverish excitement to one of profound exhaustion. But when it was at its worst its recuperative powers were not wholly obscured. While the shortlived prosperity of those who had "hastened to be rich" was ending in disappointment and distress, patient labour was slowly producing its fruits. Agricultural industry did not indeed escape unscathed. The operations for instance of planters on the coast, which are of a nature to require the application of large capital, were in some cases seriously embarrassed, and some of these shared in the general downfall. But the productions of the soil did not cease to increase and multiply. It has been already stated that in and about the year 1864 various items of colonial produce took the place of importations for internal use, and began to appear in appreciable quantities in the table of exports. By this comparatively slow but sure process complete prostration was averted; renewed health and vigour are now being imparted by it.

81. There are many persons who have persuaded themselves that discoveries of gold, whether within or beyond the confines of the Colony, are to operate a change upon its aspect and fortunes. It may be so. That gold and other minerals exist there can be no doubt, but no reliable evidence has yet been forthcoming of their abounding in sufficient quantities to make their manipulation a profitable enterprise. What is known of them may quicken the influx of immigrants, and so push forward with greater rapidity the increase of production. It is to population, production, and exportation, that the Colony must look to retrieve its fortunes.

82. The extent of land under culture in 1863 and 1867, and the quantities in those years of its various kinds of produce, and of the live stock upon it, are given for the sake of comparison and of marking progress in the following Return. It shows also the number of acres on which crops were standing at the close of 1867.

83. The extension which is now recommencing of sugar and coffee cultivation in the coast districts must necessarily before long demand an accession to the Indian element of the population, or, what is more desirable, it will attract native labour to the Colony from beyond its borders. A large amount of capital is invested in these industries, and the manufacture of spirits is also on the increase. In these directions a permanent improvement in the exports of the Colony may be looked for.

84. Though the union articles of coast growth, such as arrowroot, cotton, and spices, are not likely to attain any prominence as exports, it is mainly upon produce of a tropical character that Natal must depend if it is to take a forward place among exporting colonies. The manufacture of sugar is for many reasons less costly in Natal than in the West Indies, and notwithstanding its greater distance from the markets of the world, freights are not so far in excess as to make up the difference. Very great success has attended the introduction and propagation of the China cane, a plant which seems to be peculiarly adapted to the soil and climate of the coast. Perhaps the portion of South Africa which is most suitable to sugar cultivation, and has a soil and climate most like that of the proper habitat of the cane, is the tract of rich land lying between the northern boundary of Natal on the coast and St. Lucia Bay which has been annexed to it. This however now forms part of the Zulu country.

85. Of up country produce wool holds the first place as an article of export, but much of this comes down, together with ivory, skins, and feathers, from the interior, and is the representative, not of local industry, but of mercantile transactions between the Colony and its customers beyond its borders. Hides, butter, grain, meal, salt meats, and other like articles appear in the list of exports, but none of them can yet be said to have attained the rank of staples.

86. Natal, taken as a whole, is adapted to a very wide range of cultivation. Inland it has a fair soil, abundant water, and a fine climate. Small farmers of industrious habits may obtain in its central and upper districts probably as much solid domestic comfort at a small outlay as in any British Colony. No doubt they will gradually attain to more than this, and be enriched by the exportation of their wool and hides, meal, and other produce. But the semi-tropical coast districts offer a better field for the application of capital, and promise quicker and larger results. It is there then that progress will be most rapidly perceptible.

87. In 1866 and 1867 the streets of the two towns of the Colony were thronged by numbers of unemployed mechanics, artizans, and handicraftsmen, seeking relief from government in their distress. These men had floated at the top of the tide of prosperity while it lasted, and were left stranded by its reflux. If this was at the time one of the most painful signs of the stagnation which had come upon the life of the community, its total disappearance now may be an indication, however slight, of a return to better things.

L. C.—No. 1, 1868.

The following Report upon comparative trials of Natal and English coal, made by the Surveyor General and Colonial Engineer on board the Government steam tug "Pioneer," is published for general information.

By order of the Legislative Council,
THOMAS FOSTER,
Clerk.

June 24th, 1868.

REPORT upon comparative trials of Natal and English coal, made by the Surveyor General and Colonial Engineer on board the Government Steam Tug "Pioneer."

Not having at our disposal either the means or the time to obtain sufficient accurate and reliable data to determine the absolute economic value and heating power of the coals submitted for trial, which would have necessitated the construction of special apparatus and a lengthened series of experiments requiring much more time and attention than the general duties of our several offices enabled us to afford, we have confined ourselves to a series of trials of the various samples of Natal coal supplied for the purpose in comparison with good English steam coal; our object being that by taking English coal of a known value for steam purposes, and obtaining certain results therefrom tested with a particular boiler and set of furnaces, and under certain conditions and circumstances, we could thereby obtain a standard of comparison with the Natal coals tested with the same boiler and furnaces and and under similar conditions and circumstances.

From such comparative results the absolute economic value of the Natal coals can be readily obtained, or at least approximated, however defective the construction of the boiler and furnaces with which the coal has actually been tested may be, and however indifferent therefore the actual results of the trials may appear—inasmuch as the absolute economic value of the English coal being known, so the absolute value of the various samples of Natal coal will be to their value as actually obtained during our trials in the same ratio as the known absolute economic value of the English coal is to its value as obtained from the same trials.

It is true that various descriptions of coal require different arrangements of furnaces, regulation of draught, &c., in order to produce in each case the highest results, but as the object sought was to ascertain the real practical value of the Natal coals for steam purposes in ordinary steam boilers, and chiefly for marine purposes, we believe that no better practical test could be applied than by ascertaining the evaporative power of these coals applied in ordinary marine furnaces to a tubular marine boiler of the ordinary construction.

The mode in which the trials have been conducted is as follows:—

The boiler of the Pioneer having been entirely emptied of water was then carefully filled by means of a vessel of standard capacity, kindly lent by the Collector of Customs for the purpose, up to a certain point upon a scale fixed upon the water gauge of the boiler. This afforded a datum from whence to measure the evaporation accurately.

The boiler having been previously emptied, so that the water used should be supplied direct from the sea and at the same density on each occasion, sea water was then pumped into the boiler until it reached the datum level in the gauge glass.

The temperature of the water was then carefully ascertained and noted immediately before the fires were lighted in the furnaces.

The coals intended for trial having previously been brought on board from the store at the Harbour Works, where they are all deposited in separate lots, each carefully marked, a certain portion, being about the quantity ordinarily used to charge the furnaces was then accurately weighed and sent down to the stoke hole, where it was all carefully placed in the furnaces in the usual manner with 20lbs of wood, also carefully weighed, used in each trial to assist ignition.

The fires were then lighted, a note being made of the precise time.

After the fires were lighted a further quantity of coal was carefully weighed on deck and sent down below to stoke with during the trial.

The steam valves of the boiler were opened before the fires were lighted so as to admit of the unchecked egress of the steam, as the object sought was to allow the water to evaporate freely.

The steam pipe was then carefully watched in order to observe the first puff of steam, the time of which was noted. The manner in which the coals burnt, description of flame, and nature and volume of smoke were also carefully oberved and noted during the continuance of the experiment.

When it was considered necessary to cease stoking in order to prevent the water in the boiler getting too low, the furnace doors were finally closed and the coals allowed to burn out, a note being made of the time at which stoking ceased; a careful note was also taken of the time at which the steam ceased to issue from the steam pipe, which in all cases was found to be almost simultaneous with the extinction of the fires. During the continuance of the trials the furnaces were attended to and stoked in the usual manner by the stokers of the Pioneer, under the direction of the engineer, Mr. Miller.

The furnaces and boiler were then left untouched until next morning, by which time they had cooled down. The water in the boiler was then raised to the datum level by pouring in water from the sea with the same standard measure used in ascertaining the capacity of the boiler, and thus the quantity of water evaporated during the trial was ascertained accurately.

The surplus coals left over the quantity sent down to stoke with was then carefully weighed, and thus the exact quantity of coals put into the furnaces during the trial was ascertained.

The furnace doors were then opened and all the remains of the coal carefully raked out, examined, separated into half burnt coal and coke, clinkers and partly fused matter, and ashes, and all carefully weighed and noted.

The net weight of coal expended was obtained by deducting the weight of the half burnt coal and coke fit for burning again from the total weight of coal put into the furnace during the trial.

All the observations, measurements, and weights were taken by at least two persons separately, and generally by three persons, and compared at the time in order to prevent inaccuracy, and they were all noted at the time upon a tabular form prepared for the purpose, and from which, carefully checked with the several separate observations taken, the table appending hereto is framed.

It will be observed that the temperature of the water in the boiler at the commencement of the several trials varied very considerably. This was chiefly owing to the Pioneer being very much engaged during the period of our trials of the coal on board of her, so that we could only carry on these trials at such intervals as were convenient, and it happened that on several occasions the boiler had not time to be thoroughly cooled down before the trial commenced.

We have been thus particular in stating at length the manner in which the trials were carried on in order to show that, of whatever value the results of our experiments may be, these results were at any rate carefully obtained, and are reliable as far as they go.

The several varieties of coal tried were as follows:—

English—West Hartley main, a coal the absolute economical value of which has fortunately been tested in comparative trials in England, and is to be found in the reports of such trials. That used was selected from a lot just received into the government coal shed from the Verulam, and in a very fair condition. The captain of the ship was fortnnately able to produce the shipping note of the coals received by him in London, which proved the correctness of his statement as to the description of the coals.

The Natal coals consisted of seven samples, all from the district of Newcastle, but from different localities, some of which are upwards of 40 miles apart.

All of these coals were procured within a very short distance of the surface from escarpments of the strata caused by the intersection of natural watercourses, and it was from such places only that the Natal coals experimented upon were obtained, there being as yet no borings or sinkings made to obtain or even to determine the extent and quantity of the coal at any distance from such natural outcrops.

The localities from whence the seven samples of Natal coal were procured are as follows:—

1. Brak Hoek (Vander Merve's farm), near the township of Newcastle.
2. Lion Veldt, near Murray's farm.
3. Stein Kohl Spruit, Dundee farm, Biggarsberg.
4. Tyger Kloof, Horn River.
5. Lion Veldt, Davel's farm.
6. Lennox farm, near Biggarsberg.
7. Lion Veld, near Wilson's huts.

It was found during the first two trials, viz., of West Hartley main coal and Brak Hoek coal, that the combustion in the furnaces was too strong, the coals in both instances burning away too rapidly to give fair results; sheet iron dampers were therefore constructed, and fixed to the ashpits to regulate the draught before the trials were resumed.

Unfortunately, as it was considered desirable to retain a certain quantity of the Brak Hoek coal for transmission to England, a sufficient quantity could not be spared to enable us to make a second trial of this coal with the dampers, but by taking the comparative results of the English coal without and with the dampers, we think a fair comparative value of the Brak Hoek coal under similar circumstances may also be obtained, and this we have worked out as shown in the table.

The chief objects sought for in testing the value of steam coals for marine purposes are these:—

1st. A high evaporative power in comparison with bulk and weight.

2d. Rapidity of evaporation.

3d. Freedom from sulphur, slag, and other foreign substances which are injurious to the fire-bars or are apt to clog them and thereby prevent a proper draught.

4th. For war steamers little smoke and that of light colour, so that the vicinity of such vessels may not be too readily betrayed to the enemy.

A reference to the table will show that with regard to the first point of comparative value, that for equal weights, one sample of Natal coal (that from Dundee) gave a higher result than the English coal; that another (from Brak Hoek) gave very nearly as high a result; and the lowest result obtained was only 20 per cent. less than that from the English coal, which we find to be much less than the difference between the evaporative power of different descriptions of Newcastle coal.

With regard to the second point it will be seen that the value of the Brak Hoek coal is considerably in excess of the English, whilst the others are considerably under it; the results from the Tyger Kloof coal being less than 50 per cent. of the English.

We are of opinion that these inferior results are attributable chiefly to the presence of various earthy and incombustible ingredients, as indicated by the comparatively high specific gravity of such coal.

With regard to the third point, although the per-centage of scoriæ, calcined shale, ashes, and other refuse given by the Natal coal is, with one exception, that of the Dundee coal, which gives a lower per-centage than the English, considerably larger than that given by the latter, yet it is particularly to be noted that the refuse matter found in the furnaces after the trials did not in any way appear to impede the free combustion of the coal, nor did it clog or fuse on the bars during our trials, although, had the combustion of the coals been carried on uninterruptedly for a prolonged period, and a much larger quantity of coals been expended, it is possible, from the nature and proportion of some portion of the refuse, that a slight fusing on the bars might have taken place in some cases.

Consequently, if a certain bulk or weight of Natal coals gives as good an economical result as an equal bulk or weight of English coal, the per-centage of refuse is of little importance, involving merely some little extra labour in raking it out and throwing it overboard.

Slight traces of sulphur were perceptible during combustion of the Tyger Kloof sample, but not, so far as we could judge, to such an extent as to be injurious to the furnaces.

There was no difficulty in obtaining sufficient draught in any case; on the contrary, in some cases the ignition was too rapid, the coals evolving heat so strongly as to cause the boilers to prime and necessitate the draught being checked.

Nor was there any occasion for any special or extraordinary raking of the fires.

Under the fourth head the Natal coals contrast very favourably with the English, the smoke from the former being in all cases both lighter in colour and less in volume than the latter, and when the Natal coals were fairly ignited the smoke was in most instances almost imperceptible.

This result would appear to be caused by the smaller proportion of bituminous matter as indicated also by the higher specific gravity of the Natal coal and the greater density of the fixed carbon.

When it is taken into consideration that the samples of Natal coals were all obtained from natural outcrops, we consider that the results of our trials as given on the appended tabular statement are very satisfactory as to the value of certain Natal coals for steam purposes when selected with care.

In addition to the samples of the Natal coal, the result of which are tabulated, two other samples were tried, viz., from Lennox Farm, Biggarsberg, specific gravity 1·375; Lion Veldt, near Wilson's Huts, specific gravity 1·441; but these are not tabulated, because no satisfactory results were obtained in either of these two instances, although the experiments were conducted, so far as they went, in precisely the same manner as in the other trials.

In the case of the Lennox coal, as soon as the wood used to kindle the fire had burnt out the coals began to cake and only ignited in front of the furnace, crumbling away and caking, and giving short flames like smiths coals in a forge, with a good deal of blue flame. Finding there was no chance of raising steam with these coals, they were left burning in the furnaces with closed doors until evening, when they had burnt out in about 9 hours 25 minutes. On raking out the furnaces it was found that the coal had entirely burnt away, leaving only a very fine white dust.

This coal was taken from a natural outcrop which was opened for the first time to obtain the coal used in this experiment, which, from appearance, had lost by exposure a considerable proportion of its volatile matter.

We afterwards found by analysis that the sample of this coal, as experimented upon, still contains about 13 per cent. of volatile matter, which burnt with a strong bright flame.

As the Dundee coal comes from the same neighbourhood, and apparently from about the same level, and yields 27 per cent. of volatile matter, we are of opinion that the Lennox coal in its perfect state will be found to contain an equal amount of volatile matter, and be equally valuable for steam purposes, from the large proportion of fixed carbon in the coal and the abscence of an undue proportion of ashes.

The trial with the coal from near Wilson's Huts was equally unsuccessful; the fires were lighted at 8.44 A.M. and were kept up until 11 A.M., but the coal would scarcely burn at all, giving a very little flame of a reddish blue tint with no smoke, and no heat could be obtained from it. The trial was therefore abandoned.

This coal was obtained from a seam of only two feet in thickness, almost constantly overflowed by a stream of water, and which had been but recently opened.

In conclusion, we have to thank Mr. George Bucham, engineer, of Addington, for his kind and valuable voluntary assistance during the trials, and also Mr. Miller, engineer of the steam tug, for his care, attention, and zeal in carrying out our arrangements.

Enclosure No. 2.

REPORT of the Acting Superintendent of Education for the year 1867.

During the year 1867 there were four schools maintained and managed exclusively by Government, viz., two high schools, one at Pietermaritzburg and the other at Durban; and two common schools, one at Pietermaritzburg and the other at Durban.

2. There were 42 schools, denominational, local, and private, receiving aid from Government.

3. And 20 teachers, called Itinerant, were receiving aid in the four counties in which the system is in operation.

4. There were 1,771 boys and girls at school during the year, of whom 1,077 were boys and 694 girls, and the average attendance was 1,290, or somewhat under 20 for each school.

5. The total cost to the Government was 3,878*l.* 5*s.*, and the total receipts in the way of fees and contributions was 2,666*l.* 18*s.*, consequently the expense of educating these 1,700 children was 6,545*l.* 3*s.*

6. The issue from the book store during the year has been:

Books	2,707
Copy books	1,739
Maps	114
Wall tablets	25
Of these books	1,638
Copy books	1,571
Maps	54

were sold, and the rest distributed to the schools. The amount paid into the Treasury for the sale of books was 43*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.*

7. In April the high school of Pluburg lost the services of Mr. Calder, who went home on sick leave; Since that time the Government has availed itself of the services of Mr. Hardwicke, a gentleman whose long experience in teaching suggested the selection, while the results of the three last quarters have justified it. The school has been increasing from an average in the first quarter of 43 to an average at the end of the year of 53. Mr. Hardwick's services are the more deserving of praise because he had given up the profession of teaching and had found employment more congenial to him, and he has resumed his work as a teacher solely at the desire of Government, while awaiting the return of Mr. Calder or the appointment of his successor.

8. The master of the high school at Durban has raised the number of the scholars from 17 in 1866 to an average of 31 in 1867, with 33 names on the books. He has raised the school to the utmost limit of its present capabilities. He has no assistant, nor are the rooms at present used for the school large enough to admit of a second division and an assistant master; at the same time, it is not right that the whole work of teaching 33 boys should be left too long to Mr. Russell alone, in a climate like ours; it is a matter of importance that the rooms, for which a sum of 700*l.* has been placed on the estimate for the present year, should be built as soon as possible, to enable a second division to be formed under an assistant master to meet the numerous applications for admission, which at present cannot be met, and to give Mr. Russell a relief which he well deserves.

9. The number of schools both here and at Durban is increasing, and applications are made for grants in aid of them; the present state of the revenue renders it impossible to increase the grants to any great amount, and a period in our educational system has been reached when it may fairly be open to consideration whether the Government should any longer give aid to city schools, denominational or private; it may have been the case that in order to induce people to open schools in the towns, the assistance of religious bodies or the aid of Government was necessary; plainly it is not so now. The number of unaided schools in our cities is a proof that in spite of the expenses of a town life (as rent, food, &c.), teaching in the towns is found to be a fair way of gaining a livelihood.

Such being the case, it seems that the time has come when (to use the Superintendent's words in his Report of 1862) the Government "may withdraw from this task in proportion as the community can "be taught efficiently to carry out the work for itself."

The case with our country schools is different. There the scattered homesteads, and even the hamlets, find it difficult by contributions in kind or money, by giving a house and school, and by the school fees to induce a competent teacher to come among them; in these cases Government must still be invoked to aid private efforts by public grants.

10. Or if it should appear that the marked increase in our city schools is due in a great measure to causes of a temporary nature, and that it is still necessary to provide public money for the education of the city youth, this duty should fall rather on the municipalities than on the Colonial Government.

11. Our municipalities have not as yet done much for education. In 1861 both Pietermaritzburg and Durban appeared anxious to found collegiate institutions in their respective towns, and laws were passed for that object. At Durban nothing further appears to have been done; at Pietermaritzburg the municipality, in conjunction with the Colonial Government, appointed trustees for carrying out the scheme of founding a college. When these trustees came to consider the matter practically they found that the means at their disposal were inadequate to the end proposed, it was, therefore, resolved by the trustees to suspend for the present all attempts to commence a college, as simply impossible, in the condition of the Colony, and with their present funds, but to use those funds in such a manner as to secure some revenue at once, and at the same time to assist as far as possible the cause of high class education in the city; and the municipality found the money for purchasing the land and for building the rooms, which are at present occupied by the high school. Here, however, their efforts stopped, and since July 1866 they have paid nothing to the trustees, either of the principal (viz., the balance unpaid of the original grant of 5,000*l.*) or interest upon the balance, as arranged by themselves to be paid, till at the close of 1867 the interest alone on the unpaid balance amounted to more than 300*l.*

12. Whether or not, hereafter, the government with or without the assistance of the municipality, may undertake to provide the means of education for every boy and girl in the Colony, at present it is plain that the efforts of the government must be more limited. One object fairly attainable might be carried out without much delay, viz., to supply in each city a high school for boys and another for girls, and in each city a primary school for boys and another for girls.

13. These schools, being directly under government care and supervision, ought to be model schools to all others in the Colony; they should also serve as training schools for our masters and mistresses. At present one need of our schools is trained teachers; we cannot afford to send for them from home, nor support them adequately when here; we must make our own teachers; with the aid of exhibitions, or small monthly payments, such of our boys and girls as seemed fit for the purpose might be induced to remain at these government schools after term, at which our scholars (at least such as have their livelihood to gain at once) are in the habit of leaving school for the purpose of acting as teachers; these, with others more advanced in years, who, selecting the occupation of teacher for their livelihood, might avail themselves of these government schools to learn how to teach, would go far to supply our present want of skilled teachers.

14. With the changes and modifications which the experience of ten years has shown to be necessary, the management of the grants in aid is at present based on the three following rules:

I. Where the number of scholars (above 5 years old) is above 45, the grant in aid is to be 70*l.*

Where the scholars are more than 30 the grant is	50
" " " 20 "	36
" " less than 12 "	16

II. That the amount of private aid in the way of contributions and school fees must at least equal the grant in aid.

III. That the strict rule as to numbers may be relaxed in favour of schools where the numbers are not quite up to the scale, provided the supporters of the school show by large contributions their desire to secure a superior teacher for their children.

15. On examining the registries of the various schools receiving grants in aid during the three last years, viz., for the years 1865, 1866, 1867, it appears that several schools have gradually fallen off in attendance and subscriptions. The grants to these schools should in justice to other schools be reduced to the established scale. The following schools are receiving grants more or less in excess of the scale:—Richmond, Berea, Sydenham, New Germany, Ladysmith, Pinetown, Lupingo, Clairmont, Umzinto, Sfafa, Victoria, Mount Moreland, Greytown, Weenen.

16. It will be noticed that all those schools called district schools, viz., Ladysmith, Weenen, and Greytown, are set down as drawing grants in excess of the scale. These grants were made on a liberal scale in hopes that teachers would be secured at those towns whose schools would become centres of education in their respective districts, and that the farmers resident in the country round would be induced to send their children to board in these towns and attend the schools. The failures in this respect cannot be charged to the teachers, these were selected with great care for their character and skill in teaching.

The main reason for the failure hitherto appears to have been the want of proper accommodation for a boarding school, and the consequent difficulty of maintaining discipline out of school hours. The head of a family sending his children to board in the town of his district could not feel sure that his children would be kept strictly away from evil examples which the town presents.

17. Districts would do well to combine and build good houses for boarding schools in their respective towns; the expense would perhaps be considerable at first, but in the long run a good boarding school would be far cheaper and more effectual for the education of the youth of these districts than the present system of tutors in each farm house.

18. The system of giving government aid to itinerant teachers has been doubtless the best means of assisting education in these counties, and speaking generally still is so; it was merely the extension of a system already in existence, under which religious instruction was provided for the youths of the Dutch families before taking their first communion.

From the very nature of it, the education given by a teacher who resides for a few months, or even for a year at one house, and then removes to another, cannot be of a very satisfactory or permanent duration; nevertheless it is far better than no education at all, and it would be inexpedient to remove abruptly the grants in aid of this class of schools. Nevertheless, as the county districts become more settled, the itinerant tutor must yield to the country school; thus the system is nearly extinct in the county of Pietermaritzburg already, and there are signs of settlement and combination for school purposes in the other districts, where the itinerant tutor is still the useful pioneer of a better method of teaching.

19. In the estimates for education in years prior to 1866 there was a larger or smaller grant (in 1865 it was 300*l.*) for new and additional "grants and other special services."

This grant in 1866 was reduced to 100*l.*, and the government, in consequence of the failing revenue, would not permit even that sum to be used, and in the estimates for this year the vote for these purposes disappears altogether; nevertheless it is a vote so essential to the working of our present educational system of grants in aid that it is highly desirable to have it renewed.

20. It is the fund out of which the government can assist a new school in its early difficulties (at a time, that is to say, when a little ready money goes a long way) without waiting for the next year's estimates, and out of this fund a school which shows increasing numbers and efficiency can be assisted at once, while, on the other hand, there remains only the power of reducing or withholding grants in case the school fails to do its work.

Acting Superintendent of Education.

OFFICIAL REPORT ON NATAL COALS.

From the following official report it would appear that Natal coals stand a fair chance of coming into use for steam purposes. The results of the experiments made are far more satisfactory than could be expected, when it is remembered that the samples of coal sent have been obtained without the expense of sinking shafts, and are probably surface coal, or very much mixed with the inferior descriptions that have deteriorated by exposure to atmospheric action.

Within the last few days the surveyor general has reported on coal found at the Umhlanga, within about ten miles of the port. The seam, where it crops out, is only about three inches in thickness, but it is said to be among mineral indications that are new to the geologist, and are likely to contradict some of his theories, as well as to take down his dogmatism a peg or two. Much stress is now laid on the value of the new discovery, but it may possibly lead to further investigations which may be attended with useful results:—

Per-centage of ashes and clinkers.

Cardiff	9 per cent. ashes,	2 per cent. clinkers.
West Hartley	8 „ „	5 „ „
Natal	16 „ „	7 „ „

Amount of smoke.

Cardiff, very little, of a light brown colour.
West Hartley, a large quantity of black smoke.
Natal, a moderate amount of light brown smoke.

When steaming easy the Natal coal is nearly equal in commercial value to the Cardiff, but when as much steam is required as can be generated a much larger proportion is used. This is owing to the quantity of earthy matter contained in the Natal coal, which deadens the fires, and makes it impossible to keep steam up without the constant use of the pricker and rake.

A less quantity of Natal coal is used than of West Hartley for the same amount of steam generated, but it is much easier to keep steam with the latter than the former.

It is my opinion that if the Natal coal can be obtained free from earthy matter it will be equal to the best qualities of Welsh coals.

Extract from a letter from Capt. P. Shortland, H.M.'s St. "Hydra," a surveying ship lately employed in laying down the boundary for the India and Aden telegraph.

Dear Sir, H.M.'s St. "Hydra," Algoa Bay, 2d June 1868.

I enclose the result of the comparison between the seven tons of Natal coal you caused to be placed on board the "Hydra," and Cardiff and West Hartley coal respectively.

You will perceive that it is favourable to Natal coal if it can be procured free from the earthy matter which that sent us contained, and which accounts for the large per-centage of ashes and clinker which resulted from its combustion, &c. &c. &c.

Enclosure No. 3.

SIR, Educational Department, Natal, May 30, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to make the following report in accordance with the minute of his Excellency the Administrator of the Government, attached to my letter of the 21st April 1868.

The government at present contributes towards the maintenance of schools at Pietermaritzburg and Durban the following sums:

In Pietermaritzburg high school:
Head master	250
Assistant masters	240
Rent	150
Petty expenses	30
Custodian of college grounds	20
		690
Government school:
Head master	200
Assistant teachers	200
Rent	60
Petty expenses	20
		480
Wesleyan infant school	50
St. Andrew's school	50
Roman Catholic school	50
Chapel Street school	36
Adult evening (Kelly's)	20
Do. (Scoone's)	20
		226
In Durban high school:
Head master	250
Rent	72
Petty expenses	30
		352
Government school:
Headmaster	200
Assistant teacher	200
Petty expenses	20
		420
East End school (private), boys		50
Infant school (Wesleyan)		50
Mansion house (private), girls		50
Adult evening (Doig's)		20

For the purpose of the present report the expenses of maintaining the two high schools may be excluded.

As to the adult evening schools, there are strong reasons for retaining the grants for them. They are the resort of young men anxious to retain or extend the knowledge which they acquired in the ordinary day schools, or of those who are desirous of making up for partial or total lack of schooling when they were younger. The fact that the young man can only take his lessons at night is a proof that he has to work for his bread, and the fees (such as they are) are paid with difficulty out of the lad's earnings when his earnings hardly support him. These schools, with our public reading rooms, an occasional concert, theatrical performance, or public reading, are the only attractions of the better class which our towns present at night to young men.

Excluding then the expenses of the high schools and evening schools, the cost of the schools in Pietermaritzburg and Durban to the government is—

Pietermaritzburg:
Government school	480
Wesleyan infant	50
St. Andrew's	50
Roman Catholic	50
Chapel street (Wesleyan)	36
		666
Durban:
Government school	420
East end school (private, boys)	50
Infant school (Wesleyan)	50
Mansion house (private, girls)	50
Total		1,236

This sum of 1,236*l.* supports or aids two (mixed) government schools of the common or primary sort, 3 Wesleyan schools, 1 Church of England, 1 Roman Catholic, 1 private boys' school, 1 private girls' school. The private schools both here and at Durban are numerous. I attempted to get returns from them, but few have responded. I have the names of 20 schools (unaided) in Pietermaritzburg, and am informed that at Durban there are as many as 20 girls' schools alone. The teachers of these unaided schools apply to me from time to time to know how they may render themselves eligible for grants in aid.

It seems impossible for the government to extend aid to all these schools, at the same time it is hard to lay down a rule under which one school is to be aided and another not.

NATAL.

I think the duty of supplying the means of education to the children in our cities must be left to their respective municipalities, and it would be better to confine the aims of government as regards education to—

1. Aiding schools in the country districts.
2. Maintaining model schools in the town.
3. Supplying teachers from the model schools to the country schools. To these ends it seems requisite to have in Pietermaritzburg and in Durban—

1st. High school.
2d. Primary boys' school.
3d. Primary girls' school.
4th. Infant school.

The money spent at present on two primary (mixed schools) and seven other schools, denominational and private is (as has been shown) about 1,230*l.* or over 600*l.* a year for each city.

In the present state of the revenue I presume it is hopeless to ask for more than the present expenditure. I would, therefore, leave for the present the consideration of infant schools, as of less importance.

The expenses of the primary schools for boys and girls I estimate thus—

Government boys' school:
Master	200
Assistant (one)	70
2 Pupil teachers	24
Rent	50
Petty expenses	20
		364
Government girls' school:
Mistress	150
Assistant	50
2 pupil teachers	18
		228

These two schools would cost, according to this estimate—

Boys' school	364
Girls' school	288

in each town, or 1,300*l.* for the two towns.

I estimate the expense of an infant school thus:

Mistress	100
Assistant	24
Rent	50

I am the less reluctant to leave out of consideration the infant schools for the present, because if the government is able to begin building school-houses at all in the towns (when the government at present has only one school-house), I suppose the utmost that could be done would not include more than one school-house at a time; and the boys and girls schools would have a prior claim.

The item for pupil teachers is an attempt to supply a want which has been felt by the government already. A sum is at present paid to Mr. Kidd of Pinetown to keep his school there open as a training school for young teachers. The plan has not succeeded because of the expense and trouble of residing at Pinetown away from the teachers home or work. If the present plan were adopted, the sum set down for pupil teachers would be in the nature of exhibitions to be held by the best scholars out of those who are desirous of engaging in the business of teaching in the country schools, and would be a partial means of their support while undergoing a proper course of training.

I have, &c.

No. 12.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Admiral Sir Charles Elliot, K.C.B., to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

(No. 33.)

My Lord Duke, St. Helena, June 10, 1868.

Herewith I have the honour to transmit the Blue Book for the year 1867, delayed till this date chiefly by the continued illness of the chief clerk in the secretarial department.

2. It will be observed that there has been no material alteration, so far as the revenue and expenditure are concerned, during the year 1867 compared with the year 1866.

Revenue.

1867 £21,983

3. In my annual report which accompanied the Blue Book for the year 1866 I had the satisfaction to report that much progress had been made in the restoration of the public buildings against further devastation by the white ant, and I am now enabled to state that, with the exception of the Female Colonial Hospital and the reconstruction of a small building to serve as a girls school, all has been effectively completed needing immediate attention.

Expenditure.

4. Your Grace is, however, aware that the Government has not been in a situation to make any advances on easy terms for the restoration of the dwellings under which the great mass of the poorer people are living in this town, and I must not omit to repeat that there are no other reliable means whatever in this Island than the Government may be able to furnish for placing the body of the population under safer shelter. From that point of view I must always consider it to be a matter of regret and anxiety that the loan of 30,000*l.* proposed in 1864 was not negotiated.

5. In my Despatch, No. 18, of the year 1867, it was my duty to report the total destruction of the Government jail in Rupert's Valley, by fire. I also reported that adequate dispositions had been made for the safe custody of the prisoners in the old jail at Jamestown. The military prisoners, however, since this event, are confined in the military cells under the custody of their own officers. With the present claims upon the Government I see but little hope of commencing a new jail for the next two or three years.

6. Before the conclusion of the present year I hope to be able to complete the system of underground drainage from the latrines at the barracks to connect with our own underground sewer in the lower part of the town, proposed in my Despatch No. 3 of 1868.

I have, &c.

No. 13.

The Registrar General's Report to the Honourable the Colonial Secretary.

Registrar General's Office,
Sydney, August 1, 1868.

Sir,

I have the honour to forward herewith the Statistical Register for the year 1867, with the following Report.

PART I.

Population, Immigration, Vital Statistics, &c.

Population.

The estimated population of the Colony on the 31st December last was 447,620, being 16,208 or 3¾ per cent. in advance of the numbers of the previous year; the natural increase to the population by the excess of births over deaths being 9,686, and by arrivals over departures 6,522.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths.

My twelfth Annual Report on vital statistics affords full particulars under this heading, and I will therefore here merely give the total results of the year's registrations.

3,426 marriages were celebrated during the year, being 36 less than those of the previous year.

The births numbered 18,317, and the deaths 8,631; and in 1866 the births were 16,959, and 7,361 deaths were registered.

Immigration.

The arrivals from Great Britain were 2,179—of these 944 came at the public expense, and 1,235 at their own cost. The total outlay amounted to 14,036*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.*, or at the rate of 14*l.* 7*s.* 4½*d.* per head.

During the last ten years the number of immigrants introduced at the cost of the Government was 32,814; the expenditure for this service amounted to 465,341*l.* 7*s.* 2*d.*, or an average of 14*l.* 3*s.* 7¼*d.* per head.

Lunatics and Invalids.

The institutions at Tarban and Parramatta had in them, on 31st December, 665 males and 396 females, in all 1,061; or 26 males and 19 females in excess of the numbers of the previous year.

836 or 78·80 per cent. were British born; 122 or 11·50 per cent. were Colonial born; and 103 or 9·70 per cent. were Foreign born.

The ages of these unfortunate creatures run as follows:—

1 to 20 years	55	Patients
20 to 30 „	179	„
30 to 40 „	306	„
40 to 50 „	294	„
50 to 60 „	150	„
60 years and upwards	77	„
In all	1,061

Of the 1,061 patients under restraint and medical treatment, 221 males and 122 females, together 343, are supposed to be curable; and 444 males and 274 females, together 718, are supposed to be so deprived of intellect and reason as to be incurable.

The private lunatic asylum at Cook's River had 10 patients under care at the end of the year.

Charitable Institutions.

There are now distributed throughout the Colony 36 hospitals, 9 benevolent asylums, 3 lunatic asylums, 7 orphan and industrial schools, including the 3 ragged schools, and 7 miscellaneous institutions; in all 62 charitable establishments.

Hospitals.

In the hospitals, four of which were closed during the year, 4,421 patients received medical treatment—of this number 3,542 were discharged, and 450 have passed from their troubles in this world; 5,825 patients received out-door relief. The receipts amounted to 25,528*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, being 1,938*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* less than the expenditure.

4,010 patients were treated in 1866, of whom 3,098 were discharged, and 454 departed from this world; 4,801 patients received out-door relief. 26,573*l.* 6*s.* 0½*d.* covered the receipts, and 29,912*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* the expenditure.

Benevolent Asylums.

In these asylums provision was made for 3,277 inmates, including 531 children—of these 1,784 were discharged, and 316 died. Relief was given to 2,604 paupers.

The receipts amounted to 20,483*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and the expenses to 20,461*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*

In 1866, 3,178 persons were provided for, of which number 1,803 were discharged, and 271 died; relief was given to 2,406 paupers.

The receipts were 20,082*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*, and the expenditure 21,894*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*

Orphan School Lunatic Asylums.

3,113 inmates were in these establishments at the end of the year, being 113 in excess of those in the establishments on 31st December, 1866. The house of the Good Shepherd afforded relief to 771 paupers, and in 1866 to 700. In 1867, the receipts amounted to 64,166*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, and the expenditure to 65,416*l.* 8*s.* 6½*d.*; and in 1866, the receipts were 51,698*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*, and the expenditure 51,477*l.* 0*s.* 7½*d.*

The gross receipts for charitable institutions during 1867, amounted to 110,177*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.*, and the expenditure to 113,344*l.* 16*s.* 1½*d.*, against 98,354*l.* 3*s.* 7½*d.* receipts, and 103,283*l.* 11*s.* 11½*d.* expenditure in 1866.

PART II.

Religion, Education, and Crime.

Ecclesiastical.

Ministers of religion.

438 ministers of religion of all denominations were on the register, or 1 short of the number in 1866.

The expenditure from the Government amounted to 29,154*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.*, as follows:—

	£	s.	d.

Churches and chapels.

The churches and chapels number 650, or 46 more than the year 1866.

Attendance at public worship.

The average number of persons attending public worship was, in—

1866	127,632
1867	135,263
Increase	7,631, or nearly 6· per cent.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

Sunday Schools.

In these schools 39,512 children were under religious instruction in 1867, and 37,215 children in 1866, the increase being 2,297.

The sexes of the children attending Sabbath schools were, in—

	Males.	Females.	Total.
1866 - - -	17,847	19,368	37,215
1867 - - -	19,041	20,471	39,512
Increase - -	1,194	1,103	2,297

Week Day Schools.

Schools.

The number of schools assisted by the state was 651, and the unassisted or private schools numbered 529, making in all 1,180 scholastic institutions in the Colony in the year under review, or 25 in excess of the number recorded in the year 1866.

Orphan Schools.

The children bereft of parents and left upon the mercy of the world numbered 250 in the Protestant Orphan School, and 280 in the Roman Catholic Orphan School; the increase on the year 1866 being 14 and 6 respectively.

The expenditure for the Protestant Orphan School increased from 3,155*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* in 1866 to 3,242*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.* in 1867; and for the Roman Catholic Orphan School reduced from 5,176*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* in 1866, to 4,632*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* in 1867.

The asylum for destitute children had the care of 682 children, or 28 more than were in the asylum in 1866.

The receipts in aid of this institution were—

From Government - -	7,526 12 6	8,689 12 4
From Voluntary Contributions	3,042 4 5	2,892 15 4
Together -	£10,568 16 11	£11,582 7 8
Increase in 1867 -	£1,013 10*s.* 9*d.*

Industrial Schools.

Two valuable institutions appear in the return for the first time this year—the Nautical school ship "Vernon," and the Industrial School for girls at Newcastle. These schools have been established with a view to impart to those depraved and evil disposed children who have no fixed place of abode, but wander about the streets and thoroughfares of the Colony, such an instruction as may render them eventually useful members of society, instead of placing them, as heretofore, amongst the lowest of criminals who infest our gaols, which only tended still further to lead them into evil doings.

The Nautical school ship "Vernon" received on board 62 boys, and the Industrial School at Newcastle received 45 girls, making in all 107 children.

The cost of the "Vernon," including payment for vessel and fittings, amounted to 13,422*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*, and the expenditure for the girls school amounted to 2,704*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*; in all, 16,127*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*

Public Instruction.

On the 1st day of January 1867, the new arrangements for the supervision and management of public instruction came into practical operation, and the results of the year's labours fully prove that its introduction has been crowned with success.

The following tabular statements will bear out this view of the matter :—

	Schools.				Teachers.			Scholars.

In 1867, the State contributions were at the rate of 1*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.* per head; and in 1866, 1*d.* per head less.

The voluntary contributions in 1867 averaged 12*s.* 3*d.* per head; and in 1866, 13*s.* 8*d.* per head.

University of Sydney.—This institution numbered 47 matriculated and non-matriculated students, being 9 students in excess of the year 1866.

The Government contributed towards its support 5,000*l.* endowment, and 949*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* came from other sources, together 6,127*l.* 9*s.*, or 245*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* in excess of last year's receipts.

St. Paul's College has 12 students or 1 more than in 1866.

The receipts were, from Government 500*l.* endowment, and from other sources 949*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in all 1,449*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, or 402*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* in excess of the income of 1866.

St. John's College.—Eight students were receiving tuition, being the same number as returned for last year.

The contributions were, Government aid 458*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and from other sources 416*l.*, together 874*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, or 74*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* more than the receipts of the year previous.

Private Schools.—These schools are dependent entirely upon their own exertions. They numbered 529, and gave employment to 794 teachers, with an attendance of 11,699 scholars. The increase on the previous year being 31 schools, 78 teachers, and 407 scholars.

Total scholars under instruction.

The total number of scholars under tuition at the end of the year was 63,183, of which 32,971 were boys and 30,212 were girls. The increase on the previous year being 25 schools and 3,589 scholars, of which 1,788 were boys and 1,801 were girls.

Total amount paid by Government.

The sum of 126,917*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* was paid by the Treasury in 1867 for the support of educational institutions, being at the rate of 5*s.* 8*d.* per head of the population. In 1866, 104,599*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* was the amount paid, being at the rate of 4*s.* 8*d.* per head.

Crime.

The criminal returns bear evidence of a decided improvement in the moral state of the Colony during the present year.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

Committals.

The commitments for trial fell from 1,255 in 1866 to 1,180 in 1867, the difference being 75 committals, or 0·304 per 1,000 of the population in favour of the latter period.

The ratio per 1,000 of the population at the middle of the year was, in—

1860	2·070, or 1 in	483
1861	2·321 „	431
1862	2·403 „	416
1863	2·389 „	418
1864	2·526 „	395
1865	2·792 „	358
1866	2·992 „	334
1867	2·688 „	372

357 cases were set down for trial in the supreme and circuit courts, and 823 cases in the courts of quarter sessions.

Convictions.

Of the 1,180 cases placed upon the calendar for trial, convictions were obtained in 702 cases only, or at the rate of 59· per cent.; this is exactly 20· per cent. short of the year 1866. The ratio of convictions per 1,000 of the population was, in—

1860	1·224, or 1 in	817
1861	1·237 „	808
1862	1·405 „	711
1863	1·339 „	746
1864	1·528 „	654
1865	1·705 „	586
1866	1·834 „	545
1867	1·599 „	625

218 cases were tried in the supreme and circuit courts, and 484 cases in the courts of quarter sessions.

Summary Jurisdiction.

The police brought to justice during the year 12,423 males and 3,698 females, in all 16,121, or 117 in excess of the year 1866.

The charges brought against them were—

	1866.		1867.
	M.	F.	M.	F.
Offences against the Person	4,990	2,242	4,785	1,879
„ „ Property	3,877	721	3,103	594
Drunkenness	3,327	847	4,535	1,225
Totals	12,194	3,810	12,423	3,698
Together	16,004		16,121

Both offences against the person and property show a remarkable decrease, but drunkenness shows an unmistakeable increase of 1,586 cases. This increase must be attributed, however, to the fact, that previous to the passing of the Drunkards Punishment Act of 1866 (30 Victoria, No. 5, assented to 24th September), these offenders escaped conviction and punishment, unless the police were able to bring home to them charges such as riotous conduct, vagrancy, &c.

The apprehensions bore the following ratio to the population since 1860 :—

1860	1 in 17
1861	1 „ 21
1862	1 „ 23
1863	1 „ 23
1864	1 „ 22
1865	1 „ 25

PART III.

TRADE AND COMMERCE.

The present year shows a large falling off in the dealings with our commercial relations abroad.

The value placed upon the articles imported and exported seaward have not been so small since the year 1861, viz. :— New South Wales.

Imports and exports.

	Imports. £	Exports. £
1861	6,391,555	5,594,839
1862	9,334,645	7,102,562
1863	8,319,576	6,936,839
1864	9,836,042	8,117,217
1865	9,928,595	8,191,170
1866	8,867,071	8,512,214
1867	6,599,804	6,880,715

By taking the mean of the triennial periods, 1862 to 1864 and 1865 to 1867, we find that in the latter period the importations fell short 698,265*l.*, whilst the exportations increased by 475,827, viz. :— Triennial periods.

Mean of	Imports. £	Exports. £
1862 to 1864	9,163,421	7,385,539
1865 to 1867	8,465,156	7,861,366

From Great Britain the value of the goods imported came to 2,203,462*l.* or 1,149,306*l.* less than the year 1866. Great Britain.

From British Colonies the importations amounted to 3,525,986*l.* or 441,960*l.* short of the former year. British colonies.

From foreign states the imports were 870,356*l.*, being a decrease of 676,001*l.* on the year 1866. Foreign states.

The total imports of 1867 compared with 1866 show a decrease of 2,267,267, or 25·56 per cent. Decrease in total imports.

The imported articles exhibiting the principal decreases were as follows :— Goods imported, showing decrease.

Imports and exports per head of population.

The values of the goods imported were at the rate of 15*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* per head of the population, and the exports 15*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* per head.

Cause of discontinuance of returns of imports and exports overland.

These returns do not include the overland traffic, as directions were given to the customs officers to discontinue keeping an account of the imports and exports, viâ the River Murray, from the date of the Border Treaty—namely, 12th January 1867. Were the returns furnished as heretofore the gross results of the year's transactions above indicated would be considerably augmented.

Shipping.

As with the returns of imports and exports, so with the shipping, a corresponding decrease will be observed.

Shipping inwards.

The arrivals decreased from 2,099 vessels, of a burden of 730,354 tons in 1866, to 1,868 vessels of 646,970 tons measurement in 1867 ; of these there came from—

These figures represent a decrease, compared with 1866, of 155 vessels of an aggregate of 57,660 tons.

Thirty-six vessels were built during the year of the measurement of 1,882 tons ; they are described as follows :— Vessels built.

Twenty-six ship building establishments were returned. This number is 2 less than was recorded in 1866.

PART IV.

MILLS AND MANUFACTORIES.

Mills for grinding and dressing grain show an increase of 29 over the year 1866, the increase is chiefly in the mills worked by steam, viz. :— Mills.

Manufactories, works, &c., show a decrease of 115. The number in 1867 was 2,274, and 2,389 in 1866. Six years ago the Colony numbered 859 only. Manufactories, &c.

Woollens.—Of late years there appears to have been a greater demand for colonial tweed, which for durability is scarcely equalled. 175,348 yards of woollens were manufactured in 1867, against 172,720 yards in 1866 and 145,707 yards in 1865. The three years manufactures amounted to 493,775 yards, or 208,605 yards more than the previous triennial period. Woollens.

Soap and Candles.—The quantity of soap manufactured was 77,773 cwt. in 1867, and 68,456 cwt. in 1866, the increase being 9,317 cwt. 26,206 cwt. of candles were manufactured in 1867, or 2,886 cwt. in excess of 1866. Soap and candles.

Thirty establishments were in operation, or one less than the former year.

Tobacco.—But slow progress appears to be made in the manufacture of this article. Tobacco.

The number of establishments in operation, and the quantity manufactured during the last five years, were—

The quantity of lard produced was 2,352 lbs., or 3,352 lbs. less than the produce of the year 1866.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

54,862 sheep and 3,842 cattle were slaughtered in 1867 for boiling-down purposes, and in 1866, 2,868 horned cattle only; 358 pigs were killed against 1,026 in 1866.

A large quantity of the tallow produced is from the refuse from butchers shops in the Metropolitan district.

Boiling-down establishments.

There were 40 boiling-down establishments, or five less than the number stated in the return for 1866.

PART V.

Production.

Gold received by escort.

The Branch Royal Mint received by escort from our gold fields 222,715 ozs., of the value of 863,797*l.*, apportioned as follows:—

Districts.	Weight. Ozs.	Value. £
Western	134,448	521,963
Southern	68,941	267,858
Northern	19,326	73,976

The receipts compared with 1866 show a falling off of 18,774 ozs. of the value of 64,478*l.*

The gold averaged 3*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* per oz.

Miners rights.

The number of miners rights issued was 13,534, and in 1866 13,905.

Yield of gold.

The quantity of gold received into the Mint for coinage, and the raw material which has passed through the Customs for exportation, together will give a pretty fair idea of the state of our gold fields; with this view I append the following table, embracing three years, from which it will be observed that the yield of the precious ore has considerably fallen off:—

	1865.		1866.		1867.

Average wages of miners.

If the productions of the gold fields, as above stated, were equally distributed amongst the miners, their wages would average, in 1865, 86*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* per annum; in 1866, 72*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* per annum; and in 1867, 67*l.* 4*s.* 5*d.* per annum.

Coal Mines.

Coal.

770,012 tons were raised at the mines, or 4,226 tons less than the operations of last year.

The value of the coal raised amounted to 342,655*l.*, or 18,606*l.* in excess of 1866, the price placed thereon being at a higher rate.

Coal exported.

Among the colonial productions this forms one of our chief items of export, and no less than 473,357 tons, of the value of 253,259*l.* found its way to distant parts of the globe, as follows:—

	Quantity. Tons.	Value. £

Kerosene shale.

About 4,000 tons of Kerosene shale was raised at the Hartley, Kerosene, and Paraffine Oil Company's Mine of the estimated value of 15,000*l.* The weekly production of Crude oil is estimated at 1,000 gallons, or 52,000 gallons for the year, of the value of 5,000*l.*

Western Kerosene Oil Company.—About 79 tons of Kerosene shale was raised of the value of 249*l.* The company has not yet commenced active operations; the quantity raised is only a sample of the mineral.

1,872 tons of Kerosene shale was taken from the mine at Wollongong, of the value of 2,708*l.*

Agriculture.

Occupiers.

From the year 1864 up to the present time a progressive increase is to be observed in the number of occupiers of land, excluding those for pastoral purposes.

The total extent of holdings (exceeding one acre) increased from 7,448,200 acres in 1866–7 to 7,737,651 acres in 1867–8, the increase being 289,451 acres, or 3·88 per cent.

The fixity of tenure holdings decreased from 4,916,916¾ acres in 1866–7 to 4,577,029½ acres in 1867–8, the decrease being 339,887¼ acres, or 6·91 per cent.; whilst the lands held under lease increased from 2,531,238¾ acres in 1866–7 to 3,160,621¾ acres in 1867–8, or 629,338 acres, or 24·86 per cent., in excess of the previous year.

Holdings enclosed, but not in cultivation, increased in the following ratio: freehold lands 2·51 per cent. and leaseholds 32·64 per cent., viz.:—

	Freehold. Acres.	Leasehold. Acres.
1867–8 - -	1,906,415¾	1,128,259¼

Unenclosed freeholds decreased from 3,100,535¼ acres in 1866–7 to 2,412,822 acres in 1867–8, the decrease being 687,713¼ acres, or 22·11 per cent. Unenclosed leasehold lands increased from 1,520,613¼ to 1,876,990¼ acres, being 356,377 acres or 23·43 per cent. in excess of the previous year.

Acreage under crop.

413,164 acres were under crop, and in 1866–7, 451,225 acres. This shows a decrease on the previous year of 38,061 acres, or 8·43 per cent.

Wheat.

Seed for wheat covered an area of 149,142¼ acres, against 175,033¾ acres in 1866–7, the decrease amounting to 25,891½ acres, or 14·79 per cent.

The produce was 1,433,807 bushels or 792,220 bushels less than the previous year.

The produce per acre realized nine bushels 36 lbs.; and the year before 12 bushels 43 lbs.

Maize.

115,522¾ acres were sown with maize for grain, against 119,519 acres the year before, the decrease being 3,996¼ acres, or 3·34 per cent.

The crop produced 3,132,505 bushels, or 27 bushels 6 lbs. per acre; and in 1886–7 3,878,064 bushels, or 32 bushels 26 lbs. per acre.

Barley.

Barley covered land to the extent of 5,140½ acres, or 1,070½ acres less than the previous year.

The produce was 62,392 bushels, or 29,349 bushels short of the year 1866–7.

Oats.

The area covered with oats was 13,142½ acres against 14,914½ the year previous, the decrease being 1,772 acres.

156,965 bushels were produced; and in 1866–7 304,028 lbs., the difference being 147,063 bushels.

Cotton.

76 acres were laid out in cotton, from which 13,680 lbs. were gathered. No attention was paid to its cultivation the year previous.

Rye, millet, and sorghum, &c.

Rye shows an increase in the land under crop, but a falling off in the produce; Millet has slightly decreased in acreage and produce, and Sorghum and Imphee has increased, viz.:—

Potatoes.

The potato crop covered 15,440 acres against 18,809¾ acres the year previous; the falling off is 3,369¾ acres, or 17·91 per cent.

The produce was 33,482½ tons against 43,869½ tons the year before; this shows a decrease of 10,387 tons, or 23·68 per cent.

Rice.

In the year 1862–3 an important addition was made to the returns by the cultivation of cotton; the following year another valuable addition was made to the Colony's productions by the growing of sugar cane, and this year the novel feature of rice growing has introduced itself. On the Paterson, in the county of Durham, seven acres were planted and produced 7,000 lbs., on an average of 1,000 lbs. to the acre. Half an acre also was planted in the district of Wellingrove, but no produce was given in the returns furnished by the collectors.

Tobacco.

626¾ acres were planted with tobacco, and in 1866–7, 1,326¼ acres; although a decrease of 699½ acres is to be observed in the acreage under crop, it is satisfactory to find a large increase of 3,557¼ cwt. in the produce, viz., 6,035 cwt. against 2,477¾ cwt. the year previous.

Hay covered 74,346 acres, or 396¾ acres less than the previous period; the produce weighed 91,869¾ tons, or 26,140¼ tons less than 1866–7. NEW SOUTH WALES.

Conclusion.

Having now waded through a mass of figures contained in the Statistical Register, which the public are at all times loath to undertake, with a view of assisting those inquirers who have at heart an interest in the Colony's welfare, it is to be hoped that nothing of importance has escaped my notice; if so, I have only to direct attention to the tables themselves, which have been so carefully prepared as to afford in a concise form the results of the year's labours.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
THEORE. JAS. JAQUES,

REGISTRAR GENERAL'S REPORT on the STATISTICAL REGISTER of QUEENSLAND for the YEAR 1867.

To the Honourable Arthur Hunter Palmer, Esquire, Colonial Secretary, &c. &c.

Registrar-General's Office, Brisbane,
June 2, 1868.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to forward to you, for presentation to Parliament, "The Statistical Register of the Colony of Queensland, for the year ending the 31st December 1867," together with the following comparative tables and explanatory remarks:—

PARLIAMENTARY BUSINESS.

The fifth session of the second Parliament of Queensland was opened by his Excellency the Governor in person on the 7th May 1867, and was prorogued by proclamation on the 23d day of the same month until the 5th day of June following. On the 29th of May his Excellency the Governor by proclamation dissolved the Legislative Assembly. A general election having taken place, the first session of the third Parliament was opened by his Excellency the Governor in person on the 7th day of August following. On the 15th day of the same month the ministry resigned, and a new one was at once appointed. An adjournment then took place consequent upon the members of the new ministry having to appeal to their respective constituencies. On the 17th of the following month the Parliament again met and proceeded to business. During the session the assembly sat on eighty-nine days, the daily average length of each sitting being six hours and twenty-three minutes.

At page 29 of the register will be found an alphabetical list of public bills, originated in each branch of the legislature, by which it appears that the number of bills originated in the Legislative Council was fifteen; three of which received the assent of his Excellency the late Governor, and two the assent of his Excellency the acting Governor; the remaining ten were disposed of in various ways, as detailed in the table referred to. In the Legislative Assembly the number of bills originated was sixty-two; thirty-six of which received the assent of his Excellency the late Governor, and eight the assent of his Excellency the acting Governor. The table before referred to will show what became of the remaining eighteen.

POPULATION.

Estimated population of Queensland on the 31st December 1867:

Males, 59,836 Females, 40,013 Persons, 99,849.

It will be found upon comparing this table with the estimated population on the 31st of December 1866 that the addition made to the population during the past year amounts to 2,529 males, and 1,119 females, in all 3,648 persons.

Estimated mean population of the year 1867:

Males, 58,572 Females, 39,453 Persons, 98,025

The centesimal increase in the population during the year 1867 is at the rate of 3·79 per cent.; males, 4·41 per cent.; females, 2·88 per cent. Upon comparison it will be seen that the male portion has increased considerably faster than that of the female. On the 31st December 1867 there were in the Colony 66·87 females to each 100 males, whereas on the 31st December 1866 there were 67·87 females to each 100 males.

QUEENSLAND.

As regards the registered births of these years, the respective numbers were, in 1866, 4,127; in 1867, 4,476; the latter year showing an increase in number of 349 over that of the previous year, and a centesimal rate of increase of 8·46.

The respective numbers of the registered deaths of each of those years were, in 1866, 2,362, in 1867, 1,745, the decrease in the latter year being 617, and the centesimal rate of decrease 26·12.

As regards the registered deaths of children, their respective numbers were in the year 1866, below two years of age, 1,008; two years and under five years of age, 174; total under five years of age, 1,182; in the year 1867, the respective numbers were 806 under two years of age, 141 between the ages of two and five, in all under five years of age, 947; the numericial decrease being, below two years of age, 202; two years and under five, 33; in all under five years of age, 235; being a centesimal decrease of deaths under five years of age of 19·88. From the foregoing, it will be observed that whilst the births during the past year have considerably increased, the number of deaths has materially diminished.

The births in the district of Drayton and Toowoomba have increased from 425 in 1866, to 659 in 1867, being an increase of 234, out of a total increase of births throughout the whole of the Colony of 349.

The registration districts of Brisbane and Ipswich show a considerable decrease in the number of deaths; for whilst in the former the deaths were in the year 1866, 939, in 1867 they only amounted to 528. In Ipswich for 1866, 399, in 1867, 154.

The great number of deaths in those districts during the year 1866 may be accounted for owing to zymotic diseases being very prevalent throughout that year.

Table F. records the marriages in each of the years 1866 and 1867. It will be observed that the marriages in 1867 were 133 less than in the previous year, being a centesimal decrease of 12·45.

IMMIGRATION.

The following table, being an abstract taken from the Immigration Returns, published at page 103 of the register, shows that only 1,075 persons arrived in the Colony from Europe during the year. This great falling off may be chiefly accounted for owing to free immigration having been stopped towards the latter end of the year 1866. It is, however, only reasonable to suppose that when the liberality of the land laws, recently passed by the Parliament, become known, immigration will again set in, and it may be anticipated that when the next register is published it will be found they have been duly appreciated.

It will be seen that the mortality amongst the passengers from Europe during the year has been very small, owing probably to the ships not having been in any way overcrowded.

EDUCATION.

At page 124 of the register will be found a return showing the number of Primary schools under the supervision of the Board of General Education for the year ending 31st December 1867. The return shows the number of schools to be 60 as against 39 for the previous year; the average daily attendance of pupils having increased from 3,722·8 to 4,359·5, being at the centesimal rate of 17·11 per cent.

The expenditure for salaries and rent has increased from 7,690*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* to 9,344*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, being a centesimal increase of 21·37 per cent.

From the return it is evident that parents duly appreciate the energy displayed by the board in constantly opening new schools, and gladly avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded of educating their children. As regards the return of private schools, published in the register, at page 125, it will be seen, upon comparison with the return for 1866, that although only a slight decrease has occurred in their numbers, a great decrease has taken place in the number of pupils attending them; the relative number of schools being 90 in 1866, and 88 in 1867. Of scholars, the number was 3,016 in 1866 as against 2,225 in 1867—the decrease being at the rate of 25·23 per cent. This great decrease may be accounted for, partly owing to the general depression which prevailed throughout the year, and partly owing to the opening of new schools by the Board of General Education.

With respect to the more serious classes of offences, it will be seen, on comparison with similar returns for the year 1866, that a sensible decrease has taken place, inasmuch as in the central criminal and circuit courts there have been only 55 cases as against 108 in 1866. This decrease has been mainly in cases of felony, there having been only 45 such cases against 97 in 1866, whilst there were 10 misdemeanors as against 11.

The proportion of acquittals in those courts is not materially altered, being as to felonies 29·47 per cent. in 1866 as against 33 per cent. in 1867, whilst the misdemeanors were so few in the aggregate as scarcely to justify comparison.

With regard to the district courts the aggregate of cases shows a slight decrease only, viz. 176 as against 182; but the results appear to have been materially different, for whilst in 1866 there were 11 remanded or discharged, 26 appear to have been so in 1867; whilst of those cases in which a final result was obtained, 69 or 37·91 per cent. were acquitted, whilst in 1867 the absolute number rose to 72, being 48 per cent., not far from one half.

It is not easy to explain why the proportion of acquittals is so much larger in the district courts than in the circuit courts; but the conclusion appears to be irresistible, that either a large proportion of the cases should never have been sent to trial, or else that the machinery of the district courts is defective for purposes of justice and favourable to crime.

On the whole, considering that the gross population of the Colony has increased, the Colony may be congratulated on a decided decrease in the more serious classes of crime.

With regard to the business of the courts of petty sessions, it will be noticed that a variation has been made in the summary by the substitution of a table of "cases investigated" instead of "taken into custody," the reason being that in many cases, especially of breaches of the "Masters and Servants Act," and minor offences against persons and property, proceedings are often initiated by summons instead of warrant.

One effect of this alteration is to make an apparent increase of cases.

The number of committals is diminished from 295 to 251, or over 14·61 per cent.

It is quite impossible to make any comparison with the cases above mentioned; but I have every reason to believe that no increase has taken place in those offences.

It is satisfactory to note that the cases of drunkenness show a marked decrease, viz., from 2,283 to 1,674, or 26·68 per cent. This is the more satisfactory, as this crime is especially fruitful in producing others. Vagrancy appears to have increased, which is, no doubt, attributable to the great amount of distress that prevailed throughout the year—a distress which might reasonably have been expected to produce a large increase of crime in general instead of a diminution.

Banks.

Government Savings Bank.

Full returns of the business of this establishment for the year 1867, being the third year of its existence, are published in the register, at pages 85, 86, and 87.

It will be seen, upon comparison, that whereas on the 31st December 1866, there stood in the books of the bank the sum of 86,759*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*, to the credit of 2,484 persons; this sum had increased on the 31st December 1867 to 120,104*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.*, and was to the credit of 3,129 persons. This increase may be considered highly satisfactory, especially when it is borne in mind the high rate of interest money commanded throughout the year. The number of depositors has increased at the rate of 25·97 per cent., and the amount deposited at the rate of 38·43 per cent.

Joint Stock Banks.

The following table gives the aggregate banking transactions of the several private banks carrying on business in the Colony for each quarter of each year since the 1st January 1860. Upon comparing the last quarter of 1866 with that of 1867, it will be found that notes in circulation and discounts have both decreased, the former at the rate of 1·33, and the latter at the rate of 16·81. A very considerable increase has taken place under the heads of the following:—Deposits, 15·75 per cent., coin, 40·82 per cent., and bullion, 56·51 per cent., and an increase of 4·46 per cent. in bills in circulation.

LIVE STOCK.

RETURN of the Live Stock in the Colony of Queensland on the 31st December 1867.

Horses, 53,146. Cattle, 940,354. Sheep, 8,665,757. Pigs, 18,142.

Comparing the above return with that of 1866, it appears, by the following table N., that a fair increase has taken place in each description of stock.

QUEENSLAND.

This table being prepared, in the fullest sense of the term, as a comparative table, requires few comments at my hands. A glance at it shows at once the quality of land under cultivation in each police district of the Colony during the years 1866 and 1867, with a detail of crops.

I cannot, however, refrain from remarking upon the great increase that has taken place in the area of land under cultivation of sugar and cotton, the former showing a centesimal increase of 228·67 per cent. for the year 1867 over that of 1866, and the latter for the same period, a centesimal increase of 182·56 per cent.

As regards sugar, with the exception of some few plantations whose results are most encouraging, some little time must yet elapse before the cultivator can expect a return for his outlay and labour.

The actual return for last year is by no means unimportant, however, as it amounted to 338 tons of sugar, which may be valued at 12,000*l.*, and 13,509 proof gallons of rum, whilst the average quality of both of these articles appears to have been unexceptionable, and the yield fully equal to those of older colonies possessed of the advantages of experience and cheap labour, which we have yet to obtain.

In reference to cotton, as the crop planted in 1867 will not be gathered until 1868, the value exported must not be measured by the total area returned as under crop, the results of which have yet to be obtained.

The following comparative table shows the quantity as well as the value of some of the more important articles of agricultural produce imported into the Colony during the years 1866 and 1867, which might, amongst many others, be produced in it.

It will be observed that a decrease has taken place in the imports of all the articles mentioned in the above table.

As this decrease is contemporaneous with an increase in the breadth of land under cultivation, and as there is no reason to suppose that the consumption within the Colony of the articles referred to has in any way materially decreased, it is but reasonable to infer that our agriculturists, besides supporting themselves, are making rapid advances towards supplying the demands of the Colony, a result in every way advantageous to us.

TRADE.

The estimated value of the exports and imports by sea of the year is—

Imports by sea	1,747,735
Exports by sea	2,198,609

These amounts do not agree with those published at pages 113 and 117 of the Register, those tables having been printed before the returns from Mackay arrived, which returns show an import of goods to the value of 16,571*l.*, and an export of goods valued at 38,269*l.*

Of the overland trade with the neighbouring colonies no record is at present obtainable.

Comparing the above returns with those for the year 1866, it appears that, during the year 1867, the imports have diminished in value by 720,172*l.*, or at the rate of 29·18 per cent. on the imports of the year 1866. The exports have increased in value by 823,118*l.*, or at the rate of 60·88 per cent. on the exports of the year 1866.

A further examination of the trade returns for the last two years shows that the exportation of goods which are the produce or the manufacture of Queensland have increased in estimated value, during the year 1867, by the sum of 867,669*l.*, or at the rate of 67·07 per cent. Since the year 1860, that is, since Queensland became separated from New South Wales, the exports have yearly increased; the increase, however, of the year 1867 far surpasses the increase of any previous year, and must be considered as highly satisfactory. The exportation of goods, the produce or manufacture of other countries or colonies, has decreased by the sum of 35,551*l.*, or at the rate of 48·82 per cent. on the value of similar exports in the year 1866.

QUEENSLAND.

By the above table it appears that the direct trade of the Colony with Great Britain has decreased under the head of imports at the rate of 36·13 per cent., and increased under the head of exports at the rate of 56·99 per cent Trade with the Australian Colonies has, under the head of imports, diminished at the rate of 25·83, and increased under the head of exports at the rate of 64·30 per cent.

The following table shows the yearly quantity and estimated value of wool exported from Queensland since its formation as a Colony :—

Upon perusing the foregoing table, it will be seen that the export of wool during the year 1867 was considerably larger than in any previous year. The difference in quantity shipped was 7,208,318 lbs., being an increase at the rate of 50·25 per cent. on the quantity exported in the year 1866. The increase in the estimated value is 431,762*l.*, being at the rate of 48·05 per cent. on the estimated value of the previous year. The quantity and estimated value of cotton exported in 1867 is greater than that of the previous year. The quantity shipped in 1867 was 412,941 lbs., and its estimated value 26,631*l.*, showing an increase on the previous year of 205,669 lbs.; the exports in that year being 207,272 lbs., and the estimated value 19,618*l.* The difference observable in the respective rates of increase of the quantity and value of cotton shipped arises from a smaller rate of value per lb. having been given to cotton in the year 1867.

Next to wool, the largest export of Queensland produce is to be found under the head "gold dust," the quantity exported during the year 1867 being 49,091 ozs. 17 dwts., of the value of 189,248*l.*, being an actual increase in value of 103,727*l.* over that of 1866, and a centesimal increase of 121·18 per cent. The value of copper ore exported shows a centesimal increase of 91·75 per cent.; the quantity exported in 1866 being valued at 33,918*l.*, while that exported in 1867 was valued at 66,038*l.* A slight increase is perceptible in the number of live stock exported during the year, the estimated value of such being 220,933*l.* as against 199,087*l.* of the previous year.

The value of the exports and imports by sea, from or to each port in the Colony, is given in the following table :—

REVENUE.

RECEIPTS and EXPENDITURE of the Year ending 31st December 1867.

The expenditure of the year 1867, charged to the consolidated revenue fund, exceeds the receipts of that year by the sum of 50,935*l.* 3*s.*

Comparing the above receipts and expenditure with those of the year 1866, the following are the total results :—

Although the foregoing statement still shows an excess of expenditure over that of receipts, it is satisfactory to observe that the expenditure is not increasing in the same ratio as receipts; a very marked difference being observable in the years 1866 and 1867; the increase of receipts for the latter year being at the rate of 12·83 per cent., whilst the increase of expenditure was only at the rate of 3·32 per cent., showing a difference in favour of receipts of 9·51 per cent.

RENTS AND ASSESSMENTS.

The following table shows the receipts for rents and assessments during the last eight years. Receipts from these sources continue to increase steadily year by year; the increase for the year 1867 over that of the previous one being at the rate of 33·56 per cent.:—

REVENUE DERIVED FROM DUTIES COLLECTED BY THE CUSTOMS.

The following table shows the amount collected by the Customs during each of the last eight years, and the rateable proportion each year's collection bears to the mean population of such year:—

1867 -	98,025	283,366 10 11	2 17 9¾

It will be seen from the foregoing that the average receipt per head of the mean population of the year is considerably greater than that of any previous year. The increase is to be accounted for owing to the extra duties imposed by the ad valorem and other import duties Acts (30 Vict., Nos. 9 and 15).

Table Z. is published in a comparative form for the purpose of showing the different amounts paid as Customs duties for the years 1866 and 1867, as well as specifying the articles upon which such duties were paid. It also tends to show the effect the ad valorem and other import duties Acts have had upon the revenue derivable from the Customs.

Public Debt.

The public debt of the Colony amounted, on the 31st December 1867, to the sum of 3,344,000*l.*, of which sum 2,905,500*l.* was created by loans, and 438,500*l.* under the Treasury Bills Acts of 1866, viz., 30 Vict., No. 8, and 30 Vict., No. 10. The interest on the loans amounted to 174,300*l.*, and on the Treasury Bills to the sum of 43,850*l.*, in all 218,180*l.*, being at the rate of 2*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* per head of the estimated mean population of the year.

Attached to this report is a table containing a statistical view of the Colony from 1860 to the end of 1867,—a table which contains a large amount of information on subjects of great importance to all interested in the Colony, and which cannot fail to be the means of supplying those who peruse it with much reliable data without the trouble of reading through the various tables from which the return is compiled.

TASMANIA.

No. 16.

No. 16.

To the Honourable the Colonial Secretary.

Legislative Council Office, Hobart Town,
July 20, 1868.

Sir,

I have the honour to append hereto the statistics of this Colony for the past year 1867.

In these some improvements and additions which the experience of the preceding year has suggested have been introduced, and some corrections have been made.

It is gratifying to me to find, that although some inaccuracies have been discovered in my first year's work, they are not of sufficient importance to affect its usefulness as a statistical record. I have observed with some satisfaction the increased value which seems to be attached to these publications; for it can hardly be questioned that a careful consideration and "gathering up" of the facts which these records of our national life present, in order to obtain a correct knowledge of our capabilities and deficiencies, is the first step towards the development of the now neglected resources of this Colony. From several quarters I have had spontaneous offers of assistance in the way of supplying additional matter; and I take this opportunity of expressing my acknowledgments to those who made them, and also to all who kindly responded to appeals made to them for extra-official information.

I am sorry to say, however, that in some cases the greatest trouble has been experienced in obtaining the information required. Any such neglect to furnish returns, as well as any want of accuracy in making them up, increase, to an extent that can hardly be conceived by any one who has not experienced it, the labour and anxiety of compiling these Statistics; and I shall be glad indeed if this reference to the inconvenience may have the effect of producing an improvement in this respect on future occasions.

I.—Population.

Population.

The population, as estimated at the end of the year 1867, was 98,455, being an increase upon that of the preceding year of 1,087 souls, or 1·116 per cent. In 1866 the rate of increase was 2·28 per cent.; so that it has been lessening by about one half. In England, in 1867 it was 1·037 per cent.; in Victoria, 2·514 per cent.; in New South Wales (1866), 4·87 per cent.; in South Australia (average for three years), about 5 per cent.;* in Queensland (1866), 9·57 per cent.

On reference to the Return of Immigration and Emigration during the year, it will be found that there was an actual loss of population, by persons leaving the Colony, to the extent of 466; the number of departures having by so many exceeded the number of arrivals. In 1866 there appeared to be an increase of population by arrivals of 690 souls; but in my Report for that year I expressed my belief that most of these would "appear in the next year among the departures, as being visitors from the other colonies, "who would return thither in the early part of the next year." This exodus now appears to have taken place.

* Report of Government Statist for 1866.

The excess of births over deaths in 1867 was 1,558.* The following table will show how the rate of increase from this source has varied during the past ten years:—

Year.	Births.	Deaths.	Increase per Cent. of Population.	Year.	Births.	Deaths.	Increase per Cent. of Population.
1858 - -	3,138	1,560	1·869	1863 - -	2,998	1,418	1·726
1859 - -	3,244	1,406	2·126	1864 - -	3,031	1,433	1·713
1860 - -	3,238	1,740	1·701	1865 - -	3,069	1,263	1·897
1861 - -	3,207	1,472	1·923	1866 - -	2,805	1,323	1·522
1862 -	3,149	1,357	1·975	1867 - -	2,971	1,413	1·582
Mean -	—	—	1·919	Mean -	—	—	16·88

It thus appears, that in the latter half of the past decenniad the natural ratio of increase had diminished by 0·231, or 12·037 per cent., as regards the ratio for the former half. If the same law of decrease should continue to prevail, in the same degree, in little more than seven years hence all accession to the population from excess of births over deaths would entirely cease, that is, the death-rate would equal the birth-rate, and unless the tide of immigration should set towards this Colony, the population would after that time begin to decrease. Under the head of "Vital Statistics," I remarked, last year:— "The births, therefore, are diminishing more rapidly than the deaths; so that, unless "this effect be interrupted by external causes, the natural increase to the population will "gradually become less and less." The results deduced from the above table afford additional evidence to the truth of this fact. We need not go far to seek for the cause of this declension. A constant stream of emigration is going on, draining the Colony of the more vigorous and enterprising portion of its people—the most valuable part—and leaving behind only the aged and children.

This is an evil which has frequently been made the subject of discussion, and various remedies have been suggested. But it is evident that no direct remedy can be applied. The influx and efflux of population, no less than trade, is governed by certain laws, and subject to certain conditions. Those laws, indeed, cannot be controlled; yet the conditions which modify their operation may sometimes, by a wise and far-seeing course of procedure, be so far regulated as to mitigate a threatened evil. There are, if I mistake not, some causes (which will be more particularly specified under another division) already at work which may be expected before long to bring about a reaction. In the mean time it is incumbent on all who are anxious for the prosperity of this Colony, by every means in their power, to advance the cause of moral, intellectual, and material progress. So long as Tasmania lags behind her neighbours in the exhibition of mental activity, and in the application of science to the common purposes of life, so long will her life-blood be drained away, and the flower of her youth be driven to other shores, to take that place in the world's race of progress which is denied to them in a country where utter stagnation has hitherto blocked up every avenue to material improvement. As production increases so will population increase also, and the most obvious way to bring about such a desirable result is to create, by the judicious employment of capital, such an increased demand for labour that an additional supply may be required in order to satisfy it.

During the year 3,559 persons arrived in the Colony (including 56 Bounty Immigrants), and 4,025 left it; being a loss to the population, as already mentioned, of 466 souls.

II.—Trade, Commerce, and Navigation.

The value of the imports in 1867 amounted to 856,348*l.*, and of the exports to 790,494, the former exceeding the latter by 65,854*l.* As compared with the figures of the preceding year, there was a decrease of 25,759*l.* on the imports, and of 44,112*l.* on the exports.

The imports in 1867 were at the rate of 8*l.* 13*s.* 11½*d.* per head; the exports at the rate of 8*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.* per head. In 1866, the rates per head were, imports, 9*l.* 1*s.* 2¼*d.*; exports, 8*l.* 11*s.* 5¼*d.*

* Not including the deaths which took place beyond the limits of the colony.

TASMANIA.

The exports, as will be seen by the subjoined table, which shows the variations in our commerce for the last 10 years, were less in 1867 than in any of the nine preceding years —indeed they have not been so limited since 1851.

1867 - - -	856,348	—	25,759	790,494	—	44,112

It will be observed that in 1865, the imports were extremely low—indeed, at their very lowest; in 1866, they exceeded those of the previous year by 119,732*l.* The natural consequence of this was a corresponding falling off in the quantity of goods imported in 1867, to the extent of 25,759.

The constant falling off in the export trade is matter of serious consideration. For although it is perfectly true that the wealth of a country is not to be measured by the excess of exports over imports, still in a Colony like this, where the exports consist, not of articles manufactured from raw materials brought from abroad, but chiefly of those which are produced directly from the soil, such as grain, wool, fruit, hops, and timber, it is evident that a decline in the exports must indicate a decline in the quantity of produce raised from the soil, and a corresponding retrogression of the agricultural and pastoral interests—locally the two great sources of production. It is important, too, to observe that while the profits derived from imported goods benefit the non-producing† classes only, those arising from the export of articles of colonial production go into the pockets of the producers (besides affording employment to labour and a second or third profit to non-producers), and thus tend to retain and attract the most valuable part of the population of a country.

The imports and exports in 1867 were distributed among the different countries thus :—

—	Imports.	Exports.	Proportion per Cent. of Total.
			Imports.	Exports.
	£	£	£	£
United Kingdom -	299,892	378,532	35·02	47·89

A comparison of this table with the corresponding one for 1866 shows that with the United Kingdom both our import and export trade has considerably increased; with

* In the statistics of this year, p. 16, there is an error of 1,000*l.* in the addition, which was not observed last year.

† I use the term "non-producing classes" here in a popular sense, not as synonymous with "unproductive labour" as defined by Mr. J. S. Mill, Principles of Political Economy, vol. I., p. 61.

Victoria it has in both cases diminished; with New South Wales the import trade has diminished, the export has slightly increased; with South Australia (from which there are no imports direct) the exports have increased; with Queensland the import trade has increased, the export has diminished; with New Zealand the trade generally has increased to a considerable extent; with Mauritius, as might be expected in consequence of the fever which raged there during the past year, trade has declined.

In regard to our commercial relations with the United Kingdom and Victoria it should be observed, that the above figures are somewhat deceptive, inasmuch as a considerable part of our imports from the former are brought, not to this Colony direct, but by way of Victoria, and a proportionate part ought therefore to be transferred from the one to the other. Measures have been taken to remove this defect in the Customs returns for the current year, and also to render them more perfect in some other respects.

Comparing the values of some of the principal exports, as shown in the above return, with those for previous years, we arrive at the following results. Bark appears to have been exported in larger quantities than in any of the last eleven years. Beef and provisions were much less than in last year, though more than in 1865. In salt meat, Tasmania can scarcely compete with the Australian Colonies, but in hams and bacon, as was shown in last year's report, there is a large market for her surplus in the neighbouring colonies. Butter and cheese were less than in the two preceding years; breadstuffs, on the contrary, were nearly double the value of the exports in those years. Oats and barley have, on the whole, shown a constant decrease since 1857 (the furthest date to which it is convenient to extend the comparison), being less in 1867 than one half of the value of the exports in 1864, the next lowest value in the eleven years. Supposing the prices to be nearly the same, more than seven times as much oats and barley were exported in 1857 as in 1867. Hay and chaff have diminished considerably compared with the value 10 or 11 years ago, but in the last few years there is no striking variation. Hides, skins, and leather show a higher value than in any of the last 11 years. The production of hops is very rapidly increasing. In 1867 the exports were valued at 13,730*l.*, the maximum in the previous years being 6,695*l.* Horses show a small increase upon last year. Malt liquor was exported only to the extent of 3,511 gallons, valued at 537*l.* I called attention to this article last year, and showed that in the colonies of Victoria, New South Wales, and South Australia only the imports amounted in 1865 to 681,314*l.* Besides these colonies, there would be a large demand in Queensland and New Zealand. Of malt we exported absolutely none, and even the home market was chiefly supplied by the imported article. The quantity of sperm oil exported decreased from 381 tons in 1866 to 241¾ in 1867. Eggs as an article of export seem to be rising into some importance, the value last year being 1,590*l.* Timber shows an increase in value from 45,731*l.* in 1866 to 51,747*l.* in 1867; vegetables a decrease from 38,452*l.* to 22,808*l.* Wool also shows a decrease in value from 385,405*l.* to 378,977*l.*; the quantities being in 1866, 4,765,221 lbs.; in 1867, only 4,686,224 lbs.

The following shows the quantity, value, and average price of wool exported during the last 11 years.

It will be seen that, although the quantities fluctuate considerably, the average was higher in the former than in the latter portion of the period, while the average price has increased by one penny farthing per pound.

The following list shows that articles which might have been produced in the Colony have been imported to the value of 118,846*l.*; or, omitting those which probably under present circumstances can be procured more cheaply from abroad than they can be produced at home, to the value of, say 100,000*l.* In saying this I wish to guard myself against being supposed to favour the now exploded notion, that to import for home-consumption is adverse to a country's interests; I only desire to show that there is abundant room for increasing the amount of our produce, even to supply our own requirements, independently of foreign markets. In any case in which goods can really be imported cheaper than they can be produced here, it would, of course, be for the general benefit that they should be so imported; but then, the labour thus set free should be only diverted into other more profitable channels, and not be allowed to remain unproductive, as is, I fear, too often the case in this Colony.

The question how production, trade, and commerce may most effectually be stimulated and fostered may be best answered by a reference to the history of free trade, or, as it has been, perhaps, better styled, "unrestricted competition," in England. It has invariably been found, that whenever burdens upon trade have been removed, an improvement in the revenue, and in the condition of the people, has been the result.

Intercolonial Free Trade Bill.

I cannot quit this part of the subject without some reference to the Intercolonial Free Trade Bill, which the Secretary of State declined to entertain. The failure of that bill to become law must greatly retard the development of our commerce with the sister colonies; but it has nevertheless been productive of a large amount of good. It has called the attention of the colonies interested to the advantages of a free interchange of products, and the generally favourable reception which it has met with affords ground for hope that, before long, the subject of free trade as a general principle will be better understood. For it must soon become evident that if a partial application of the principle, such as was provided for by that bill, be beneficial to those who might become parties to it, a more complete application of the same principle, namely, the free interchange of productions, would be attended with still more happy results. The attention of Australians having once been engaged by the subject, a way will probably yet be found to attain the end proposed.

Protection.

In the meantime, I think, I shall be doing some service to the public by supplementing the few remarks which I considered it not beyond my province to make last year on the subject of protection; and I am the more impelled to do this because the question, in one of its most plausible phases, has recently been brought before the public in more than one of the country districts.

And, first, of protection generally. It is a matter of notoriety, that a protective policy has for some time past prevailed in that colony to which we are most closely bound by the ties of commercial intercourse, namely, Victoria. The following extract from a public journal of that colony shows what the effect of thus setting at nought the well-established principles of political economy has been:—

"Our imports are less by 3,880,047*l.* than they were in 1866, the last year of free trade; while our exports during the same period have fallen off by upwards of a million. Under free trade our local manufactures were rapidly extending, and we were exporting more than seventy articles of our own TASMANIA. manufacture to the neighbouring colonies; but protection, by increasing the cost of production, and by driving away buyers from other ports, has strangled some manufactures, and crippled others."*

America has often been appealed to as an instance of the success of a protective policy; the following extracts from the report of the Special Commissioner will show how it operates there:—

"The effect of the great increase and disturbance of prices thus noted has been as follows:—

"First, a decrease of production and consumption, and a partial suspension of national development—a result fully in accordance with a well-recognised law of political economy respecting prices.

"Another result arising from the great enhancement of prices, above referred to, of all labour and material is, that the products of American industry are exposed to a most unfair competition in their own and foreign markets with the similar offerings of other countries, produced from untaxed raw materials, with the further great advantage of cheaper capital and lower wages for labour. In fact, in nearly every department of American industry, the possession of the home market is seriously interfered with, while our ability to compete with foreign nations in foreign markets is restricted to the sale of a very few articles in which the American producer is largely favoured by natural or accidental advantages, as in the case of petroleum, cotton, sewing machines, and a few other things.

"The foreign commerce of the United States is being, as it were, swept from the ocean. * * *

"A reference to the official returns shows the amount of American registered tonnage engaged in the foreign trade in 1865–66 to have been 1,492,924 tons, as compared with 2,546,237 tons in 1859–60; which, allowing for the difference between the old and new measurements, indicates a decrease in five years of over 50 per cent. In 1853 the tonnage of the United States was about 15 per cent. in excess of that of Great Britain, while at the present time it is estimated at 83 per cent. less."

What he says in regard to the importation of wool is entitled to special consideration, as the late fall in the price of wool, in consequence of the American market being practically closed against the imports of foreign wool, by which the supply has overtaken the demand, has been seriously felt by the wool growers in the whole Australasian group:—

"Thirty years ago the manufacture of broad cloth constituted from 50 to 60 per cent. of the whole woollen business of the United States; now, it is not probably in excess of five per cent. Why? Because American legislation has not permitted the importation of broad cloth wools, and the American agriculturists have produced nothing to take their place, and never will until the successful establishment of the broad cloth industry in the United States has created a constant home demand for 'broad-cloth' wools."

The following extract, published in The San Francisco Times, from the annual circular of a trading firm, is still more definite:—

"The tariff on foreign wools passed by Congress is merely prohibitory. It was established as a protection to wool growers, but has been anything but a protection; and we believe that so long as such a tariff exists the prices will remain comparatively low.

"The wools formerly imported into the United States from Australia, the Cape, South America, &c. were shut off by the tariff, although they were essential to our home manufactures for mixing with other wool, so as to give variety of productions.

"The wools so expelled had to find a market in Europe, and their importation there reduced prices so much as to allow the European factories to produce goods at such a rate that they could be imported into the United States, even with the ruling high duty upon foreign imports, at a lower figure than they could be produced there.

"We mean to say that the price of wool would have been higher if no duties had been placed upon it. A protective tariff has always been a double-edged blade, that proves injurious to those who handle it without care."†

This is the invariable effect of so-called protection to the produce of labour. When the protection is applied, by means of trades unions or other similar combinations, to labour itself, the result is the same, as will be seen by the following extract from a late English paper:—

"The effect of trade combinations in driving trade from old localities has of late been generally alluded to. During the past week a cotton mill in Preston has received a large consignment of spinning machinery from Belgium, which, notwithstanding the cost of transit, has been supplied at 15 per

---

* The "Australasian," February 29, 1868. It is, however, but fair to mention that some part of this declension must have been caused by the late political situation.

† Having shown the evils of the protective system, it may be well to advert to what the treaty of commerce between England and France, by removing restrictions to trade, has done for those countries in regard to one branch of trade which may be taken as a sample of the rest.

The imports of cotton yarn and cotton yarn waste from France into England were in 1860, 45,322 lbs.. in 1866, 2,518,635 (being almost entirely "waste" of cotton yarn); the imports of cotton manufactures were in 1860 valued at 371,774*l.*, in 1866 at 589,216*l.*

The exports of cotton yarn and cotton manufactures from England to France were in 1860 valued at 222,383*l.*, in 1866 at 1,498,894*l.*

The article from which I quote the above, adds: "Though the cotton exports to France cannot, compared with the trade we carry on with other countries, be considered large, they are now in value seven times what they were in 1859." (Journal of the Statistical Society of London, December 1867, p. 575.)

cent. less than the English prices. Once Preston was a noted place for the manufacture of machinery, and it supplied a great part of Lancashire; now its machinery is being actually imported from the Continent."

In Colonel Sykes' Analysis of a Report upon the State of the Empire of France (1867) it is remarked, "In machinery the phenomenon had appeared of the export of machinery "to Newcastle." *

The Iron Trade Review (Newcastle) says: "The causes of the stagnation [in the "trade] are not far to trace. They are, briefly, over production * * * * and the "injuries inflicted upon the trade owing to the actions of trades unions." †

History constantly repeats itself, and the intelligent and prudent will respect its teaching.

Secondly, as to the particular form of protection,—encouragement of the growth of agricultural produce.

Startling as the assertion may appear to some, it is nevertheless strictly true, that protection to meat and corn is protection in its very worst form. For these being necessaries of life, and therefore more largely consumed, or at any rate more indispensable than any other commodities, the amount of which the consumers are mulcted, or the inconvenience to which they are subjected, for the benefit of one or two classes, is greater, while that portion which is thereby added to the public revenue is less than in the case of any other protected article.

We may conveniently consider the subject under the following heads :—

1. The effect upon the consumer.
2. The effect upon production generally.
3. How far the duty would benefit the producer.

1. We are entitled to assume, as a postulate, that whenever the interests of a minority in a state are incompatible with those of the majority they must give way—the less to the greater. If it can be shown, therefore, that the general community (that is the consumers) would be injured by such a duty, it will be a sufficient argument for its rejection.

Mr. Mill says ‡ :—"A tax on any one commodity, whether laid on its production, "its importation, its carriage from place to place, or its sale, * * * * will, as a "general rule, raise the value and price of the commodity by at least the amount of the "tax. There are few cases in which it does not raise them by more than that amount." Again, "One of the commonest cases of discriminating duties is that of a tax on the "importation of a commodity capable of being produced at home unaccompanied by an "equivalent tax on the home production. A commodity is never permanently imported "unless it can be obtained from abroad at a smaller cost of labour and capital on the "whole than is necessary for producing it. If, therefore, by a duty on the importation, "it is rendered cheaper to produce the article than to import it, an extra quantity "of labour and capital is expended without any extra result. The labour is useless, "and the capital is spent in paying people for laboriously doing nothing. All customs "duties which operate as an encouragement to the home production of the taxed "article, are thus an eminently wasteful mode of raising a revenue." Speaking of wheat (and the same applies to meat) he says: "If the wheat produced in a country "is twenty million of quarters, and the consumption twenty-one millions, a million "being annually imported, and if on this million a duty is laid which raises the price "ten shillings per quarter, the price which is raised is not that of the million only, but "of the whole twenty-one millions. Taking the most favourable, but extremely "improbable supposition, that the importation is not at all checked, nor the home "production enlarged, the State gains a revenue of only half a million, while the "consumers are taxed ten millions and a half, the ten millions being a contribution to "the home growers."

To apply these arguments to the case in point,—69,673 sheep and lambs, and 7,001 horned cattle (including calves) were slaughtered in Hobart Town and Launceston during 1867, of which 35,595 sheep and 1,935 cattle were imported. Now, if but a very small duty, say five shillings a head on cattle and a corresponding duty on sheep, were imposed, it would either not affect the importation of stock or the price of meat, in which case the graziers would get no benefit; or if the importation were checked, or the butchers raised the price to the consumer by a farthing a pound (which would be much more than the duty), the graziers would probably either get no increase of price,

* Journal of the Statistical Society of London, March 1868, p. 56.
† Ibid, p. 87.
‡ Political Economy, vol. II., chap. iv.

TASMANIA.

or at best only a nominal one, the only class who would substantially profit by the duty being the butchers. But, again, suppose a higher duty were imposed, say one pound per head on cattle, and two shillings and sixpence on sheep. Granting that the effect of the duty were to raise the price of meat by no more than the amount of the duty (which is almost certainly below what it actually would be), the people of Hobart Town and Launceston would have to pay, say, 15,700*l.* per annum more than before, of which only about 6,500*l. would go into the public treasury, the remainder being divided as a bonus between the butchers and graziers, the former coming in for the lion's share. But if the price in the two principal towns were thus enhanced, a corresponding rise would naturally take place throughout the Colony, and thus the burden which the community would have to bear to swell the profits of the favoured few would be about three times the difference between 15,700*l.* and 6,500*l.*, or 27,600*l.* per annum, and this besides the 6,500*l.* which it would have to pay to the State as the amount of duty; so that the real amount of the tax would be, not 6,500*l.*, but 34,100*l.* per annum.†

The plain truth of the matter is, that unless the duty raise the price of meat sufficiently to bear heavily upon the consumer, it affords no benefit to the grower; so that the expected profits of the latter are in exact proportion to the pressure on the former.

If the tax on stock or meat were imposed at all, a corresponding excise duty should be placed on stock of colonial growth, so that the State might have the benefit of the whole tax, instead of only a minute portion of it.

Live stock may be imported into the Colony in one of these two ways: (1.) By the Australian grazier himself; (2.) By parties in this Colony.

(1.) The argument which has been put forth that it is not the consumer but the Australian producer who pays the tax clearly can apply only to the first case. The Australian importer would certainly pay the duty in the first instance, but would be reimbursed the amount of duty by the increase of price which he would obtain from the Tasmanian consumer.

"* * * Attempts have sometimes been made to defend or apologise for restrictions on importations by endeavouring to show that they oblige foreigners to contribute to the revenue of the nation which has sagacity to profit by them! * * * The truth, however, is that the project is wholly visionary, and that duties on imports are always paid by the importers, and never by the exporters. The price of every freely produced commodity is determined here and everywhere else by the competition of the producers. Taking all things into account, the articles disposed of to foreigners and to native buyers fetch about the same prices. The circumstance of the commodities which we send abroad being subject in France, the United States, and elsewhere to certain duties, lessens, of course, the demand for them in those countries; but, otherwise, it is of not the slightest consequence to the producers here. They sell their goods indifferently to the foreign merchant and to their nearest neighbour, for a price sufficient to defray the cost of their production, including profits; and the duties imposed on them abroad, whether they be high or low, make a further addition to their cost, which must obviously be paid by the foreign consumers. It is singular how a different opinion should ever have been entertained, it is obviously without so much as the shadow of a foundation."§

---

* There is some difference between the numbers of imported stock returned by the Customs department and those taken at the slaughter-houses. The latter have been used in this argument.

† The imported meat being consumed at the two ports only, country consumers would contribute nothing to the revenue.

‡ To prove this, suppose that cattle are selling at 6*l.* per head in Melbourne or Sydney, and at 10*l.* here; the importer then gets a gross profit of 4*l.* per head. When the duty is imposed, he may at first only get 3*l.*, and the reduction of profit may for a time induce him to suspend his shipments; but when the price of meat here rises (as it certainly would) by the amount of the duty, or more, it is evident that the same margin of profit will be left as at first, if not even a greater. Then (unless the price should have been brought down by competition among the home producers) the importation would, by the ordinary laws of supply and demand, be renewed; the consumer, it will be observed, will still pay the tax.

§ M'Culloch's Principles of Political Economy, p. 166.

2. "Every tax," says the author whom I have before quoted, "on a commodity tends to raise its price, and consequently to lessen the demand for it in the market in which it [is] sold." If therefore the price of meat were so affected by the duty as to be sensibly raised, the consumption would decrease, the difference in price being compensated by the consumer using less,—and thus production, instead of being encouraged, would be checked. But, after a time, a reaction might possibly take place. The increased price would on this supposition stimulate production, and increase competition, by which the price would be again brought down to its former standard, or even lower; and whenever this fall should have taken place, the grower would be no better off than before, while the imposition of the duty would induce the Colonies affected to make reprisals, and so still further impede the development of our trade.

Moreover, a rise in the price of meat, being one of the necessaries of life, would diminish the demand for labour and the value of wages, and discourage immigration, if it did not even drive residents out of the Colony, and react injuriously upon every department of industry, so that the ramifications of the evil would permeate the whole social system to such an extent that it is extremely difficult to say where it would end. It may be added that whatever tends to impede the development of trade, commerce, and production in other countries, with which we hold more or less closely commercial relations, narrows their power of consumption, and so contracts the market for our own produce. The true view is that which regards all countries as bound together by the tie of a common interest; one cannot suffer without, to some extent, and in some way, drawing others in; and so, on the other hand, when one flourishes, the others will be found in some respect or other to be sharers in its prosperity.

3. It has already been said that the benefit to the grower would be small compared with the profits of the butcher; besides which, consumers would probably resort to other kinds of food, and thus, what the grower might possibly (for a time) gain by increase of price, he would lose by the decrease in demand.

It is absolutely certain that the benefit which the grower would derive from a protective duty would be but temporary, for such a duty must, by at first unnaturally raising the price, produce one of two consequences,—it must either, by encouraging competition by means of an artificial scarcity, bring down prices to such an extent as to leave no profit to the grazier, or else, if the home supply should not be so much increased as to affect the price, importation from abroad would recommence. In either case an injury would have been done to the consumer, and the producer would be no better off than before.

In regard to the importation of meat, as well as to all other articles of foreign produce, there are already protective charges in the shape of freight and other expenses.

It is strange that it should never have occurred to the advocates of protection to meat of home growth, that it is just because the price is higher in this than in the sister Colonies, that it is found profitable to import it from thence; and that the true way to discourage importation is rather to reduce the price than to augment it.

There are only two methods by which importation can, without violating the plain principles of political economy, be prevented. 1. By bringing the consumer and producer into immediate relation, the latter coming into the market as a retail dealer, and thus breaking down a monopoly which intercepts his profits. 2. By affording such facilities, in the way of transport, to the home grower, as may enable him successfully to compete with the importer.

The true policy of the graziers is, not to agitate for protection with the view of benefiting a class at the expense of the whole Colony, but to urge on the adoption of the principles partially enunciated in the measure which has recently been disallowed —the Intercolonial Free Trade Bill. The Australian Colonies generally having shown a disposition in favour of the principle of that Bill, it only requires that the present disabilities be removed in order to its adoption; while by putting a protective duty on the produce of those Colonies, they would probably refuse to enter into any agreement with us for the purpose. In fact, the time for reprisals or aggressive measures has gone by; what might have had some show of reason some time since is now a mere anachronism—unjustifiable, impolitic, and absurd.

If the matter be left to the operation of natural laws, it seems likely that before long the manufacture of preserved meat in the Australian Colonies will be so extensively undertaken as to absorb a considerable part of the surplus stock of meat in those Colonies. As a necessary consequence of this and other causes, the price of live stock must rise, and the increased price, together with the new markets opened to the trade in other parts of the world, will greatly lessen the inducements to send meat hither.

TASMANIA.

Every rise in the price of meat in the foreign, or fall in the home market, by so far equalising the values, tends to discourage importation; and when the natural course of events has carried this equalising process to a certain point, the import trade in cattle will no longer yield a profit, and the supply from abroad will cease of itself.

It has often been urged that free trade, though it may be proper in an old country, with a large manufacturing interest like England, is not suitable to the circumstances of a young and struggling community like this, whose wealth lies chiefly in its pastoral and agricultural products. It might be sufficient to point in answer to the example of the United States, but the arguments which I have already adduced will (if they have been clearly stated), show that free trade is, if anything, more necessary in a country like this than in England, which might afford the luxury of protection without feeling its paralysing influence so immediately as in a small and unsettled community such as this is. The general laws of trade are the same in all countries and under all conditions, and though their operation is to some extent modified by special circumstances, there is nothing in the case of this Colony to make free trade less applicable than in that of any other country.

Shipping.

To revert to the consideration of the returns before us, the shipping inwards and outwards in 1867 were as follows:—

	British.		Foreign.		Total.
	Number of Vessels.	Tonnage.	Number of Vessels.	Tonnage.	Number of Vessels.	Tonnage.
Inwards -	595	96,186	3	1,204	598	97,390
Outwards -	629	102,141	2	613	631	102,754

The total number of vessels inwards shows a decrease of 7 per cent., and the tonnage a decrease of $9\frac{3}{4}$ per cent., as compared with the numbers in 1866. The number entered outwards was less by one than in 1866, and the tonnage was also less by 3·311.

It is worthy of remark that the tonnage of vessels cleared at the Port of Launceston and sub-ports was greater than that cleared at the port of Hobart Town, in the proportion of 52 to 51 nearly. The tonnage of vessels entered was greater at Hobart Town than at Launceston, but only in the proportion of 49 to 48. Ten years ago (in 1858) the proportion of vessels entered at the ports of Hobart Town and Launceston was as 91 to 57 nearly.

The number and tonnage of vessels entered inwards during 1866–7 at the different ports and sub-ports is shown in the following table:

	1866.		1867.
	Number.	Tons.	Number.	Tons.
Hobart Town - - -	227	54,568	222	49,085
Launceston - - -	158	36,368	135	29,945

Steamers.

The number of steamers registered during the year 1867 was the same as in the preceding year.

Shipping registered.

The number of shipping (including steamers) was also the same as regards the total; but five vessels seem to have been transferred from Launceston to Hobart Town.

In the Whale Fisheries, one additional vessel was engaged in 1867, increasing the tonnage by 171, and the number of men employed by 16. This increase in the means of capture was not, however, rewarded by an increase in the profits, since the quantity of oil produced was less by about 150 tuns, the decrease in the value being represented as 15,200*l.* Whale fisheries.

The quantity of coal raised in 1867 is stated to have been 8,341 tons, against 14,309 in 1866. The decrease occurred at New Town and at Seymour. The Seymour Coal Company Limited was wound up in December last, in consequence of its inability to obtain additional capital (the original capital having been too small to admit of the Company being successfully worked); and the mines and plant have since passed into other hands. Coal.

The return of the prices of provisions, &c. at Hobart Town shows that ale, bread, flour, potatoes, and rice were dearer in 1867 than in 1866, while candles, oil, (Colza), starch, beef, and mutton were cheaper. Prices of provisions.

A return of the contract prices of the principal articles of consumption supplied to the government in 1867 has been added, and will prove useful for comparison in future years.

The rate of wages is an important element in estimating the material and social condition of any country. The returns hitherto rendered are so meagre as to afford but a very scanty amount of information in this respect. One of the most important of the producing classes, the agricultural labourers, was altogether omitted; and so was another class, that of domestic servants. Rates of wages.

It would serve no adequate purpose to enter into an analysis of the return of wages now presented; but, in observing the difference in the rates in various parts of the Colony, one cannot help thinking how much would be saved in some districts to the employer, and gained in others by the employed, by increased facilities of communication, which would have a tendency to equalize the rates throughout the whole country, and so remove those great inequalities which now militate against the interests of both the classes referred to. I shall have occasion again to refer to this subject when speaking of the prices of agricultural produce.

A comparison of the return of trades and manufactories affords some instructive results. Turning our attention first to those branches of industry which are subservient to the purposes of agriculture, or in any way minister to it, we find an increase of 4 in the makers of agricultural implements; a decrease of 1 in the number of bone mills; of 2 in the number of breweries; an increase of 1 in the number of cider makers, and 11 in the fellmongers; a decrease of 2 in the maltsters; of 5 in the flour mills worked by wind, of 1 in those worked by steam, and of 2 in those worked by water power; a decrease of 11 in the number of tanners; an increase of 8 in the wheelwrights. As regards some other industries, we find an increase of 7 cabinet makers and joiners; of 1 coach builder; 6 coopers; and of 5 engineers; and a decrease of 5 sawmills and 3 wool-staplers. The latter is significant, as affording corroborative evidence of the decline of the growth of wool, as before shown from the Customs Returns. It will be observed that there is a decrease of 11 in the number of publicans. Trades and manufactories.

III.—FINANCE.

The receipts of the general revenue (excluding the balance from 1866, but including "Adjusting Entries," 13,128*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.*) were 272,952*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*, being 27,531*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* more than in 1866. The greater part of this increase is to be found under the following heads:—Publicans' Licences, 6,470*l.*; Immigration Commissioners, 4,000*l.*; Debentures, 9,200*l.*; Arrears of former years, the accounts of which had been closed, 5,261*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.*, being chiefly repayments from the British Government. Of the above receipts, 127,223*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* (including Bond rents, &c. at Launceston) were derived from Customs' Duties, being less than in 1866 by 2,086*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*; 56,087*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* from sources classed as "Inland Revenue," being more than in 1866 by 9,034*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*, of which excess 6,470*l.*, as above stated, were contributed by the publicans. General revenue.

The receipts from Customs' Duties were nearly the same as in 1864, the inland revenue nearly the same as in 1862.

The expenditure charged to the general revenue was 255,552*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.*, being 13,190*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* more than in 1866.

TASMANIA.

The amounts under their several classes for the two years, 1866 and 1867, stood thus:—

	Year 1866.			Year 1867.
Ordinary expenditure for the year - -	182,363	11	2	163,695	0	3
Special disbursements - - -	31,592	12	7	50,303	19	9
	213,956	3	9	213,999	0	0
Arrears of former years - -	28,405	3	9	41,553	0	8
	242,361	7	6	255,552	0	8

The increase under the head of "Special Disbursements" was caused by the redemption of debentures to the extent of 15,000*l.*, and by a payment of 3,500*l.* to the Immigration Commissioners.

In the arrears of former years there was also a large excess, chiefly for postal services, charitable allowances, and maintenance of convicts.

The receipts of the land fund were 124,945*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, being an increase upon those of 1866 of 33,327*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.* They may be arranged for comparison as follows:—

	Year 1866.			Year 1867.
Sale of Crown Lands - -	53,067	0	11	47,053	14	5
Rent of ditto - - -	9,223	4	8	8,200	10	8
Fees - - - -	2,113	1	1	2,380	2	5
Debentures sold - - -	23,110	0	0	64,568	0	0
Other Miscellaneous Receipts -	829	5	0	2,742	14	9
	88,342	11	8	124,945	2	3

Land fund.

The revenue from Crown lands was considerably less than in 1866; from fees somewhat greater. The debentures sold show a large increase, of which 39,118*l.* were for public works, and 1,216*l.* were monies received from the Immigration Commissioners.

The expenditure from the land fund in 1867 was 106,471*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, which is very nearly the same as in 1866. For the two years, it may be thus compared:—

	Year 1866.			Year 1867.
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Ordinary Services - -	42,139	7	4	42,861	19	7
Debentures redeemed - -	13,900	0	0	17,380	0	0
New Schools, Immigration, &c. -	1,108	1	9	6,938	14	8*
Public Works—Roads, Bridges, &c.	46,474	0	2	35,229	15	4
Arrears of former years - -	3,119	9	7	4,060	17	11
	106,740	18	10	106,471	17	6

The expenditure by the commissariat on account of imperial services was 67,235*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, against 56,460*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* in 1866. The increase was probably due to the presence of the additional military force.

The bank returns show a total of assets at the end of the year of 1,244,688*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.*, and of liabilities of 669,644*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

* Including 3,258*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.* for defences of the colony.

Banks.

The principal features of these returns for the two years 1866–7, may be thus summarised and compared. Fractions are omitted, for the sake of greater clearness:—

	Assets.				Liabilities.
	Specie.		Debts due to Banks, including Notes, Bills of Exchange, Stock, and Funded Debts, &c.		Notes in Circulation.		Deposits.
	1866.	1867.	1866	1867.	1866.	1867.	1866.	1867.
	£	£	£	£	£	£	£	£
First Quarter - -	168,044	152,291	1,058,351	1,028,470	88,525	78,472	678,645	651,275
Second Quarter -	181,880	154,629	1,012,630	1,041,078	88,429	81,875	682,597	654,944
Third Quarter - -	170,605	157,419	1,031,593	1,036,904	80,339	72,755	660,960	615,450
Fourth Quarter -	165,413	143,471	1,053,848	1,051,633	76,006	68,366	627,479	590,556
Average for the Year	171,485	151,952	1,039,105	1,039,521	83,325	75,367	662,420	628,056

With the exception of debts due to banks, &c., all the results show a large decrease in 1867. In the case of specie, the decrease amounted to 11·39 per cent., in notes to 9·55 per cent., and in deposits to 5·19 per cent. The indications afforded by these returns confirm the conclusion to be drawn from the accounts of the customs department, namely, that production and commerce have been and still are rapidly diminishing year by year.

Savings' banks.

The next return relating to savings' banks shows, on the 31st August, a sum of 193,301*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.* to the credit of depositors, being less by 1,278*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* than in the corresponding half of the preceding year. The total amount received from depositors during the year was 101,646*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, being at the rate of 1*l.* 0*s.* 7¾*d.* per head for the whole population; the total amount repaid to them, 102,924*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.*; that is, the sum of 1,278*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* before mentioned was taken from the savings of 1866 to make up the deficiencies of 1867.

Post office money orders.

In post office money orders there was an increase in the number issued of 463, about 17 per cent., and in the amount, of 1,454*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*; in money orders paid an increase of 382 in the number, and of 1,363*l.* 6*s.* in the amount. Two additional stations for the issue and payment of post office money orders were established in country districts during the year.

Gold mining.

The next return shows, as far as it can be ascertained, the quantity of gold obtained in the district of Fingal during the year. The yield of the alluvial mines can only be known in so far as it has passed through the hands of the storekeepers or other local purchasers of gold. The quantity thus purchased is stated to have been, 144 ozs. 6 dwts. 2 grs. The quartz companies crushed 7,677 tons of stone during the year, producing 1,218 ozs. 19 dwts. of retorted gold, which would give an average result of 3 dwts. 4 grs. to the ton of quartz. There was an increase in the quantity of stone crushed in 1867 of 4,805 tons, and in the produce, of 871 ozs. 3 dwts.

Public debt.

It appears from the statements relating to the public debt of the Colony, that on the 31st December 1867 the amount of the various loans authorized, including debentures not then issued, was 1,073,900*l.* Deducting the 55,000*l.* then remaining unissued, the actual debt of the government of this Colony was 1,018,900*l.* or 10*l.* 6*s.* 11¾*d.* per head for the whole population. In Victoria, at the end of 1866, the indebtedness per head was 13*l.* 14*s.* 8½*d.*; in New South Wales, 16*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.*; in South Australia, 1*l.* 2*s.* 5¼*d.*; and in Queensland, 23*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.* The interest of the debt in Queensland is stated by the registrar general to have been at the rate of 1*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* per head; in Tasmania it was at the rate of 0*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* per head.

It may be useful to state for the information of persons out of the Colony, who are interested in its financial condition, that of the total debt of 1,018,900*l.*, a sum of 300,000*l.*, although contracted by the government and dealt with in the same manner as all other public loans, was in reality raised on behalf of a private company for the construction of a line of railway between Launceston and Deloraine, the government being, by Act 30 Vict., No. 28, protected against loss in respect to the payment of principal or interest, by any sums of money which may be paid by the colonial treasurer for those purposes being made a primary charge on the railway and works, which cannot be taken in execution by any private creditor, so long as the State holds such lien upon the property of the company. The Governor-in-Council is also empowered by a former Act to levy a rate on the assessed value of property within the railway district, in order to reimburse the colonial treasurer any amounts so paid by him. The sum for which the State is ultimately liable is therefore no more than 718,900*l.*, or 7*l.* 6*s.* 0½*d.* per head.

In proportion to the extent of their respective territories, the debt of the different colonies stands thus:—Tasmania, 0*l.* 1*s.* 2½*d.* per acre; Victoria, 0*l.* 3*s.* 2¼*d.*; New South Wales, 0*l.* 0*s.* 5½*d.*; South Australia, 0*l.* 0*s.* 0¾*d.*; and Queensland 0*l.* 0*s* 1¼ *d.

From this it will be seen that the lands of Tasmania are very much less heavily mortgaged to the public creditor than those of Victoria. But although this is interesting as a statistical fact, it is not of much weight in a financial point of view; for the security of the public creditor evidently depends, not upon the extent to which the territory of a state is or is not mortgaged, but upon the power of the population to pay the interest upon the debt. The security is therefore to be measured by the population, the production, and the amount of accumulated wealth—that is, of taxable property.

IV.—ESTABLISHMENTS AND INSTITUTIONS MAINTAINED OR ASSISTED BY GOVERNMENT.

Post office.

The number of post offices in 1867 was increased by 3, the number of persons employed was also increased by 3, the mileage of post roads by 27.

In the number of letters received, there was a decrease of 10,295; of letters despatched, a decrease of 2,164. The numbers of newspapers received and despatched were less than those of the previous year by 22,010 and 67,876 respectively. The number received was less than in any year from 1857 inclusive, with the exception of the year 1861, when it fell to 298,812. Town and district letters show a decrease of 4,272.

The revenue from the post office shows an improvement to the extent of 274*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*; the expenditure a decrease of 457*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

Electric telegraph.

The return relating to the electric telegraph shows a diminution in the number of paid messages of 404, and in the number of free messages of 2,090. In the amount received for paid messages there was a decrease of 35*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*; and in the total expenditure a decrease of 604*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*

The preliminary arrangements for restoring telegraphic communication between Tasmania and Victoria have now been satisfactorily completed, and in the course of this year the line may be expected again to be at work. The re-opening of this line will confer a great benefit on the public generally, and may be expected to have a very favourable influence on trade.

Penal and charitable institutions.

The table given below shows approximately the expense of the various penal and charitable institutions, as apportioned to the respective governments, in the years 1866 and 1867:—

* These, with the exception of Tasmania, are for 1866.

† For 1865 and 1865 at Port Arthur there were in 1867, 51 paupers, costing about 1,700*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.*, whose maintenance should strictly be deducted from the "Penal" and added to the "Charitable" Institutions.

It is gratifying to find that there was a reduction in the cost of these establishments to the extent of nearly 6,000*l.* As between the two governments, the ratio of decrease to the colonial was 10·6 per cent., to the Imperial, 12·89 per cent.

In the cost per head of the prisoners and paupers maintained in the above establishments there is, with one or two exceptions, a considerable decrease caused to some extent by the decline in the price of provisions. At the Hospital for the Insane at New Norfolk the rate per head appears as if it were slightly in excess of that for 1866, but the true explanation seems to be that an error occurred in the calculation for that year, which was discovered in examining the return for 1867, and there corrected. At the Queen's Asylum, on the other hand, there would appear to be a decrease per head of nearly 6*l.*, of which also a part is attributable to an error in the return for 1866, which was not discovered in spite of the most careful scrutiny. In that year all receipts (except bonâ fide money transactions for which credit was taken at the Treasury) were excluded; but it was not discovered until the next year that it had been the practice to charge against the institution the value of farm produce grown on the land attached to it, and consumed by the inmates. The return of expenditure for 1867 includes, as I understand, nothing but actual money expenditure on one side or the other, with the exception of a credit for milk supplied to other government establishments, which is now allowed in the books of the treasury. The actual reduction per head, after taking into account these corrections, is stated by the principal to be 2*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.*

Aborigines.

The return of the aborigines in the establishment at Oyster Cove on the 31st December last shows that one man and two women were the sole remains of the original possessors of this Island. Three females had died during the year. In a few years more these few representatives of the race will have passed away,—leaving scarcely a single monument, save some few articles preserved in museums, and a few paintings, to tell that they had ever been.

Municipalities.

In regard to municipalities there is only one observation which need be made. On comparing the annual value of rateable property in 1866 and 1867, it will be found that there was a decrease of 6,073*l.*, while the total revenue and expenditure were somewhat greater.

Road trusts.

The road trusts offer no special ground for remark in regard to the particulars recorded in the return. It is, however, worthy of mention that the Act of last session by requiring the accounts of the road trusts to be submitted to a proper audit, as in the case of municipalities, will greatly facilitate the preparation of future statistical returns. Extreme difficulty has hitherto been felt in this respect. In some cases the accounts have been grossly incorrect, and a large amount of reference has been necessary,—sometimes, after all, unsuccessful; and in several instances I have been informed that the existing executive officer of the trust could make nothing of the accounts, his predecessor having died or refused to afford any information. The provision contained in that Act, that all accounts shall be made up to the 31st December, is also a great improvement and will materially facilitate the performance of the statistician's duties.

Boards of works.

The return relating to boards of works is presented in a different form from that of last year. It has been found impossible, without a change of system, to obtain from the boards themselves correct particulars of their expenditure; and the information in the present case has therefore been obtained from the treasury.

V.—Crown Lands, Agriculture, and Live Stock.

Crown lands.

Excluding the Islands there were in 1867, 738,582 acres of land leased from the Crown, producing a rental of 7,063*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, which is the rate of 0*l.* 19*s.* 1½*d.* per 100 acres. It will be seen by the surveyor-general's memo. at the foot of the return which stands at the head of this section, that the extent of land under lease has hitherto been very much overstated, in consequence, as he concludes, of the leases as they were thrown up or fell in not having been always written off. Including the Islands, the total rental in 1867 is stated to have been 8,206*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.*, being in round numbers 1,096*l.* less than in the previous year.

The return of country lands (that is, not including town and suburban lots) sold during the year shows a total of 293 lots, representing 29,584*a.* 0*r.* 18*p.*, against 397 lots, with an acreage of 61,368*a.* 0*r.* 3*p.* in 1866. It is a noticeable fact that while, in regard to the blocks of over 50 acres, both the number and extent of land show a large decrease, in regard to those of and under 50 acres, although there is a slight decrease in the acreage, there is an increase of 11 in the number, denoting, it is to be presumed, that the smaller class of landholders is on the increase.

TASMANIA.

In the town and suburban lots sold there was a decrease in the number of 70, in the acreage of 335*a*. 0*r*. 4*p*., and in the amount represented by the sales, of 1,234*l*. 16*s*. 0*d*.

The average price per acre in 1867 was,—for country lots, 0*l*. 15*s*. 10¼*d*.; for town and suburban lots, 4*l*. 0*s*. 10¼*d*. In 1866 the price per acre was,—for the former, 0*l*. 11*s*. 7½*d*.; and for the latter, 3*l*. 18*s*. 2*d*. Thus, the value of the Crown lands seems to have increased; and it is gratifying, in the face of so many facts pointing to the conclusion that we have hitherto been rather retrograding than advancing, to be able to record the circumstance.

The total area of the Colony is calculated to contain 16,778,000 acres, of which, at the end of the year 1867, 3,739,766*a*. 0*r*. 24*p*. had been alienated; leaving about 13,000,000 still belonging to the State.

Agriculture.

The return of land in cultivation during the year ended March 31, 1868, shows a result of 153,588 acres in crop; 103,487 occupied by gardens, and including all cultivated lands not arranged under specific classes; 18,805 under fallow; and 5,503 acres of new land broken up during the year, making a total of 281,383 acres. The quantity of land included under the head of "fallow," is almost certainly larger than it should be. Some of the collectors of the agricultural statistics seem not to have understood the term, and accordingly to have comprehended under that title land which having been cropped, has either been laid down in artificial grasses, or else allowed to relapse into a state of natural pasturage. It would not be safe therefore to draw any conclusions at present as to the proportion of land which is strictly treated as fallow,—that is, turned up roughly, and allowed to lie exposed, without a crop, to the action of the elements. Next year we may hope to gain more perfect information in this particular. Meantime, it may be well to draw the attention of our farmers to the fact (which is not only deduced from the investigations of scientific chemists, but also abundantly attested by practical experience) that where a sufficient supply of manure of a proper description cannot be provided, or where root or similar crops are not grown in rotation, it is absolutely necessary that the soil should be thus exposed in order to recover its exhausted energies, and thus to render it capable of bearing a fresh crop. Bare fallows, however, are a wasteful mode of attaining this object, and should never be resorted to where better means of effecting the same end can be found.

The total acreage (including new land broken up) in cultivation in 1866 was 286,930, or 5,547 acres more than in 1867–8; the acreage in farm crops being 167,866 or 14,278 acres more than in 1867–8. The decrease in the land in farm crops in the latter year was therefore at the rate of 8½ per cent.

The acreage under each description of crop in the two years may be thus compared:

	Acreage.			Acreage.
	1866.	1867–8.		1866.	1867–8.
Wheat	71,348	64,010	Turnips	1,096	765
Barley	4,596	6,860	Carrots	176	199
Oats	34,358	27,574	Mangel Wurzel	1,349	1,089
Peas	3,655	4,558	Onions	253	221
Beans	508	509	English Grasses	5,393	3,261
Tares	535	286	Hay	33,762	33,064
Potatoes	10,520	10,768	Tobacco	216	151

All these crops exhibit a decrease—most of them a large one—except barley, pease, potatoes, (the increase on which is very trifling), and carrots. I am sorry to observe a decrease of about 600 acres of root crops. Until the value of these in fertilizing the soil is better understood, and more practically acknowledged, it is to be feared that no great improvement in the system of agriculture can be expected. The culture of the sugar beet has lately received some attention here; and it is understood that a wealthy and enterprising colonist is about to undertake the growth of the root, and the manufacture of this description of sugar. If the attempt should be brought to a successful issue, the originator will have conferred a signal benefit on the agricultural interest, and have done much towards the establishment of a more rational and economical system of cultivation.

In hops, as is well known here, there has been a very large increase, which will in the present year be still further augmented. The increase last year in the breadth of land was 93 acres, and in the produce, 86,900 lbs. This branch of industry, instead of being confined, as heretofore, to New Norfolk, is likely to be extended to many other parts of the island.

The average yield of the different crops in 1867–8 (excluding tobacco, which is only grown, as far as I am aware, for sheep-wash), is shown below.

Wheat, bushels	13·98 per acre.
Barley, „	24·40 „
Oats, „	22·94 „
Pease „	18·64 „
Beans, „	20·41 „
Tares, „	19·49 „
Potatoes, tons	3·49 „
Turnips, „	6·98 „
Carrots, „	8·79 „
Mangel wurzel, tons	10·06 „
Onions, tons	5·05 „
English grass, bushels	18·95 „
Hay, tons	1·03 „

These results are important, because from them it may easily be calculated what crops are the most profitable to the farmer. For instance, it will be seen that nearly one-fifth of the whole area under crop was in hay. The mean produce of hay was scarcely more than one ton to the acre, and in many districts not so much. At 3*l.* per ton, which is about the mean price, the farmer's gross return would only be 3*l.* per acre. When the expense of seed, ploughing, mowing, carriage, and other operations is deducted, it will be found that there is scarcely anything left for profit. Indeed, taking into consideration the exhaustion of the soil, it is questionable whether there would not be an actual loss. It is singular how pertinaciously our farmers adhere to this unprofitable custom of hay growing, when the land might be put to so much better uses.

In consequence of the change which has been made in the time of the year at which to take the returns, they are now, for the first time, presented in such a state as to be safely used for statistical purposes. It is impossible, within the limits of this report, to enter into a minute analysis of the crop return; and I must therefore confine myself to the one product—wheat. The average yield, as has been already stated, was 13·98 bushels per acre; the maximum, at Glenorchy, being 26·78 bushels, and the minimum, at New Norfolk, being but 4·92 bushels. In regard to the last, the superintendent of police reports, that "the wheat crops were fearfully bad." At Deloraine, the collector reports that the low yield of wheat "is to be attributed to the prevalence of rust, from which "every farmer suffered more or less;" and he adds, "had the returns been made out at "the approach of harvest, they would have been utterly valueless, as many expected "forty or more bushels per acre where they did not get ten."

A comparative table of the acreage in the different kinds of crop from 1857 was given in my last report; it may be interesting now to give the total produce and average per acre of the three principal cereal products for the same period. It should, however, be borne in mind that until the last year, for the reason above referred to, the figures must not be two confidently relied on.

TASMANIA.

I take the following comparative table (in an abridged form), showing the average yield in four of these Colonies of the principal agricultural productions, from Mr. Archer's report prefixed to the agricultural statistics of Victoria for the year 1866–7 :—

	Wheat.	Oats.	Other Cereals.	Potatoes.	Hay.
Victoria - -	22·25	30·01	24·03	2·74	1·74
South Australia -	14·34	22·29	20·13	2·39	1·32

Tasmania - -	21·43	27·42	22·08	3·87	1·65
Mean -	16·39	28·57	28·70	2·79	1·54

Mr. Archer remarks, "It will be noticed that the acreable yield of wheat, oats, and "hay is highest in Victoria; that New South Wales gives the highest acreable yield "of 'other cereals' (chiefly maize); that the average yield of potatoes and tobacco is "highest in Tasmania.

The value of the imports and exports of breadstuffs, oats, and barley from 1857 was given in my last report. A table is now subjoined showing the quantities, taken from the customs returns.

As the estimate of the surplus of wheat available in 1868–9 published in the Gazette with the agricultural returns for last year has been noticed outside this Colony, it may be well to say a few words on that subject. That estimate was not published without a considerable degree of hesitation, and only under the belief that such information, if at all trustworthy, is calculated to be of considerable advantage to the agricultural and commercial interests. I also desired to demonstrate practically to the farmers the necessity of care and accuracy in returning an account of their crops to the collectors of the agricultural statistics; for if the farmers will not take the trouble to supply the collectors with correct information, it is evident that implicit confidence can not be placed on the Government statistics; and the farmers will have to thank themselves for any ill effects that may arise out of their own carelessness or indifference.

Whether the estimate be reliable or not, I apprehend that it will have served a useful purpose; and between this and next season it may be possible to obtain more certain data upon which to base our future calculations.

The prices of agricultural products for the year 1867–8, instead of being included in the crop return, as heretofore, have been placed in a separate return,—an arrangement which, it is presumed, will greatly add to the perspicuity of the returns.

An inspection of these prices, with a view to comparing the rates in the different districts, suggests some reflections which may be useful in a practical point of view, and which are worthy of the serious consideration of our agriculturists. To take wheat as an example; the price at Hobart Town is returned at 8*s.*, at Launceston at 7*s.*, the mean of which, 7*s.* 6*d.*, may be assumed as the average price on March 31, 1868. In two districts, Westbury and Deloraine, it is returned at 5*s.* 10*d.* and 4*s.* $1\frac{1}{4}$d. respectively; that is, there was a loss, on account of local circumstances, of 1*s.* 8*d.* on every bushel of wheat sold in Westbury, and of 3*s.* $4\frac{3}{4}$d. on every bushel sold in Deloraine. Supposing that the wheat crops were all sold in situ, there would be a loss to the farmers of Westbury of 12,129*l.*, and to those of Deloraine of 9,103*l.*, by the difference in prices. The corresponding loss at Longford would be 13,694*l.* These sums together amount to 34,926*l.* But supposing that the wheat crops were not sold in the districts, but in the principal marts of the island, and that the loss were measured by a part only of the cost of carriage, say 6*d.* per bushel, it would still amount to 8,079*l.* for those districts. If the same investigation were pursued with regard to all the other marketable produce throughout the Colony, it would be found that, even on the most favourable supposition, the present loss to the farmers from this source is something enormous.

It is not difficult therefore to imagine what an immense gain a system of rapid and easy transport, by equalizing prices, as well as by the reduction in the cost of carriage, would confer on the agriculturist in the interior, and what a stimulus it would give to production.

The necessity to the agriculturist of mechanical appliances was strongly urged in last year's report. The following observations on the necessity of steam power in the cultivation of the soil, which appeared in The Press (Lyttelton) of 7th March, are so admirable, that I hope to be pardoned if the introduction of them here may seem to any to be somewhat beyond the scope of a statistical report like the present :—

"If New Zealand is to supply the English market at all in ordinary years, it can only be done by cheap production; and cheap production can be brought about only by machinery. Of machines for saving the crops by reaping and threshing, we may be said to use our full share. Indeed, we almost doubt whether, acre for acre, any English county has more machinery in use than Canterbury. At all events a very large quantity of such implements is employed amongst us. But of ploughing and cultivating machines there may be said to be none at all. One, we believe, is at work in Canterbury, and we have heard of four or five in Southland; but the whole amount of land in New Zealand cultivated by steam power is inappreciably small. And yet there is no class of machinery in which such vast improvements have been made in the course of the last five or six years as in ploughs and cultivators. Take, for instance, the report in the Times of the 12th December of the machinery exhibited at the Smithfield Club cattle show. We find that John Fowler and Co., of Leeds, have exhibited a cultivator for light lands fifteen feet wide, which accomplishes 'five acres an hour, or sixty acres a day in regular work.' This is far beyond anything of which we have hitherto heard. There is a considerable quantity of land in New Zealand of the light quality to which such a cultivator would apply. But it is not always that the cultivator is suitable: a plough is necessary as well. The same report tells us that Fowler's plough for light land has been brought to such perfection that it can turn over eight furrows at once, at the rate of two and a half acres an hour, or thirty acres a day, on light soil in ordinary working. These are achievements in cultivation which must soon remodel the whole system of agriculture. The old fashioned farms will soon be to the steam-cultivated farms what the hand loom is to the steam power loom. Up to a very few years ago, the manual art of tilling the soil had made no important advance from the earliest periods of history. The ancient ploughs were heavier than the modern ploughs, but that was all. It was virtually the same tool, and no doubt did pretty nearly the same work. But the time is now come when mankind, in civilised countries, is about to be relieved of one of the heaviest burdens laid on them by nature. Slave labour is essential to all great progress; because great power combined, organized, and directed, is indispensable to great results. We no longer use men for slaves, for, apart from the moral and political aspect of slavery, it is no longer necessary. God has given the steam engine as a reward to the nations which have ceased to use their fellow-creatures as slaves. Steam is the slave of all, rich and poor alike; and when its untiring energies are universally applied to the culture of the soil, the whole class of agricultural labourers will be lifted into a higher grade. They will get better wages, better homes, food, clothing, education. Thus, in the working of the economical laws of Providence, the result may be confidently predicted. If, then, New Zealand is to take any part in the supply of the older communities of the world with food, it must be at least up to the mark of the rest of the world in its mode of production. It must produce by means of machinery. Wages will rise higher than ever; but high wages will not mean expensive production, because, by the aid of machinery, one man at ten shillings a day can do as much as ten men at five shillings a day without it. It is the increased produce in proportion to the population resulting from the use of machinery, which enables and compels capital to pay higher wages to labour. We would strongly recommend our agricultural societies to obtain full and detailed statistics as to the most recent improvements in the application of steam to agriculture; and to keep them constantly before the public. It is thus that capital may be induced to turn its attention to the subject. It would never be worth the while of a small farmer to import one of these costly steam ploughs; but small companies might be formed of ten or a dozen neighbouring farmers, who might combine to purchase one, under mutual conditions as to its use. And thus the use of steam ploughs might become as general as that of reaping or threshing machines."

To the ordinary agricultural returns, I have added this year one showing the extent to which mechanical appliances are resorted to in this Colony. A comparison of such a return, year by year, will indicate more surely than perhaps any other method what efforts we may be making to keep pace with the rest of the world in this respect. It will be observed that there is not a steam plough or cultivator in the island.

Live stock.

The number of live stock in Tasmania on the 31st March last is stated to have been as follows :—horses, 23,299, an increase as regards the previous year of 1,732; horned cattle, 86,598, a decrease of 1772; sheep, 1,742,914, an increase of 20,110; goats, 2,627, an increase of 141; mules, 7, a decrease of 4; asses, 5, as in last year; and pigs,

TASMANIA.

54,287, an increase of 21,028, or 63·23 per cent. The horses seem to have been more numerous than at any time during the last 11 years; the horned cattle are very slightly in excess of the average number in the years 1862–6; the sheep show an increase upon the same average of 8,094, which, considering the ravages of fluke in many districts, is quite as much as can be expected; pigs were 14,139 above the average, having increased at a rate altogether unprecedented, at least since 1857.

An attempt has been made to ascertain the number of live stock running on Crown land, but there are serious difficulties to be surmounted before we can arrive at a very accurate result.

When speaking of the customs returns, a table was furnished showing the quantity of wool exported in the last 11 years, and the average price, as calculated from those returns. To this it may be useful to add another showing the average weight of fleece, obtained by dividing the quantity of wool exported by the number of sheep returned.

Year.	Weight of Fleece.	Year.	Weight of Fleece.
	lbs.		lbs.
1857 -	3·21	1863 -	2·59
1858 -	3·16	1864 -	2·86
1859 -	3·60	1865 -	2·81
1860 -	2·67	1866 -	2·77
1861 -	2·39	1867 -	2·69
1862 -	3·15

The average for 1867 propably appears lower than it really was, in consequence of the fact that while the number of sheep was taken on the 31st March, the exports of wool were only brought up to the 31st December of the last year. Comparing the averages, however, for the two periods 1857–62, and 1863–7, it is found that the weight of fleece had diminished from 3·08 lbs. to 2·74 lbs. per sheep. The weight in Victoria in 1865–6 and 1866–7, calculated on similar data, was 4·37 in the former, and 5·01 in the latter period, the sheep being, it is to be presumed, of a larger kind. In New South Wales, in 1866–7, the average weight was 1·87. Whether this advantage on the part of Tasmania over the latter Colony is real or only apparent in consequence of any imperfection in the returns, one thing is clear from this investigation, namely, that as compared with former years, the weight of the fleece of Tasmanian sheep,—unless it can be shown that the Merino has taken the place of animals of larger frame,—has greatly diminished. Under any circumstances, more pains should be taken in improving the breed, and greater care bestowed upon the "getting-up" of the wool.

The return of live stock imported and slaughtered at the public slaughter-houses shows a total of 69,673 sheep, 7,001 cattle, and 2,902 pigs slaughtered; and of 35,595 sheep, and 1,935 head of cattle imported. The number imported, as given in the customs returns, was,—cattle, 1864; sheep, 38,437; pigs, 5. As compared with the preceding year, there was a decrease of 4,814 in the number of sheep, and 328 in the number of pigs slaughtered, and an increase of 636 in the cattle.

The number of cattle, sheep, and pigs to each head of population, and to each square mile of territory, in each of the Colonies, is shown below.

VI.—Law, Crime, &c.

Committals for trial.

The number of persons committed for trial in 1867 was 227, against 238 in 1866; a decrease of 11, or 4·62 per cent.

The number of criminals dealt with by the higher courts was as follows :— Criminals tried.

	Felonies.		Misdemeanors.		Total.
	Convicted.	Acquitted.	Convicted.	Acquitted.	Convicted.	Acquitted.

	109	41	18	6	127	47
Number Tried - -	150		24		174

In the number tried there was a decrease, as compared with the preceding year, of 26, or 13 per cent. The proportion of misdemeanors to felonies was 1 in 6.

The ratio to population in 1867 was—Criminals tried, 1 in 566 or 1·77 per 1,000; convicted, 1 in 775 or 1·29 per 1,000. The convictions in 1866 were 1 in 682, or 1·592 per 1,000.

Neither in 1867 nor in 1866 was any criminal executed. Executions.

Considerable improvement has been made on this occasion, as regards the Returns of Litigation, both in the Supreme Court and in the courts having the jurisdiction of Courts of Requests. It is believed that they are now as complete as it is possible to make them. Litigation.

A return has this year been added of the number of probates and letters of administration granted by the Supreme Court. The number of probates was 53, representing property to the value of 118,335*l.*; of letters of administration 21, representing 24,087*l.* Probates, &c.

The number of insolvencies during 1867 was 107, or 43 more than in 1866. The amount of scheduled assets and liabilities in the two years is shown below. Insolvencies.

Assets.		Liabilities.
1866.	1867.	1866.	1867.

24,295 17 6	47,806 4 6	44,992 16 4	95,730 19 8

The total assets in 1867 thus appear to have been nearly double those of the preceding year, the liabilities considerably more than double. The amount for which each insolvent failed was, on an average, 895*l.* or 192*l.* more than in 1866. The number of insolvents in proportion to population was 1 in 920. In Victoria, in 1866, one person in every 584 was insolvent; and the average of each insolvent's liabilities was 531*l.* In New South Wales in the same year (an exceptionally severe one) one person in every 726 was insolvent; and the average amount of liabilities was 1,589*l.* In Queensland 1 in 616 was insolvent, with an average liability of 1,847*l.*

The number and amount of mortgages upon land registered in 1867 were— Mortgages.

The number was less by 8 than in 1866, but represented a larger amount, to the extent of about 4,000*l.*

The return of the business of the Lands' Titles Office for 1867 shows a decrease in the number of transactions of 82; in the acreage of land dealt with, of 17,265; and in the value of the land, of 54,826*l.* Lands' Titles Office.

The number of inquests in 1867 was 150 (105 males and 45 females), being 19 less than in 1866. Inquests.

VII.—EDUCATION, RELIGION, &c.

Schools. The returns relating to public schools under the Board of Education have not been received for 1867, and do not, therefore, appear in the present volume.

Ecclesiastical. An attempt has been made to obtain for the past year certain particulars from the various religious bodies, which, it is believed, would be of interest, and might become practically useful. Circulars were sent with that view to the different governing bodies, and to ministers of churches; but to 8 out of 20 no replies were received. The return is therefore presented in a very incomplete state. Perhaps on the next occasion more information will be supplied.

Sunday schools. The return of children receiving instruction in Sunday schools labours under the same imperfection as the preceding return.

Friendly societies. That of friendly societies has now been added for the first time. It was designed to furnish the information in the last publication; but the time was too limited to allow the intention to be carried out.

VIII.—VITAL STATISTICS.

Births. The births registered during 1867 were 2,971, being an increase of 166 upon those of 1866. The proportion of boys to girls born was 102·66 to 100. In 1866 it was 104·12 to 100. The male births were therefore considerably below the proportion in the previous year. The birth-rate for 1867 was 30·18 per 1,000, which is greater by 1·37 per 1,000 than in 1866, but less than the mean for 10 years by 4·50 per 1,000.

Deaths. The deaths registered were 1,413 within, and 5 beyond, the limits of the Colony, being 91 more than in 1866. The death rate in 1867 was 14·36,* being 0·62 per 1,000 more than in 1866, but 1·87 per 1,000 below the rate for the 10 years 1857–66. The deaths of males were 864, and of females 554, being in the proportion of 156 to 100, or about half as many more. In England the proportion for 27 years was as 103 to 100; the maximum being 105 to 100. The proportion in each of the other Colonies in 1866 was as follows:—

Victoria	133 to 100
New South Wales	148 to 100
South Australia	126 to 100
Queensland	158 to 100

This result is very remarkable, showing, as it does, how much larger a proportion of men die in the Colonies than in the old countries. The whole subject is worthy of a much more minute investigation than it can receive in a report like the present.

The proportion of deaths of persons of 70 years of age and upwards to the total number of known ages, in Tasmania for the five years comprised in the period 1863–7, was 11·77 per cent. In Victoria in 1866, it was only 2·277 per cent. In Queensland, the proportion of deaths at the age of 55 and upwards for the most favourable of six years was only 7·74 per cent. of the whole number of deaths of the year. In South Australia, the number from 50 and upwards only amounted in 1866 to 12·23 per cent. of the known ages. It thus appears that the climate of Tasmania is exceptionally favourable to longevity.

But, favourable as the climate of this Colony is to health and longevity, it might be rendered still more so, were the most ordinary sanitary measures taken to preserve the purity of the air in the principal towns. Nothing, I believe, but the extreme rarity and absorptive power of the air has saved us from the usual consequences of the neglect of proper precautions in this respect. The following from the Report of the Registrar-General of England in the Journal of the Statistical Society of London, October to December last, shows what can be done by a better system:—"Salisbury continues to "furnish an instance of the advantages resulting from good hygienic arrangements; it is "more than six years since the census was taken, and the present population of towns "can only be approximately estimated, but, assuming that Salisbury has increased in "population since 1861 in the same annual ratio as in the previous ten years, then the "mortality during the quarter has been at the low rate of 10 per 1,000 annually, a "result as creditable to the authorities as it is satisfactory to the citizens, whose years "of life are prolonged. That the healthiness of this city is mainly owing to the sanitary

* Only one "transported offender" died during the year, and no correction is therefore needed on this account.

"system now in operation, and not chiefly to advantages of situation, is proved by the "fact that during the ten years 1841–50, the average annual number of deaths was "28 per 1,000 living, and in the following ten years it was 24 per 1,000; it also suffered "severely from epidemic cholera in 1849."

Marriages.

The number of marriages in 1867 was 597, an increase upon 1866 of 26, or 4·55 per cent. The ratio per 1,000 of population was 6·06 against 5·86 in 1866. The rate was 1·74 per 1,000 below the mean for ten years, 1857–66, and was the lowest for any year, with the exception of 1866, of the series. The rate in Scotland ranged, during the eleven years 1857–67, from 6·5 to 7·5 per 1,000. From the Report of the Registrar General of England of 1866, it appears that the marriage rate ranges in England from 8·02 to 8·94 per 1,000; in France from 7·54 to 8·47; and in Austria from 7·38 to 9·77.

Diseases and deaths in charitable institutions.

The number of cases of disease treated in charitable institutions during the year 1867 is stated to have been 2,266, and the number of deaths, 216. There was, therefore, an increase on the cases of 52, and on the deaths of 11. The death rate, calculated on the number of "cases," was 9·53 per cent. In six general English hospitals the mean death rate for five years (calculated on the "admissions") is stated to have been 9·8 per cent.*

Five cases of scarlatina are returned in 1867 at the Queen's asylum; 2 of diphtheria at the General Hospital, Hobart Town, and 1 at the hospital, Campbell Town.

Vaccinations.

Only 8 persons were vaccinated at the Public Medical Institutions during 1867.

Conclusion.

It will have been seen that a review of the condition of the Colony in 1867 presents but few encouraging features: in almost every direction the same law of decadence is found to have been in operation as in the preceding years; but there are now certain circumstances which afford reasonable hope that before long the aspect of affairs in this Colony will have been much improved. Since the writing of this Report was commenced, the "dead-lock" in Victoria has been brought to an end; and with the resumption of payments there, the trade with this Colony may be expected to revive. The renewal of telegraphic communication with that Colony will also conduce towards the same result. Since the statistics of 1866 were published, the credit of this Colony as a borrower has been established on the London Stock Exchange, and there is therefore now no difficulty in obtaining money for the improvement of the public estate. The present state of the English money market is peculiarly favourable for financial operations; the distrust which has been felt by capitalists in regard to European investments has turned their favourable attention to Australasia as a field for the profitable employment of capital. The lively interest which has been shown in hop-growing promises to add largely to that branch of our productions; a tender for the construction of the Launceston and Western Railway has now been taken, and the work must be completed within 20 months from its commencement; the Mersey railway is also understood to be favourably progressing; and the agitation which has lately sprung up in other districts for improved means of internal communication, will, if it be carried to a practical result, remove the chief difficulty which the farmer has to contend against, and bring to light many latent sources of wealth. The Colonists seem gradually becoming habituated to the idea, that competition with other countries is simply impossible, unless the competitor avails himself of the best aids to progress which the age affords; and the need being thus acknowledged, it may be hoped that steps will soon be taken to supply it. On the whole, therefore, there is more ground of encouragement as regards the future than has appeared for several years past.

No. 17.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

No. 17.

Report to The Honorable Henry Ayers, M.L.C., Chief Secretary, &c.

Chief Secretary's Office, Adelaide,
July 31, 1868.

Sir,

I have the honour to submit the "Statistical Register of South Australia for 1867," together with a report for the information of his Excellency the Officer Administering the Government, exhibiting in a succinct form the principal features of interest connected with the progress of the community during the twelve months terminated 31st December last.

Population.

The inhabitants of the Province, on the last day of the year, were estimated to number 172,860, or an addition of 3,707 souls to the number at the commencement of 1867. This is the smallest increase recorded since 1860, when, as in the year under review, the departures from the Province exceeded the arrivals. The natural increase of the population from the excess of births over deaths amounted to 4,102 persons—2,052 males and 2,050 females; but from these must be deducted the excess of emigration over immigration (by sea), numbering 395 souls—333 males and 62 females—showing a net addition of only 3,707 persons—1,719 males and 1,988 females, or of only 2·2 per cent., as compared with an increase of four and a-half per cent. during the previous year. In the three years immediately preceding, the annual augmentation of the population amounted on the average to five per cent.

Births, Deaths, and Marriages.

Seven thousand and forty-one children were born in 1867, or 259 more than in 1866. The birth rate amounted, therefore, to 41·6 per thousand of the population, as compared with 41 the year before, and 45 in 1865.

The male births were 3,616, and the female 3,425 (as against 3,470 and 3,312 respectively in 1866), or 105 boys to every 100 girls.

The rate of mortality was slightly below that of the previous year, amounting to 17·4 per thousand persons, compared with 17·5 per thousand. The total number of deaths was 2,939—males 1,564, and females 1,375—showing an increase of 27 males and 159 females, or together 186 persons. Among adults the mortality was much below that of the preceding year, but the deaths of children were far more numerous, owing to the prevalence of measles, whooping cough, diphtheria, and croup.

Out of 2,939 deaths, 1831, or 62 per cent., were children under five years of age, as against 51 per cent. in the previous year. The same high rate was reached in 1864, when scarlatina was so fatal among young children. Infantile mortality was also greater, the number of children dying under two years of age being 1,558, or 53 per cent. of the total deaths, as compared with 50 per cent. in 1866, and 48 per cent. in 1865.

The natural increase of the population amounted to 4,102 persons, or only 73 more than in 1866; and being at the rate of 2·43 per cent. on the number living at the commencement of the year.

More marriages were solemnized, 1,379 being registered as compared with 1,299 in the previous year—an increase of 80.

Immigration and Emigration.

Only one emigrant ship arrived during 1867, landing 349 souls—198 males and 151 females—Government assisted immigration having been discontinued for a time. Notwithstanding the introduction of these persons at the expense of the State, the total emigration exceeded the immigration by 395 persons—333 males and 62 females; a similar circumstance not having occurred since 1860.

In the preceding year our population had been augmented by an excess of arrivals over departures by sea amounting to 2,820 persons—1,501 males and 1,319 females.

The following table shows the total immigration, free and assisted; the total emigration; the balance of arrivals over departures; and the number of immigrants introduced at the expense of the State during the past decade:—

* Excess of Emigration.

It appears from the above statement that the loss of population was not so much owing to an increased emigration as a falling off in the number of immigrants. The total number of persons leaving the Colony was less than in 1866; but owing to the cessation of Government immigration the number of arrivals diminished nearly one-half.

During the past 10 years the population has been increased by immigration to the extent of 18,346 souls, and as the total sum spent on immigration has been 359,534*l.*, it follows that the cost of their introduction has averaged 19*l.* 12*s.* per head. The actual number of Government immigrants was 20,179, showing a deficiency of 1,833 souls, or of nine per cent. Until other attractions present themselves, it would seem that assisted immigration is the only method of maintaining the strength of the population.

Public Worship.

Nineteen additional places of worship were opened during the past year, increasing the accommodation provided by the several religious denominations by 6,680 sittings. The total number of churches and chapels is 511, in addition to which 186 rooms are used for religious services, together providing sittings for 105,741 persons, or sufficient for the whole population of 14 years of age and upwards. The following return shows the progress made during the past three years:—

—	1865.	1866.	1867.

Sunday-school teachers - - -	3,484	3,807	3,961
Sunday scholars - - -	23,739	25,914	26,506

Eighteen more Sunday schools are returned, making the total number to be 416, with 3,961 teachers, and 26,506 scholars, of whom 13,221 were boys and 13,285 were girls.

Education.

Three hundred and eight licensed schools were in operation under the direction of the Central Board of Education during 1867, being 16 more than last year. These schools were conducted by 205 schoolmasters, and 103 school mistresses. The total number of children on the roll was 14,600, or slightly below the number given in the previous returns; 8,240 were boys and 6,360 girls, or 56·4 per cent. of the former and 43·6 of the latter. Only 78 per cent. of the total number on the roll attended, namely, 11,448 children, being nearly the same proportion as in former years. Of the whole number attending school, one-half the children were from seven to ten years of age, one-fourth under seven, and one-fourth eleven years old and upwards. Out of 14,600 scholars on the rolls, only 1,451 were at licensed schools in the city, and 1,155 in other corporate towns, 11,994 attending schools in the country districts.

The number of school-houses held in trust by the Board is now 74, the aid supplied by Government towards their erection having amounted to 13,986*l.*

The total amount received from parents as school fees was 14,628*l.*, which, together with the Government grant for stipends, 16,098*l.*, shows 30,726*l.* to have been received by teachers; giving an average income of 105*l.*

The Government grant averaged for each scholar 22*s.*, and the school fees 20*s.*, being slightly above the rates in the previous year.

The greatest number of destitute children that attended school at any one time during the year was 1,365, or 174 more than in 1866; the daily average number at all the schools was 1,266. The cost to the Government amounted to 20*s.* for each child for the 12 months.

During the past decade Parliament has voted the sum of 181,978*l.* for educational purposes—the sum expended last year amounting to 25,353*l.* as compared with 21,683*l.* the year previous.

Revenue and Expenditure.

During 1867 the public revenue amounted to 716,294*l.*, showing a decrease of 233,479*l.* upon the income of the preceding year. This deficiency was occasioned chiefly by a decreased demand for land, a reduction in the land revenue, and by a general depression in trade, causing the Customs receipts to fall about 12 per cent., or to the amount collected in 1864. Other items of revenue maintained their position, or slightly increased in amount. The land sales amounted only to 171,763, as against 331,285*l.*, or a deficiency of 159,522*l.* The rents from the occupiers of waste lands fell from 119,455*l.* to 73,855*l.*, or by no less than 45,600*l.* The Customs duties amounted to 200,832*l.*, or 29,302*l.* less; this declension may be partly accounted for by the large stocks that had accumulated in the two preceding years having precluded importations to the usual extent.

The Customs revenue being the only source of taxation, and indicating the power of the community to purchase duty-paying articles, it is interesting to note the amount of Customs receipts per head of the population during the past few years. In 1864, in which year the tariff was the same as now, the Customs receipts averaged 27*s.* 4*d.* per head; in 1865, 30*s.*; in 1866, 27*s.* 2*d.*; and in 1867, 23*s.* 3*d.* per head of the population. Taking the average of the four years, 27*s.* appears to be the annual contribution to the State by each inhabitant.

Having commenced the year with a balance in hands of Treasurer of 403,091*l.*, the expenditure was maintained, notwithstanding a declining revenue, at nearly the same rate as that of the previous year. The total payments in 1866 being 1,064,323*l.*; and in 1867, 1,003,271*l.*, showing a decrease of 61,052*l.* only. The amount spent upon public works, 299,288*l.*; the payment of interest and sinking fund of bonded debt, 92,562*l.*; miscellaneous services, 62,723*l.*; and immigration, 24,887*l.*; together 479,460*l.*, compose the principal items. The balance in hand at the close of the year amounted to 116,114*l.*

From a return showing the gross receipts and payments on account of the public revenue, exclusive of loans for public works, it will be seen that during the past decade the public income has amounted to 6,690,423*l.*, and the expenditure to 6,824,510*l.* Of the former sum the general revenue has contributed 4,052,554*l.*; the remaining 2,637,869*l.* being proceeds of the land fund. During the same period no less than 3,173,430*l.* has been expended upon public works (exclusive of loans) and immigration, namely, 2,813,895*l.* on the former, and 359,535*l.* on the latter service, irrespective of large sums which are charged to "Establishments," although incurred really for the survey and sale of the land, the carrying out of large public undertakings, and the conduct of immigration.

Loans for Public Works.

The public debt of the province amounted, on the 31st December 1867, to 1,077,750*l.*, showing an increase of 302,150*l.* during the twelve months. Bonds to the amount of 351,500*l.* were issued on account of loans authorized for construction of railways and main roads; and 49,350*l.* was the value of the bonds of previous loans redeemed during the like period, leaving the amount outstanding as above stated. The public indebtedness has, therefore, risen from 4*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* to 6*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* per head of the population.

Banking.

Half-yearly comparative statements of the average liabilities and assets of each of the six banks having operations within the province have been duly published. The following is an abstract of the aggregate average assets and liabilities for the last half-year of the years 1865, 1866, and 1867 respectively:—

In comparison with the preceding year, it will be seen that the principal fact brought to notice is the large diminution in the amount of accommodation afforded by the banks, although the reduction in the amount of deposits was comparatively trifling. In the half year ending December 1866, the notes and bills discounted amounted to 3,120,092*l.*; in the same period, 1867, they averaged 2,559,742*l.*, a decline of 560,350*l.*, or eighteen per cent. The total average liabilities have decreased from 1,715,395*l.*, to 1,569,884*l.*; and the aggregate average assets from 3,620,062*l.*, to 3,168,413*l.* The note circulation increased from 239,372*l.* to 247,786*l.*; and the coin and bullion, and Government securities held by the banks, from 323,527*l.* to 417,115*l.* The deposits fell from 1,401,565*l.* to 1,272,164*l.*, showing a decrease of 129,401*l.*, or only nine per cent. as compared with a decrease of 166,585*l.* in the previous year's returns. The rate of interest on fixed deposits for twelve months was reduced from six to five per cent. per annum. The course of exchange on London fluctuated but little, varying from half to one and a half per cent. premium.

Savings Bank.

Considering the almost universal depression which existed during the year under review, the returns from the savings bank are of a very satisfactory character, and bear evidence of the frugality of the industrial classes. The number of depositors increased by 1,004, as against an increase of only 603 in the preceding year, and the amount deposited was greater by 20,780*l.* The total number of new accounts opened was 2,321; and the amount deposited 145,207*l.*, as compared with 124,427*l.* The amount withdrawn was less by 13,676*l.*, being 133,848*l.*, as against 147,524*l.* The amount to the credit of depositors, at the close of the year, including interest, was 274,508*l.*, or 25,179*l.*

The total sum lent on mortgage of freehold property was 193,428*l.*, the rate of interest charged being eight per cent. per annum. The rate of interest allowed to depositors was six per cent. per annum, the same as last year. The reserve fund amounted to 19,587*l.*, and the sum of twenty-five thousand pounds was invested in Government securities.

Imports and Exports.

The commercial transactions of 1867 were of a more favourable character than those of 1866, for whilst the total amount of trade was nearly as large as in that year, the exports of produce were much greater, and the quantity of goods imported proportionately smaller. In place of a small balance of produce exported over imports consumed, viz., 23,595*l.*, the large sum of 658,228*l.* represented the difference between the import and export trade.

The combined import and export trade amounted to 5,671,016*l.* or only 22,863*l.* less than in 1866. The total imports were valued at 2,506,394*l.*, as against 2,835,142*l.* or a decrease of 328,748*l.*, or twelve per cent.; and the aggregate exports amounted to 3,164,622*l.*, or 305,885*l.* more than in 1866, being 11 per cent. additional.

The following statement shows the combined import and export trade for each year since 1858, inclusive, the total imports, the imports retained for home consumption, the imports re-exported, the aggregate exports, the value of staple produce exported, and the difference between the latter and the value of imports consumed in the province:—

The combined import and export trade with the United Kingdom amounted to 2,624,268*l.*, as compared with 3,036,138*l.*, showing a decrease of 411,870*l.*, or thirteen per cent. The imports therefrom were of the value of 1,198,243*l.*, and the exports 1,426,025*l.*, showing a balance of trade in favour of the Colony of 227,781*l.* In the preceding year our imports from Great Britain exceeded our exports by 724,407*l.* As compared with that year the imports of British goods declined to 682,030*l.* or sixty per cent., whilst the exports to the mother country increased by 270,160*l.* or twenty-four per cent.

With Victoria the combined import and export trade was slightly greater, amounting to 1,372,971*l.*, as against 1,337,987*l.*, or an addition of 34,984*l.* We imported from Melbourne goods of the value of 454,358*l.* in place of 402,692*l.* last year, and shipped to that port produce and goods valued at 918,613*l.*, as against 935,295*l.*, showing an increase of 51,666*l.* in the former, and a decrease of 16,682*l.* in the latter case. The balance of trade in 1867 was in favour of South Australia to the amount of 464,254*l.* and of 532,602*l.* in 1866.

Transactions with New South Wales were also of greater magnitude, but the balance of trade was against the Colony to the amount of 106,039*l.* The imports and exports together amounted to 932,296*l.*, as compared with 647,624*l.*, or 284,672*l.* additional. The imports from thence reached 519,168*l.*, or 224,097*l.* more; of this 414,415*l.* was the value of river-borne wool for transhipment, which in the preceding season amounted to only 138,405*l.* Our exports to New South Wales amounted to 413,128*l.*, principally breadstuffs, as against 352,553*l.* in 1866, or an increase of 60,575*l.* sterling. Of these exports 94,914*l.* went by the way of the river Murray, as against 88,326*l.* in the previous year. The whole of the river trade of 1866 was transacted with New South Wales and reached half a million sterling.

With Queensland the exports advanced from 107,651*l.* to 110,959*l.*; the balance of trade in favour of this Colony amounting to 103,267*l.* Shipments to New Zealand advanced from 65,586*l.* to 83,835*l.*, the imports thence amounting to 2,149*l.* only. From Tasmania we imported timber, &c., of value of 15,887*l.*, as against 26,469*l.* in the previous year. With Western Australia, owing to the more regular communication, business relations are quickly extending—the combined import and export trade with that Colony amounting to 88,159*l.*, as compared with 49,530*l.* in 1866. The value of the wool sent here for transhipment was 11,431*l.* in 1867, and 861*l.* in the previous year; the total imports in the two years being 38,202*l.*, and 5,031*l.*, respectively. The exports hence consist of flour and general merchandise, the balance of trade in our favour being 6,755*l.* sterling.

The exports of breadstuffs to the Cape amounted to 47,896*l.*, and of copper, &c., to India to 69,343*l.* in value, compared with 2,692*l.* and 144,121*l.* in 1866. From Mauritius we imported 137,248*l.* worth of sugar, &c., as against 116,973*l.*, that island taking flour, &c., of the value of 19,907*l.* and 8,879*l.* in the respective years.

With other countries the export trade was almost nominal, the figures being, 17,347*l.* to Brazil, 6,810*l.* to Singapore, 3,124*l.* to Batavia, and 2,062*l.* to Hong Kong.

The imports from China amounted to 56,650*l.*, as against 26,576*l.*; from Sweden and Norway, Hamburg, and the United States we received the usual cargoes—valued at 36,534*l.*, 9,353*l.*, and 23,006*l.* respectively.

The imports of coin and bullion amounted to 93,392*l.*, all but 325*l.* being retained in the Colony; in the previous year we exported specie to the amount of 86,930*l.*, and only received 68,050*l.* in return, showing a balance of 18,880*l.* against the Colony.

Exports, the Produce of the Colony.

Following previous custom, I have analysed the returns relating to the exportation of products or manufactures of the Colony, and prepared statements showing fairly and concisely the progress of each branch of industry during the 10 years just closed. The first table subjoined gives the total value of the colonial produce exported, and of the three principal staples, in the years 1858, 1862, and 1867, respectively, the commencement, middle, and termination of the first decade; also the aggregate value of such exports during the quinquennial periods ending 1862 and 1867; together with the average annual shipments in the same periods, and the proportion which the shipments of agricultural, pastoral, and mineral products respectively bore to the total shipments :—

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

It will be seen that the total exports of produce during the past 10 years has amounted to over 21,250,000*l.* sterling; the shipments during the latter half of that period exceeding those of the former by 50 per cent.

The exports during the five years ended 1862, averaged 1,638,131*l.* yearly; whilst during the five years ended 1867, the average annual exports had increased to 2,636,273*l.*

In 1858 the produce exported was valued at 1,355,041*l.*, made up as follows:—Breadstuffs, 525,398*l.*; wool, 420,833*l.*; copper and other minerals, 373,282*l.*; and miscellaneous products, 35,528*l.* In 1867, the exports had increased to 2,776,095*l.*, that is, more than doubled in 10 years, the several staples being shipped in the following proportions:—Breadstuffs, 1,037,085*l.*, increased 97 per cent.; wool, 919,532*l.*, increased 118 per cent.; minerals, 750,170*l.*, increased 100 per cent.; and miscellaneous articles 69,308*l.*, an increase of 50 per cent.

The following statement shows as closely as possible the relative value of wheat, wool, and copper, as compared with the total exports of produce.

1866 -	38·3	31·9	26·2	3·6
1867 - -	38·8	32·1	26·0	3·1

Taking the average of the five years terminating with 1862, the value of breadstuffs formed 35·5, wool 33·4, copper 27·2, and miscellaneous articles 3·9 per cent. of the total exports. Taking the like average for the similar period ending in 1867, we find breadstuffs contributed 38·8, wool 32·1, copper 26·0, and miscellaneous articles 3·1 per cent. of the gross produce.

Breadstuffs, grain, &c.

Great activity in the export wheat and flour trade was occasioned by the demand for the English market in 1867, which fortunately set in just as a most prolific harvest had been gathered. The area under wheat had increased from 410,608 acres to 457,628 acres, yielding 6,561,451 bushels, as compared with 3,587,800 bushels in the year preceding; the average yield per acre being 14 bushels 20 lbs., as against 8 bushels 44 lbs. The average price of wheat throughout the year was 4*s.* 5*d.* per bushel, or 1*s.* 9*d.* less than in 1866. Although the shipments were one fourth greater than the highest export previously recorded; viz., in 1864, when 76,553 tons, valued at 1,464,953*l.* were shipped, the money value was one fourth less, inasmuch as in 1864 we sold at 8*s.* 6*d.*, and last year could obtain but 4*s.* 5*d.* per bushel on the average.

Compared with last year, when the export demand was very limited, and the harvest deficient by nearly one third, the wheat trade of 1867 appears at first sight to have been extremely large; but reference to the following table, giving the progress during the past five years, will show the advance was not greater than might be expected in a favourable season:—

Year.	Acres under Wheat.	Wheat Harvest.	Average Yield per Acre.	Flour and Wheat shipped.	Average price Wheat, per Bushel.	Total Value Breadstuffs, Grain, &c, shipped.
		Bushels.	Bs. lbs.	Tons.	s. d.	£
1863 - -	320,160	3,841,824	12 0	60,434	4 10	747,116
1864 - - -	335,758	4,691,919	14 0	76,553	8 6	1,464,593
1865 - -	390,836	4,252,949	11 0	60,513	8 7	1,228,480
1866 - - -	410,608	3,587,800	8 44	38,808	6 2	645,401
1867 - -	457,628	6,561,451	14 20	97,311	4 5	1,037,085

During the three years, 1863, 1864, and 1865, the harvests of which years averaged 12⅓ bushels to the acre, or very slightly above the average of the past ten years, we exported an average of 66,000 tons of breadstuffs; during 1867, the area under cultivation having in the interval increased one third, we exported 97,000 tons, or nearly fifty per cent. more.

Owing to the fluctuations in the price of wheat, the returns of value of this export would frequently only mislead, and consequently necessitate a comparison of quantities, for which purpose the following tabular statement, giving the shipments of flour, wheat, bran, and pollard, during 1858, 1862, and 1867; also the total exports for the quinquennial periods ending 1862 and 1867; and the average shipments annually during those periods :—

It will be noted that in 1858 29,363 tons of breadstuffs were sent away; in 1862, 51,092 tons; and in 1867, no less than 97,311 tons; so greatly has production increased during the past ten years. Again, the first five years of the decade showed a total export of 180,779 tons, averaging 36,156 tons yearly; while the last five years gave a total shipment of 333,618 tons, or an average of 66,723 tons yearly; showing that, irrespective of seasons favourable or otherwise, the production of breadstuffs has nearly doubled during the space of ten years.

For the first time Great Britain appears as a consumer to any extent of South Australian wheat and flour; 149,745 quarters of the former and 3,947 tons of the latter having being shipped in 1867. New South Wales, however, was the largest customer, taking 14,318 tons of flour and 78,726 quarters of wheat, as against 12,074 tons and 39,707 quarters in the previous year. The export to Queensland consisting of flour only, amounted to 8,829 tons, as compared with 5,926 tons in 1866. Victoria took 5,597 tons of flour and 39,707 quarters of wheat, as against 8,476 tons and 22,883 quarters; and New Zealand 3,601 tons and 23,916 quarters, as against 2,353 tons and 9,269 quarters in 1866. 2,946 tons of flour and 9,007 quarters of wheat were shipped to the Cape; 1,542 tons flour to the Mauritius, and 1,529 tons to Brazil; all largely in excess of former shipments. Small parcels, of about 250 tons each, were dispatched to India, Singapore, Batavia, and Hong Kong. Western Australia took only 406 tons flour, or about half the quantity she purchased in the preceding year.

Wool.

Although the total number of bales of wool shipped during 1867 exceeded that of the previous year by 4,418, the actual quantity of South Australian wool exported, was slightly below that shipped during 1866, viz., 389,328 lbs.; the increase in the exports, arising from the large quantities of Murray-borne wool arriving for transhipment, amounting to 5,618,550 lbs.; and to imports from Western Australia weighing 213,800 lbs. Reference, however, to a subsequent table will show that the clip of 1866–7 was largely in excess of that of the preceding year, yielding 24,026,669 lbs., as against 18,005,111 lbs. The aggregate quantity of wool shipped was 66,395 bales, weighing 22,633,792 lbs. and valued at 1,144,341*l.* sterling. In the previous year 61,977 bales were shipped, weighing 20,908,085 lbs. and worth 1,064,486*l.*

After making the deductions above referred to, it appears the quantity shipped as the produce of this Colony amounted to 56,003 bales, 19,350,195 lbs. in weight, and valued at 919,532*l.*; the clip shipped in the year 1866 having amounted to 58,540 bales,

The shipments of wool by way of Melbourne were greater than in 1866, owing to the larger proportion of Murray-borne wool; out of a total export of 66,395 bales, 46,607 were shipped direct to England, and 19,788 viâ Melbourne. In the preceding season 48,276 out of 61,977 bales were shipped direct, and 13,701 by way of the neighbouring Colony.

It is desirable, however, to bear in mind, when estimating the production of wool from season to season, that at the close of the year, the shipment of wool is at its height, and consequently a week's difference either earlier or later in the sailing of one or two wool ships would materially affect the returns. To avoid any error of this nature the following statement of the shipments from June to June is appended, which shows the actual production of each of the clips of the past five years:—

The above return is also useful as indicating the progress of the several pastoral districts; but it must be noted that only the wool actually shipped direct from the respective port is shown, and not that delivered coastwise, at Port Adelaide. The following figures gives the quantity and value of South Australian wool shipped in 1858, 1862, and 1867; also during the quinquennial periods terminating in the years 1862 and 1867, and the average annual shipments of those periods:—

Under more propitious circumstances than have existed during the past five years, a greater measure of progress than is shown in the above table might have been recorded, but it is nevertheless satisfactory to find that the average shipment of wool of that period was more than half as much again as that of the preceding five years. In the five years ending 1862, the average annual shipment was 11,079,342 lbs.; and in the five years just closed, 17,403,698 lbs. In the year 1858, 7,775,225 lbs. were exported; in 1862, 13,229,009 lbs.; and in 1867, 19,350,195 lbs., showing a rate of progression of two-thirds and of one-half during the respective intervening periods.

Minerals.

Mineral produce to the value of 750,170*l.* was shipped during the year under review; this amount being 74,331*l.* below the value exported in 1866. Fine copper was shipped in greater quantity, 156,863 cwts., value 627,384*l.*, in lieu of 129,272 cwts., value 584,509*l.*, showing an increase of 27,591 cwts., and in value 42,875*l.*; the average weekly shipment of fine copper was, therefore, 150 tons, as against 125 tons per week in 1866, and 100 tons in 1865. Less copper ore was sent away, the total export being 11,430 tons, value 113,409*l.*, as compared with 16,824 tons, value 225,683*l.*; showing a decrease in quantity of 5,394 tons, and in value of 112,274*l.* Lead and lead ores were also exported, the former in larger quantity, and the latter below the exports of the previous year. The following table gives the quantities and values of the several descriptions of ores and metals exported during the past five years:—

The produce of the mines of South Australia exported during the past ten years has reached in the aggregate the sum of over five and a half millions sterling. In the first half of the decade the shipments were of the value of 2,230,628*l.*, or averaging 446,126*l.* yearly; during the second half they amounted to 3,428,800*l.*, or an average shipment of 685,760*l.* annually. In 1858, this trade amounted to 373,282*l.*; in 1862, to 547,619*l.*; and 1867, to the sum of 750,170*l.* sterling.

More correct views of the extension of mining industry will be arrived at from a comparison of the quantities of produce raised and shipped, as the fluctuations in the value of minerals have been so great and frequent. The subjoined statement affords material for such a comparison, over a period of ten years:—

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

Reference to the above figures shows the export of fine copper during the last ten years has increased from 47,796 cwts. to 156,863 cwts. yearly, or three-fold; of copper ore, from 6,697 tons to 11,430 tons, or nearly double. During the five years ending 1862, 316,889 cwts. of fine copper, and 35,133 tons of ore were exported; whilst in the next five years, ending 1867, 616,425 cwts. of fine copper, and 54,318 tons of ore were sent away. It will be seen that, during the latter period, the average yearly exports of fine copper increased one hundred per cent., and of ore over fifty. Smelting operations on so large a scale necessitate the employment of a large fleet of vessels in carrying coals, 76,711 tons of which were imported during the twelve months.

Shipping.

Although a large increase appears in the number of vessels employed during 1867, owing to the increased export trade in breadstuffs, the total tonnage of the vessels entered inwards was slightly below that of the previous year—the imports from Great Britain, which arrive in the larger sized ships, having fallen off considerably, and Government immigration being suspended.

In 1867, 555 vessels of 167,547 tons entered at ports in South Australia, showing an increase of 31 vessels, but a decrease of 1,892 tonnage. From Great Britain 40 ships of 25,448 tons arrived, in lieu of 59 vessels of 40,379 tons, or 19 ships and 14,931 tons less. On the other hand, the arrivals from Victoria increased from 171 of 40,969 tons to 223 vessels of 56,457 tons, several of these being taken up for the wheat trade with Great Britain. In other respects there was but little variation from the previous year's returns. The following statement shows the number and tonnage of vessels entered inwards from each country during the past three years:—

Forty-one of the above vessels arrived in ballast, mostly under charter to load wheat. The total number of the crews amounted to 7,587, or 294 less than last year. The number of vessels entered at ports in the River Murray additional to the above, was 65 of 5,954 tons, and with crews numbering 321 men. During the previous season the number of vessels entered while in the Murray trade was 51 of 3,985 tons.

From the cause previously stated the departures, especially to Great Britain, were largely augmented. In 1866, 515 ships of 170,432 tons, whilst in 1867, 581 vessels of 176,272 tons left the province, showing an increase of 66 vessels and 5,840 tons; 73 ships of 44,547 tonnage sailed for Great Britain, as compared with 30 vessels of 22,097 tons in 1866, an increase of 43 vessels and 22,450 tons.

The subjoined return shows the number of vessels entered outwards and departing to each country during the past three years.

The average tonnage of vessels leaving for England in 1865 was 525 tons; in 1866, 736 tons, and in 1867, 610 tons burthen. The number of vessels registered as belonging to Port Adelaide is 123 of 15,229 register tonnage.

Land, Cultivation, and Live Stock.

The subjoined extracts from my ninth annual report on the Agricultural Statistics, published early in the year, afford all the information upon this subject available up to the present date.

"The total area of land alienated from the Crown amounted, on 31st December last, to 3,568,742 acres—144,021 acres having been added during the past year, or 70,410 less than in 1866, and showing the quantity of freehold land occupied either by the proprietors or by their tenants to amount to 20·7 acres for each individual of the population. The proportion in 1858 was 18·8 acres, in 1862 it was 18·2 acres, showing an increase during the past five years of 2·5 acres each, although during the preceding quinquennial period it had slightly decreased. In 1856 the proportion was 15·1 acres per head. Nearly two thirds of the purchased land is in the occupation of the holders of the fee simple.

"In no other Australian Colony has so high a rate per head been attained, and the figures herein-after quoted will show that the facilities for procuring land for bonâ fide occupation and improvement have been far greater in South Australia than in either Victoria, New South Wales, or Queensland, when judged by actual results.

"From data compiled last season of the number, extent, and average area of the several holdings, it appeared that the largest class of occupiers were those farming from 100 to 200 acres—their number being 2,713 or 25·4 per cent. of the whole body, and their holdings averaging 144·6 acres. Next in number were the farmers of from 50 to 100 acres, of whom there were 2,214, with holdings averaging 76·4 acres each, and forming 20·7 per cent. of the gross number. Farms of from 200 to 350 acres were held by 1,715 persons, or 16 per cent. of the total occupiers, the average extent of each holding being 259·4 acres.

"The following table gives also the particulars as to the higher and lower classes not above mentioned, by which it will be seen that the holdings of the agriculturists average 137 acres. In Victoria the farming class hold an average area of 104 acres, or about one fourth less than here, and this quantity is stated to be the largest average during the past ten years.

"Holdings exceeding 500 acres are excluded from the above table.

"The enclosed land amounts to 4,712,276 acres, or 173,187 acres more than in the preceding year. This represents one-third more than the total purchased land, large areas held under lease from the Crown being fenced for sheep. Deducting the extent of cultivated land from that enclosed, shows 3,901,542 acres of fenced depasturage, or 102,167 acres more than given in the last returns.

"Cultivation progressed during 1867–8 to the extent of ten per cent., being two per cent. below the increase recorded during the preceding season, the additional area being 71,020 and 79,145 acres respectively. The total area of cultivated land is 810,734 acres as compared with 739,714 acres in 1866–7.

"23 per cent., or more than one out of every five acres of purchased land, is under tillage. Last season there were cultivated 4·37 acres per head of the population, or 13 acres for each male of 14 years of age and upwards, being one acre per head more than in 1865–6. In the season just closed, these figures had risen to $4\frac{3}{4}$ acres for each individual, or 14 acres for each male of 14 years and upwards.

"In Victoria there is but nine-tenths of an acre of cultivated land for each inhabitant, in New South Wales but one acre, and in Queensland only one quarter of an acre. The following table shows the progress according to latest returns made by adjoining Colonies in this respect during the last 10 years:—

"The area under wheat was unusually great, being 20 per cent more than in the previous year, when there appeared an increase of $11\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. over its predecessor. The total acreage sown with this cereal amounted to 550,456, as compared with 457,628 acres in 1866–7, or an addition of 92,828 acres. In two seasons the cultivation of wheat has increased one third. In 1865–6 we grew $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres, in 1866–7, $2\frac{3}{4}$ acres, and last season $3\frac{1}{5}$ acres for each individual of the population.

"68 out of every 100 acres cultivated were under wheat; a still larger proportion even than has obtained hitherto.

"Many thousand acres of crop of splendid growth, so far as the straw was concerned, were found not to be worth reaping, the ears being empty or containing but a few shrivelled grains and dust. It was therefore necessary on this occasion to ascertain the area reaped, as well as the area sown, otherwise the average yield of the whole harvest might be seriously understated. Out of 550,456 acres sown, 494,740 acres only were harvested, showing 55,716 acres, or one-tenth of the crop, to have been unfit for reaping. As many crops were reaped which yielded less than two bushels to the acre, it is apparent that only those perfectly worthless were left.

"The total produce reaped was only 2,579,894 bushels, as against 6,561,451 bushels last season, showing 3,981,557 bushels deficiency. The average yield for the whole Province, upon the total area sown, was only 4 bushels 40lbs. to the acre, or 9 bushels 40lbs. less than the preceding season. Upon the reaped acreage the average production was 5 bushels 12lbs. A comparison of the yield in each district for the two years will afford but too ample evidence of the disastrous effect of the red rust in various localities. So poor a yield has, of course, never before been recorded. The seasons 1865–6 and 1859–60—both years of drought—produced 8 bushels 44lbs. and 9 bushels 38lbs. respectively. The following table gives the total area of land under cultivation, the acreage under wheat, the gross produce of the harvest, and the average yield per acre for each of the past 10 seasons :—

Season.	Acres Cultivated.	Acres under Wheat.	Produce, Wheat.	Average per Acre.

"It appeared that out of 2,579,894 bushels, one-half, or 1,311,542 bushels, was good marketable grain; 854,252 bushels, or one-third, was of middling character; and the remainder, 414,000 bushels, was shrivelled inferior grain, only available, as then thought, for pig's food, but since considered fit for seed, and largely used for that purpose.

"Although the total quantity of hay grown was less than in 1866–7, the average yield was only 4 cwt. short of the production of that season, whilst it gave 5 cwt. more than in 1865–6. The healthy appearance of the wheat at the time of the hay harvest unfortunately, as it happened, induced some growers of hay to leave their crops for grain. The deficiency in the quantity cut was 13,907 acres, being 97,432 acres against 111,339 acres. The total produce was 109,135 tons, as against 147,159 tons, and the average yield was 22 cwt., as compared with 26 cwt. to the acre in the preceding season.

"More land was sown with barley and oats; of the former 13,816 acres, as compared with 11,723 acres, or an increase of 2,093 acres; of the latter 4,846 acres were grown, or an addition of 937 acres. The yield of both cereals was, however, deficient, being six bushels per acre less than in 1866–7. The average of the barley crop was 13 bushels 49 lbs., and of oats 16 bushels 7 lbs.; the yield in the previous season having been 20 bushels 6 lbs. and 22 bushels 12 lbs. respectively. The total quantity of barley reaped was 193,341 bushels, and of oats 78,554 bushels, contrasted with 235,941 bushels of the former and 87,143 bushels of the latter at the preceding harvest.

"Nearly twice the quantity of peas were sown—3,499 acres against 1,853 acres; the produce amounting to 36,381 bushels. This is the first occasion of recording the yield of this description of crop, which amounted to 10 bushels 23 lbs. to the acre.

"Potatoes show an increase in both area grown and the quantity raised, the average yield being the same as last season, 48 cwt. to the acre. 2,701 acres produced 6,538 tons, against 2,526 acres and 6,045 tons, showing an increase of 175 acres planted and 493 tons of produce.

"In view of the vastly increased area sown with wheat, the falling off in the breadth of fallow land, viz., 10,820 acres, is less than could be expected; 119,481 acres being fallowed, as against 130,301 acres in the year preceding. The prospect at seedtime was such as to induce the farmer to crop every acre he had ploughed.

"There is an increase of 652 acres in orchards and gardens. Of the former there are 2,563 acres, and 3,912 acres of the latter, or together 6,475 acres.

"Vineyards, on the other hand, show a slight decrease on the previous season of 152 acres. The total area is now 6,209 acres, with 5,869,406 vines in bearing and 1,022,740 vines yet unproductive. The aggregate quantity of wine made is returned as 863,584 gallons, or 128,601 gallons more than at the previous vintage. The production of the past three vintages has averaged 816,000 gallons, or nearly five gallons per head of the population. The shipments of wine only amounted to 8,924 gallons, valued at 1,901*l*. In 1862 we sent away 20,574 gallons, worth 6,777*l*. This trade has declined year by year since the imposition in Victoria of the present prohibitive duty. According to the latest available returns the produce of an acre of vines in New South Wales is 106 gallons, and in Victoria 70 gallons of wine. The South Australian vintage referred to herein produced 140 gallons to the acre.

South Australia.

"The Live Stock Returns are of a more satisfactory character than have been presented for several years. They show a large increase in the number of sheep (over half a million), and that the diminution in the number of horned cattle, so rapid of late, has at last reached its limit, being merely nominal.

"In the whole Colony, 4,477,445 sheep were depastured, as against 3,911,610 in 1866–7, showing an increase of 565,835. Nearly three-fourths (3,026,866) of the whole number were returned as depasturing within the boundaries of the counties, only 1,450,579 being found in the outside districts. During the past five years the flocks of the Colony have increased 30 per cent.

"The total number of horned cattle was 122,200, as compared with 123,820 last year, showing a slight diminution of 1,620 only, as compared with a decrease of 34,237 in the preceding year. Since 1863 the number of cattle has decreased one-half.

"Horses have increased in number from 70,829 to 74,228, or by 3,399. The addition to our horse stock since 1863 is about one-third in number. The increase in the number of pigs amounts to 50 per cent., being 89,304, as against 59,962 in the previous returns. Poultry of all kinds is more numerous, the number returned being 411,314, in place of 341,485. More attention is being paid to dairy produce for supply of the home market, and for exportation."

Railways.

Large increases appear in the traffic returns of the railways, both as regards passengers and goods. The total number of passengers conveyed was 444,089, as compared with 405,502 in 1866, or an increase of 38,587. The receipts, however, were less, amounting to 34,114*l.*, as against 36,183. A larger quantity of goods was carried than in any previous year, the total quantity amounting to 266,705 tons, as compared with 208,984 tons, or an addition of 57,721 tons, yielding a revenue of 88,577*l.* from this source, as against 75,247*l.* in 1866, or 13,330*l.* additional. The following return shows the gross receipts and expenditure, and a detailed statement of traffic for the past three years:—

Gross Receipts.

	1865.	1866.	1867.	1865.	1866.	1867.
Number of passengers	402,550	405,502	444,089	—	—	—
Passenger receipts	—	—	—	37,016	36,183	34,114
Tons of goods	261,183	208,984	266,705	—	—	—
Goods receipts	—	—	—	93,574	75,247	88,577
Other receipts	—	—	—	2,690	2,701	2,892
Total receipts	—	—	—	133,280	114,131	125,583

Gross Expenditure.

	1865.	1866.	1867.
Management	1,375	1,735	2,050
Locomotive department	18,824	16,150	19,542
Maintenance of line	22,334	24,161	31,118
Other working expenses (including goods agency)	71,936	61,923	66,615
Total expenditure	114,469	103,979	119,325

The total receipts amounted to 125,583*l.*, as against 114,131*l.* last year, and the expenditure to 119,325*l.*, as against 103,979*l.* The increased expenditure is chiefly in the item maintenance of lines, which amounted to 31,118*l.*, as compared with 24,161*l.* In the other branches of expenditure the additional cost is not out of proportion to the increased traffic. The number of train miles run was 164,479, as compared with 128,957 miles in 1866, showing an increase of 35,522 miles, owing chiefly to more frequent trains being run on the Port line, but partly to considerable excursion traffic during one portion of the year.

Main Roads.

During 1867 the Central Board of Main Roads constructed 79 miles of macadamized road, making the total length of main lines completed at the end of the year to be 496 miles, of which 376 have been made during the past 10 years; in the preceding year 67 miles were constructed, or 12 less. The cost in 1867 was 175,773*l.*, and 169,201*l.* the previous year. During the 10 years the Board expended 938,941*l.* upon construction of new works and maintenance of existing lines.

In addition to this the local road boards, municipalities, and district councils have expended out of rates, supplemented by grants from the Treasury, large sums in the improvement of internal communication, the two latter bodies expending 90,880*l.*, as compared with 70,886*l.* in the year preceding.

Postal Communication.

Very considerable extension in the postal service was effected upon entering into new contracts in 1867, and, although adding much to its cost, rendered facilities to distant and sparsely-peopled localities hitherto denied them.

The number of miles travelled by the mails increased more than one-fourth, or from 809,160 to 1,075,538 miles; the number of post-offices from 226 to 248; and the number of employés from 299 to 333.

Subjoined is a statement of the number of letters and newspapers carried, and of the income and expenditure of the department:

	1865.	1866.	1867.
Number of letters - -	2,444,207	2,703,105	2,804,418
Number of newspapers - -	1,760,415	1,968,120	1,924,760
Distance travelled by mails -	790,155	809,160	1,075,538
Income - - - -	25,023	27,987	28,495
Expenditure - - -	23,417	27,062	37,753

It will be seen that the revenue has increased from 27,987*l.* to 28,495*l.*, whilst the expenditure is now 37,753*l.*, as against 27,062*l.* In 1866 the service was self-supporting; whereas now it is carried on at a cost to the State of 9,258*l.* over receipts. The whole of this additional expense is not to be debited to the extension of postal business, but in large degree to the increased rates at which the new mail contracts were taken.

Telegraphs.

At the close of 1867 there were 64 telegraph stations open in South Australia, 1,113 miles of line, and 1,642 miles of wire erected, six additional stations having been opened, and 77 miles of wire erected during the year. The number of messages transmitted was 122,138, as compared with 121,153 in 1866; the receipts amounted to 12,673*l.*, as against 12,413*l.* There was an increased income from the Port, South-eastern, and Intercolonial divisions; the only line showing a decrease, which, moreover, was very slight, was that traversing the northern districts.

Nearly every centre of population is now connected with the capital, and with the net-work of telegraphs existing throughout the adjoining Colonies; and the organization of the department is brought into effect in amalgamation with the post office, money order system, and savings bank in all the principal townships.

Conclusion.

The general statistical table, illustrative of the progress of South Australia from its formation as a Colony up to the present time, will be found at the close of the volume. Reference thereto will show that the year under review has not been deficient in those elements of progress which assure a steady advance in the development of our resources.

(No. 56.)

My Lord Duke, Government House, Perth, March 25, 1868.

I have the honour to forward the Blue Book of Western Australia for the year 1867, accompanied by an explanatory letter from the Colonial Secretary, and containing highly interesting information with reference to the continued prosperity of the Colony.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,
&c. &c. &c.

Sir, Colonial Secretary's Office, Perth, March 23, 1868.

In forwarding for transmission to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies the Blue Book for 1867, I am glad to be able to report that the financial condition of the Colony is in a satisfactory state, and that every interest is if slowly yet steadily progessing.

2. Review since 1862.

The usual term of a Governor's stay in a Colony having passed since your Excellency assumed office here, and as it is possible the present Blue Book may be the last I shall send in to you, it may not be unprofitable, and it will assuredly be interesting, if before I enter into details of the past year, I take a short review of the progress of the Colony since February 1862, the date of your arrival. At that time exploration had not resulted in bringing into occupation for squatting purposes land more distant than that on the Murchison to the north or Cape Riche to the eastward. There was much dissatisfaction felt at the mode in which convict labour was employed, and at the way in which money had been expended on public works; the finances of the Colony were not in a flourishing condition, and the necessity for sweeping changes in the land regulations was loudly advocated. It is not too much to state that the measures adopted during your Excellency's term of government have to a great extent met the various evils then complained of.

Land is now usefully occupied to the northward as far as the De Grey river, and at Espérance Bay to the eastward. Convict labour has been fairly distributed for the purpose of making roads and bridges in the Colony, and there are few districts the rivers and brooks in which are not crossed with substantial bridges, and where travelling is not comparatively easy at all seasons of the year. The money expended on public works, aided by convict labour, has gone far further than it would otherwise have done, and the means of communication throughout the out districts of Western Australia are, I apprehend, at present, equal to those of the other Australian Colonies of far longer standing.

The amended Land Regulations of 1864 and 1865 are working satisfactorily, and the extent of land now under lease is very large. The finance of the Colony is in a sound condition, and there is a balance of some 16,000*l.* in the Colonial Treasury, and no outstanding debt of any kind to be met.

3. Comparison of Revenue, &c.

The following comparison of the revenue, &c. for the years 1861–1864 and 1867, will show the gradual progress of the Colony in some few important matters, and may be taken as a fair example of all interests; the rate of increase in the intervening years has been at much the same ratio.

Ore (do.)	7,130	18,000	15,879

4. A perusal of the foregoing figures cannot but be satisfactory, the few cases in which a decrease occurs can easily be accounted for. That in the tonnage is consequent on the class of steamers now calling at King George's Sound being of far less burden than was used in 1861 and previous to that time.

The expenditure on public works in 1861 was far in excess of that in any previous year; the expenditure in that year was 14,000*l.* in excess of the revenue, and there were heavy amounts for public works to be met from the revenue of 1862. The timber in the above figures includes sandal wood. The export of mahogany or Jarrah timber has decreased of late, but a demand for this valuable wood is again springing up. The export of ore fluctuates greatly, and will do so, till the mines, of the richness of which there is no doubt, are properly worked by persons of large capital, and whose interests are not purely colonial.

5. Revenue and Expenditure, 1867.

The actual revenue for the year 1867 has exceeded that estimated by 8,386*l.*, and is in excess of that received in 1866 by 1,049*l.* 4,000*l.* of the excess for the year was from customs; 1,500*l.* from sales of land; and 2,500*l.* from land under lease.

The expenditure for the year exceeded the estimate by 7,457*l.*, and that of 1866 by 4,850*l.*, and the excess was incurred as follows: Preparations for His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, 2,000*l.*; expenses connected with the North District, 1,600*l.*; and remittances to the Crown agents of 5,000*l.*, yet in hand and intended to be applied to the purchase of a steam dredge for work on the Swan and Canning rivers.

6. Imperial Expenditure.

The expenditure from Imperial funds has been during the past year fully equal to that in former years; it cannot be expected this will be maintained for with no fresh influx of convicts or pensioners, and with a daily diminution of existing numbers, there must be a falling off in the amount. The time is close at hand for the gradual winding up of the Convict Department, and much as may be said in favour of Western Australia ceasing to be a receptacle for convicts, there will be very much to regret in the want of labour for public purposes and also the want of sale for produce at paying prices, which has hitherto been the rule. There may be, and probably will be, many fresh sources of emolument offering to the settler, but he will find few where the return is so certain as that received from the Commissariat chest.

7. Public Works.

The sum of 13,506*l.* expended in public works over a widely extended Colony does not seem to be very large, but this sum, coupled with the convict labour that has been employed, will show a very large amount of work for that money. The convicts have principally been employed in opening up new lines of road and constructing bridges over rivers, and thus connecting parts of the Colony that would during the winter season be isolated from each other, and in keeping in repair lines of road already in use. The only new public work of great importance commenced during 1867 has been the construction of a large town hall and market place in Perth, the want of which has long been felt.

8. Population.

The increase of population during 1867 has been small, indeed, little in excess of the numbers of convicts and pensioners who have been sent from England; there is still a desire on the part of free immigrants to emigrate to the Eastern Colonies under an impression that they will better their position, an impression generally found to be most erroneous. Now that the importation of convicts has ceased, the question of a regular supply of labour is one of the utmost importance, and regarding which much of the future prosperity of the Colony depends. There is an ample field for good farming men of steady habits; the number of working men in the Colony, who without great abilities or advantages have made themselves independent, ought to act as a spur to induce others to follow their example, the result of which is no chimera but a certainty. There is a large demand for female servants of respectable character, who soon become absorbed into the general population by marriage. The proportion of males to females is at present nearly two to one.

9. Savings Bank.

I am glad to be able to continue a favourable report of the Post Office Savings Banks, the depositors in which have increased during 1867 from 1,304 to 1,567.

These banks are really doing much good among the special class for which they are intended, and the cost of management and interest was, during the past year, more than repaid by the investment on mortgage of a portion of the sums deposited in them.

10. Pauperism.

Notwithstanding the benefit of the savings banks there is still an increase of pauperism throughout the Colony, and I fear the peculiar features of the majority of the population preclude the hope of any decrease in the large item of expenditure under this head. What with old pensioners leaving young wives and families without provision, ticket of leave holders re-convicted, leaving those dependent on them chargeable to public funds, and the undoubted fact of the worn out constitutions of many expirees and conditional pardon holders who become a burden on colonial and not on convict funds, there is I fear little hope of an immediate reduction of this item of expenditure.

11. Education.

The number of scholars in the schools supported or assisted by public funds has increased from 1,305 in 1866 to 1,374 in 1867. There are altogether 43 schools working under the supervision of the Education Board, an increase of two over the number in 1866. Each year shows a gradual increase in the number of schools and scholars. The cost for each scholar inclusive of all expenses is high, amounting nearly to fifty shillings annually. This may principally be accounted for by the scattered nature of the population, and the large number of small schools necessary to be maintained. These schools are worked on a system somewhat similar to that known as the Irish Educational System, and separate grants to each religious denomination are thus avoided. The Roman Catholics are very averse to the system, and where practicable preclude children of their faith from attending. Wherever they can muster a sufficient number of children to institute a school, they do so, and therefore the number of scholars attending the Government schools must not in any way be taken as a criterion of the number receiving education.

12. Imports and Exports, 1867.

In my last year's Report I stated that the very large increase in the imports must not be looked on as permanent, and the amount has this year been reduced from 251,907*l.* to 204,612*l.*, but as this latter amount is by more than 20,000*l.* in excess of any previous year except 1866, it may be looked on as satisfactory, more especially as it is known large orders have been sent for goods.

The exports are in excess of those of 1866 by 24,000*l.*, and may be expected to increase during the current year.

There is every prospect of a considerable export of wheat and timber, and it is hoped it will not be long before the mines are again in full work.

13. Cultivation.

I am glad to be able to draw attention to a considerable increase during the past year of land under cultivation and lease; the land sales have also realised a larger sum, and are now on the increase.

Stock of all description is flourishing, and but for a temporary depression in the price of wool, the farmer and grazier would have nothing on which to found a reasonable complaint.

14. North District.

The want of rain in the North District has somewhat stopped the influx of stock and settlers from hence, and from the Eastern Colonies. Late accounts from Roebourne speak of heavy showers, and the opinions of those in the districts whose experience may be relied on are in no way discouraged. The want of communication between Perth and the North District is the great drawback; several endeavours have been made to get steamers to ply along the coast, for which there is now an ample field, but as yet without success. The time cannot be far distant when this will be too apparent a necessity to be longer postponed.

15. Crime.

The returns of crime during the past year call for little remark. There is a slight decrease in the number of summary convictions, few of which are for crimes other than of a trifling nature. Though a convict Colony, life and property are as secure as in any portion of Her Majesty's Dominions.

I will only in conclusion remark, that the present state of the Colony, coupled with the slow but steady progress it has made during the past six years of your Excellency's administration, cannot but be satisfactory to you.

Great changes are now coming, how far those changes will affect the prosperity of the Colony it would be idle for me to surmise. There are very many elements of prosperity that properly fostered may result in great good to Western Australia, but there are at the same time many elements of a different nature, which, unless averted by careful management and good government, will do much to retard the progress of the Colony, and prevent her ever rivalling the prosperity of her eastern neighbours.

Census Results and General Statistics of New Zealand for 1867.

Report to the Honourable Edward William Stafford, Colonial Secretary, &c.

Registrar-General's Office,
Wellington, February 25, 1869.

Sir,

Previous publication of portions of contents of this volume, viz.:—Abstract of census. Results;

Before entering upon the matters to which this report is to be devoted, it appears proper to premise that the statistical volume, which I have now the honour to present, is, to a considerable extent, substantially a re-issue of information previously published. On the 9th of July in last year, a parliamentary paper, under the title of "Abstracts of "certain Principal Results of a Census of New Zealand, taken in December, 1867," was published and presented to both Houses of the General Assembly. These abstracts included a number of particulars respecting the population, cultivations and crops, and the live stock in the Colony, shown both for each Province and for each electoral district; with comparative tables exhibiting the progress ascertained by the successive censuses of 1858, 1861, 1864, and 1867. The figures for 1867 were indeed stated to be at that time subject to revision (and considerable labour has since been expended in the endeavour to make them as accurate as possible); but, as I then anticipated, the alterations made in consequence of that revision are for the most part of very little practical importance, deriving their value chiefly from their affording, in some instances, a closer approximation to that accuracy in every detail of statistical compilation, which it is so obviously desirable to secure . . . . . On the 2nd of September a series of "Statistical Tables in anticipation of the Annual Volume for 1867" was presented to the General Assemby. This included immigration and emigration; births, deaths, and marriages; trade and interchange (shipping, imports and exports, summarized and in detail); the whole of the statistics relating to revenue and finance; the whole of the postal statistics, and other matters. Indeed, the extent to which this volume was anticipated by that series is shown by the fact that it contained fifty of the tables (No. I. to No. L.) in the second part,—which, as they now appear again, are not even a reprint, but, as stated above, simply a re-issue of the same tables . . . . Other branches of the census results (the compilation of some of which is everywhere found laborious and often tedious), and the portions of the general statistics after No. 50 in Part II., remained to be prepared. But most of these were ready within a few weeks after the presentation of the series above referred to; and there is no doubt that the complete volume would have been in circulation some months since had not the pressure of work entailed by the Parliamentary session on the Government printing office caused a lengthened and entire cessation of the printing of the statistics. Recently this work has been resumed, and carried on with a rapidity which has, in some measure, made up for previous delays.

Tables of general statistics.

I have submitted this statement with a twofold object:—1. To explain to many into whose hands this volume will come how it is that they will find in it numerous tables precisely the same as tables in their possession long since; and, 2, to suggest for the consideration of any critics, who may be inclined to characterize the volume as a publication of "antediluvian statistics,"—because while it relates to 1867 it is only published in 1869,—the fact that a large portion of the most important information contained in it is not now published for the first time,—various particulars of the census results as given in the "Abstracts" above referred to having been, several months ago, published in leading journals in the United Kingdom, to the editors of which the parliamentary paper was transmitted.

Division of volume into two parts.

With a view to facility of reference and general convenience of arrangement, the tables have (as in the volume for 1864) been classified in two divisions, part I. being devoted to the census exclusively, and part II. containing the general statistics for the year. A separate list of "contents" is given for each of these "parts."

Part I.—Census.

The triennial census enumeration was taken for the night of the 19th December, 1867, on a plan substantially the same as that adopted in December 1861, and December 1864, by which the information was obtained not only for each province of the Colony, but also for each of the electoral districts returning members to the General Assembly. The compilations have been made in accordance with this arrangement, separate tables having been constructed for the provinces and the electoral districts respectively upon all the branches of information with regard to which such details seemed necessary. The exact territory comprised within each of the electoral districts named in the tables will be found described in the appendix to this part of the volume, according to the definitions given in the several representation Acts by which they were respectively constituted. These descriptions follow consecutively in the order in which the districts are arranged in the tables, being the order of the provinces from Auckland (North) to Southland. It is to be borne in mind, however, that as "The County of Westland, Act, 1867," had not yet been brought into force when the census was taken, the territory included in that county was, as before, included in the province of Canterbury. But the particulars of information relating to the county are easily ascertainable from the tables for the electoral districts, the census results for that territory being comprehended in the figures for the two electoral districts of Westland South and Westland Boroughs.

Appendix A.

I now proceed, as on former occasions, to give, in a condensed form, the leading points of the information embodied in the following tables, referring those who desire to enter into minuter details to the tables themselves. Notes in the margin will direct to the several tables in which such details are to be found.

Object of this report.

Population.

The population of New Zealand (exclusive of aboriginal natives, and of the military and their families), was, as shown by the census returns for December 1867, 218,668, of whom 131,929 were males and 86,739 females. The distribution of this population through the several provinces was as follows, viz., Auckland, 48,321; Taranaki, 4,359; Wellington, 21,950; Hawke's Bay, 5,283; Nelson, 23,814; Marlborough, 4,371; Canterbury (including the county of Westland), 53,866; or, if the population returned for that county (15,418) be deducted, 38,448; Otago, 48,577; and Southland, 7,943; to which is to be added 184, the population of the Chatham Islands, to make up the general total stated above. Thus it will be seen that the Northern Island (comprising the Provinces of Auckland, Taranaki, Wellington, and Hawkes Bay) contained 79,913, or 36·58 per cent.; and the Middle Island (comprising the Provinces of Nelson, Marlborough, Canterbury, Otago, and Southland) 138,571, or 63·42 per cent. of the whole population of the Colony. There can be no doubt, however, that the actual numbers exceeded the totals given for the Colony, as besides individual omissions through the negligence of sub-enumerators or from other causes, there are almost insuperable difficulties in obtaining a correct enumeration of the gold-digging population. Had such an enumeration been practicable, the total would almost certainly have been many hundreds, or even several thousands, more than it is.

Part I. Tables I., II., IV. Population of Colony (as shown by census). Of each province.

Of the Northern and Middle Islands.

Population probably greater than census numbers.

The ascertained numbers in 1867, as compared with the population shown by the census of 1864, exhibit an increase within the triennial period of 46,510, or 27·01 per cent. The average annual increase from 1864 to 1867 thus appears to have been nine per cent. The following summary shows the numerical increase or decrease in each of the provinces within that period, with the proportionate increase or decrease in 1867, calculated on the population of each province in 1864:—

A comparative Table (No. II.) shows the population for the respective provinces in December 1858, December 1861, December 1864, and December 1867, with the numerical and centesimal increase or decrease in each of them during the respective triennial periods 1858–61, 1861–64, and 1864–67. A comparison of the numbers in 1858 with those in 1851, when a census of the Colony was taken, could not be exhibited with equal accuracy for the provinces, and is not included in the table; but it may be interesting to introduce here the evidence of the progress of population in the Colony, as a whole, since the first date (1851). In that year the total population numbered 26,707. In 1858 it had (according to the finally corrected figures) increased to 59,413, being an increase in seven years amounting to 32,706 persons, or 122·46 per cent. In 1861 the total was 99,021, being an increase, as compared with 1858, of 39,608, or 39·99 per cent. In 1864 the total was 172,158, being an increase, as compared with 1861, of 73,137, or 73·86 per cent. And in 1867, as has been shown, the total was 218,668, being an increase, as compared with 1864, of 46,510 persons, or 27·01 per cent. Comparing the two years—1851 and 1867—the aggregate increase during the period of 16 years amounted to 191,961 persons, or 718·77 per cent., being an average increase for each year included in the period amounting to 11,997 persons, or 44·92 per cent.

Progress of population 1851–67.

The population of each electoral district of the Colony will be found in Table No. IV., which shows, in addition to the numbers, the sexes and the ages, and the numbers of each sex under and over 21 years of age.

Electoral districts, Table IV.

A separate table is devoted to the population of cities or towns in the Colony. It shows the numbers of the inhabitants in the chief town of each province in 1867 as compared with 1864, with the numerical and centesimal increase or decrease within that period; also the population, in 1867, of a number of other towns or townships in which a similar comparison cannot be carried out, their population not having been separately ascertained in 1864.

Population of towns, Table III.

Although the numbers of the aboriginal native population are not ascertained by the census of the Colony, I am enabled, by returns supplied from the Native Secretary's Office, to give the estimate of them which will be found in Appendix B. and Appendix C. of this part. Indeed, as respects the provinces of Canterbury, Otago, and Southland, an enumeration which may be regarded as a census was made in the early part of 1868 by Alexander Mackay, Esq., Native Commissioner, the results of which will be found in Appendix C. They show for those three provinces a total of 1,433, of whom 798 were males (535 above 14 years of age, and 263 under 14), and 630 females (427 above, and 203 under 14); with five children, sex not stated. . . Appendix B. relates chiefly to the northern island, in which the bulk of the Maori population is found; including, however, those in the province of Nelson, and the prisoners who were then at the Chatham Islands. This does not profess to be any more than an estimate; and remarks appended to some of the figures point to the conclusion that the estimate is below what are (or at least then were) the true numbers. Taking the figures as they stand, they show 14,897 men, 12,353 women, and 9,857 children, making a total of 37,107. These, added to the numbers in Appendix C., represent the general (estimated) total of the aboriginal native population in the Colony as 38,540.

If it were possible to collect, with regard to the Maories, reliable information relating to various branches of census statistics, no doubt the results would have a high and peculiar interest. But the impracticability of accomplishing this at present is only too evident. It may not be out of place, however, to quote here a passage from a letter from Mr. A. Mackay which accompanied the "census" return for parts of the Middle Island above referred to. Although relating only to one point, and to a portion of the Colony in which the numbers of the Maories are comparatively small, it throws a gleam of light where unhappily there is much that is gloomy and discouraging. Referring to the natives at the whole of the places visited by him, Mr. Mackay says—

"There is one marked improvement in their condition that I am happy to be able to report satisfactorily on; and that is the general sobriety of the whole population. The intemperance they were addicted to in former years, lamented over by former officers as demoralizing and diminishing their race, has almost entirely disappeared; and I am happy to say that drunkenness amongst them at the present time is quite as rare as sobriety in former years."

Relative Proportions of Sexes.

Proportions of the sexes in the Colony.

The number of males in New Zealand (exclusive of the aboriginal natives and the military and their families), according to the census returns for December 1867, was 131,929, or 60·33 per cent. of the whole population. The number of females was 86,739, or 39·67 per cent. The following figures will show for each province separately the centesimal proportions of males and females respectively to the population of the province, and the centesimal excess of males in each province:—

In each province.

	Males. per Cent.	Females. per Cent.	Centesimal Excess of Males.
Auckland - - -	56·01	43·99	12·02
Taranaki - - -	57·99	42·01	15·98

Average for the Colony -	60·33	39·67	20·66

Proportions in 1864, 1861, and 1858.

The average proportions of the sexes in December 1864 was, males, 61·91; females, 38·09; excess of males, 23·82. In December 1861, they were,—males, 61·67; females, 38·33; excess of males, 23·34. This was a remarkable increase on the proportion of males as compared with 1858, when the proportions were,—males, 56·68; females; 43·32; excess of males, 13·36 per cent.; but it was to a considerable extent explained by the great influx of miners to the gold fields of the Colony, very many of whom were unmarried, or had left their wives and families in other countries. It is gratifying to observe that, notwithstanding the continuance of this element of disparity, yet the last returns show some tendency towards an equalization of the numbers of the sexes.

Civil or Conjugal Condition of the People.

Tables V., VII.

Proportions of married and unmarried.

The general totals for the Colony, as shown by the census of 1867, were as follow:— Married males, 34,291, being 15·68 per cent. on the whole population, and 25·99 per cent. on the total number of males; married females, 32,606, being 14·91 per cent. on the whole population, and 37·59 per cent. on the total number of females; unmarried males (including widowers and male children), 95,562, being 43·70 per cent. on the whole population, and 72·43 per cent. on the total number of males; unmarried females (including widows and female children), 53,177, being 24·31 per cent. on the whole population, and 61·30 per cent. on the total number of females. The numbers of widowers and widows included are, 2,380 widowers and 2,562 widows. There were 3,032 persons (viz., 2,076 males and 956 females) with regard to whom no information as to "condition" was obtained.

Proportions aged 15 and upwards.

If we deduct from the totals of "unmarried" the persons under 15 years of age, the numbers remaining are, males, 55,217; females, 14,337. The proportions between the sexes from the age of 15 upwards is thus shown to be 79·39 per cent. of males, and 20·61 per cent. of females.

The information thus arrived at may be expressed otherwise as follows: Of every 100 of the total male population, 25·99 per cent. were married; and 41·86 aged 15 and upwards, with 30·58 under 15, were unmarried (there being 1·57 whose "condition" was not stated); and of every 100 of the total female population, 37·60 per cent. were married; and 16·53 aged 15 and upwards, with 44·17 under 15, were unmarried (there being 1·10 whose "condition" was not stated).

Comparison with 1864.

According to the census of 1864, a similar calculation exhibited the following results: Of every 100 of the total male population, 25·78 per cent. were married; and 44·95 aged 15 and upwards, with 27·97 under 15, were unmarried (there being 1·30 whose "condition" was not stated); and of every 100 of the total female population, 38·50 were married; and 17·43 aged 15 and upwards, with 43·55 under 15, were unmarried (there being 0·52 whose "condition" was not stated).

Dwellings of the People.

Tables V., VI., VII.

Numbers of dwellings.

The total number of houses or dwellings in the Colony in December 1867 was 54,015, against 37,996 in 1864, being an increase of 16,019 within the three years. It is to be remarked, however, that the gross total for 1867 included 4,595 tents, against 6,742 in 1864; most of these in both years being, as might be supposed, in the gold fields districts. The tents may be regarded as included in the numbers of dwellings having "one or two rooms," which in 1867 amounted to a total of 26,558, against 18,841 in 1864; there being in 1867, as compared with 1864, 6,209 dwellings of three rooms, against 4,612; 7,844 of four rooms, against 5,352; 3,543 of five rooms, against 2,451; and 9,861 of six rooms and upwards, against 6,674 in 1864.

Numbers of rooms.

Materials.

With respect to the materials of which the houses were constructed, the returns show,—wood, 38,844, against 25,463 in 1864; stone or brick, 1,182, against 1,082 in 1864; and other materials (including raupo houses and the tents above referred to), 13,989, against 11,451 in 1864.

Details of the information thus summarized will be found for the several provinces in Tables V. and VI., and for the electoral districts in Table VII.

Proportion of population to each dwelling.

The proportion of the population to each dwelling, calculated on the census returns of the respective years, was 4·04 in 1867; 4·53 in 1864; 4·42 in 1861; and 4·63 in 1858.

The sub-enumerators were furnished with special forms for returns of uninhabited houses, and houses building, in their sub-districts. The results, as given in those forms, have been compiled, and are shown in Table VIII. for the provinces, and in Table IX. for the electoral districts. But some uncertainty attaches to the part of these results relating to uninhabited houses, it being evident that while, in several instances, they include stores, shops, offices, &c., which were occupied during the daytime (only), in many other instances there are no means of accurately ascertaining from them whether or not such buildings were counted as "uninhabited." The returns of "houses building" are more reliable. They show for the Colony a total of 702, of which 550 were to be of wood, 51 of stone or brick, and 101 of other materials.

Tables VIII., IX.

Electoral Franchise.

Table X.

The total male population shown in the tables for the electoral districts (which, it is to be borne in mind, do not include the numbers who were on shipboard on the census night, or the inhabitants of the Chatham Islands) is 129,761, of whom 80,122 were aged 21 years or upwards. The total number of electors on the rolls at the same date was 33,338—a number which does not include the electors for the electoral district of the Otago gold fields, the nature of whose qualification (as defined in "The Miners' Representation Act Amendment Act, 1863") does not admit of the formation of an electoral roll in the usual way. The total number of representatives for these constituencies in the general assembly was 72 (including the two members for the Otago gold fields, but, of course, not including the members for the four Maori electoral districts constituted by "The Maori Representation Act, 1867," by which the House of Representatives has been made to consist of 76 members altogether).

Number of electors.

Proportion of electors to male population.

The proportion of electors to every 100 of the total male population shown for the electoral districts in December 1867 was 25·69 per cent., against 19·71 per cent. in 1864, and 22·39 per cent. in 1861; and the proportion to every 100 males aged 21 and upwards was in 1867, 41·60 per cent., against 31·43 in 1864, and 39·32 in 1861. Table X. contains calculations of the proportions for each electoral district; but although these calculations exhibit correct results as the electoral rolls actually stood at the time, the value of the detailed comparison between electoral franchise and population is necessarily qualified by the consideration that, in numerous instances, the electors are non-resident, many having votes in more than one district.

Places of Birth.

Tables XI., XII.

The places of birth of the population are shown, for the several provinces, numerically in Table XI., and centesimally in Table XII. The following were the proportions for the whole Colony:—England, 30·01 per cent.,; Ireland, 12·78; Scotland, 15·93; Wales, 0·60; New Zealand, 29·29; Australian Colonies, 5·17; other British dominions, 1·74; United States of America, 0·56; France, 0·25; Germany, 1·30; China, 0·56; other foreign countries, 1·12; at sea, 0·34; not specified, 0·35.

Subjoined is a compendious tabular view of the information on this subject derived from the census of 1867, compared with that supplied by the census of 1864:—

Occupations.

On this, as on former occasions, I have carefully considered the practicability and expediency of adopting the more detailed modes of classification of occupations which have of late years been introduced in some other countries. But, although the census returns have been compiled with considerable labour and detail in this office, I have not thought it desirable to make any material alteration in the form of table in which they were presented in former years. The difficulties which I have previously more than once pointed out continue to impede any attempt to tabulate this branch of the census information in New Zealand without incurring the risk of showing conclusions which would almost certainly be misleading in effect, however close may be their merely verbal accordance with the household schedules. Amongst the causes of this difficulty continue to be—the great number of cases in which settlers follow more than one occupation—the instances (probably frequent) in which they entered in the schedules the professions or callings to which they were brought up, or with which they would prefer to be identified (perhaps from a notion of their superior "respectability," as if there were not true respectability in the diligent pursuit of any branch of honest industry), rather than those in which they are most habitually engaged, or from which they principally derive their maintenance; the vagueness of many of the descriptions, and the different names given to what may be regarded as really the same business. The tables will, however, afford a general view of the proportions in which the colonists are engaged in the chief employments and pursuits, and the following summary will show the comparative numbers in 1864 and 1867:— Tables XIII., XIV.

Tables XV., XVI.

Religious Denominations.

The list of "religious bodies" in Schedule D. of "The Marriage Act, 1854 (as amended by "The Marriage Act Amendment Act, 1867"), has, as on former occasions, been made the basis of the compilation of the census results relating to religious denominations in 1867. A column has been added for the large number returned as "Protestants" without any more distinctive designation,—amounting to a total of 3,902 or 1·78 per cent. of the population. A column has also been introduced for those returned as "Pagans," "Chinese," or "Heathen," numbering 1,111 (most of them in the province of Otago).

Under the heading "otherwise described,"—that is, by designations which could not be brought under any of the previous headings in the table,—are 3,195 persons, or 1·46 per cent. This number will be found reduced to 248 persons by the note to Table XV., in which I have given the respective descriptions compiled from the schedules for 2,947. No designation has been omitted the persons returned as belonging to which numbered as many as 15 (including men, women, and children) in the Colony. For the remaining 248 persons there were no less than 49 descriptions; many of them, no doubt, almost identical in meaning, but all varying more or less in the form of expression.

The number not described in any way as to religious denomination was 1,752, or 0·80 per cent. of the population, being considerably smaller than that in 1864, when the number "not described" amounted to 2,618, or 1·52 per cent.

Proportion of each denomination to total population.

The centesimal calculations in Table No. XVI. show that according to the numbers given in the preceding Table (No. XV.), the Church of England had in December 1867, 42·53 per cent. of the population of the Colony; the Presbyterian Churches, 25·12 per cent.; the Roman Catholic Church, 13·91 per cent.; the Wesleyan Methodist Church, 7·62 per cent.; the Congregational Independents, 1·94 per cent.; the Baptists, 1·99 per cent.; the Primitive Methodists, 0·61 per cent.; the Lutherans, 1·09 per cent.; the Hebrews, 0·57 per cent.; the Society of Friends, 0·07 per cent.; "Protestants," not more distinctively described, were 1·78 per cent.; Pagans, Chinese, and Heathen, 0·51 per cent.; otherwise described, 1·46 per cent.; and not described in any way, 0·80 per cent.

The subjoined summary exhibits a comparison between 1864 and 1867, showing, for each of those years, the numbers of the population returned as belonging to each of the principal denominations; the increase or decrease on each in 1867, both in absolute numbers and in the centesimal proportions borne by those numbers to the numbers in 1864; and the centesimal proportion of each denomination to the total population in the respective years:—

Education.

The census returns relating to this most important subject show the following general results. Of the population of the Colony, of both sexes and all ages, there were 45,411 unable to read or write; 15,396 who could read only; and 151,431 who could both read and write; to which are to be added 6,430 respecting whose state of education the schedules contained no information. Deducting these, it appears that, of the population under 15 years of age, there were 24,100,—viz., 12,391 males and 11,709 females; and, of the population aged 15 and upwards, 127,331, viz., 84,394 males and 42,937 females, —able to read and write. The centesimal proportions are as follow:—Under 15 years of age: cannot read, males 54·01 per cent.; females, 54·45 per cent.; read only, males 13·66 per cent.; females, 13·75 per cent. Read and write, males 32·33 per cent.; females, 31·80 per cent. Fifteen years and upwards: cannot read, males 3·22 per cent.; females 3·74 per cent. Read only: males 2·65 per cent.; females, 5·74 per cent. Read and write: males 94·13 per cent.; females 90·52 per cent. Both sexes and all ages: cannot read, 21·40 per cent.; read only, 7·25 per cent.; read and write, 71·35 per cent. In 1864 the proportion able to read and write was 72·70, so that, at first view, there would seem to be a retrogression in 1867; but before adopting that discouraging conclusion it is to be remembered that there were in the latter year 6,430 persons (many of them gold diggers respecting whom the census information was imperfect on various points), whose state of education was not shown in the schedules, while in 1864 the number similarly not described was only 2,862; and that all the proportions are to be viewed as subject to the qualification arising out of the necessary deduction of this number. It is right also to note that in 1864 the proportion of the total population able to read and write showed an increase of 4·03 per cent. as compared with 1861; while 1861 showed an increase of 5·16 per cent. on the proportion shown by the census of 1858.

Schools. Table XX.

The information embodied in Table XX. includes the numbers of each sex attending school in each province in December 1867, distinguishing between schools receiving Government aid and private schools, and between day and Sunday schools; and showing the numbers of males and females respectively under five years of age, and between five and 15 in the Colony, and in each province.

The subjoined table presents a summary of the numbers attending schools in December 1867, as compared with the numbers in December 1864:—

Provinces.	At Day Schools.				At Sunday Schools.
	Supported by Government Aid.		Private, or not receiving Government Aid.		At Sunday only.		At both Day and Sunday.

Totals	7,903	9,313	8,072	10,639	2,641	5,010	8,958	12,765

The nearest approach to what may be considered as the "school-going period" which is derivable from the census returns is that shown by the numbers between the ages of five and 15. Within those ages the population amounted to a total of 41,793; and the numbers returned as attending day schools to 19,952, being a proportion of 47·74 per cent. on that total, against 50·28 per cent. on the total (of 31,737) in 1864. Dividing the number within the specified ages according to the sexes, there were attending day schools (in 1867), of the total of males (which was 21,376) a total of 10,447, or 48·87 per cent., against 51·36 per cent. in 1864; and of the total of females (which was 20,417), a total of 9,505, or 46·55 per cent., against 49·25 per cent. in 1864. Taking the aggregate population of all ages under fifteen, (which amounted to 79,185 persons), the proportion attending day schools in 1867 was 25·20 per cent., against 27·36 per cent. in 1864.

These calculations have been carefully made from the returns supplied to this office; but, as I have had occasion to remark with regard to each of the previous censuses, the columns for school attendance are frequently those which are least satisfactorily filled up in the schedules; and, notwithstanding the efforts made to render clear the headings distinguishing between attendance on "day schools," on "Sunday schools only," and on "both day and Sunday schools," it is to be apprehended that there has sometimes been confusion or inaccuracy in the entries made by the householders. Notwithstanding, however, any defectiveness in parts of the returns, they distinctly bring out the facts, that in 1867 there were at least 19,952 scholars attending day schools (public or private) in the Colony; and that (including those attending Sunday schools only, and those attending both day and Sunday schools) 17,775 were receiving Sunday school instruction. The numbers of those receiving education at home cannot of course be exhibited in these returns; but the existence, extent, and value of home education in New Zealand should never be lost sight of, or treated as unimportant, in any comprehensive estimate of the means in operation for the intellectual and moral training of the youth of the Colony.

NEW ZEALAND.

"Census Acts Amendment Act, 1867."

Most of the information in the remaining tables of this part was collected under the provisions of an Act of the General Assembly passed shortly before the census was taken. "The Census Acts Amendment Act, 1867" (besides providing that, in addition to the general triennial census, there shall in future be an annual account taken of the land in cultivation, and of the agricultural produce thereof), substituted for certain requirements of "The Census Act, 1858," a greatly extended schedule of subjects connected with agricultural and industrial statistics on which information was to be obtained. Notwithstanding the shortness of the interval between the passing of this Act and the time at which it was necessary that new forms of schedule should be prepared, printed, and sent out (with corresponding instructions), to the enumerators in the provinces, the objects of the Act were attained with a degree of success which (considering that many of the inquiries were then made for the first time) may, I think, be regarded as satisfactory and encouraging. The series of tables commencing with No. XXI. will be found to contain more or less complete information on nearly the whole of the subjects specified in its schedule.*

Land and Crops.

Tables XXI.–XXIII.

Table XXI. shows, in a summary form, for each province, and Table XXII. shows for each electoral district the extent of holding, distinguishing freehold and leasehold, the number of acres fenced, the number of acres broken up but not under crop, and the number of acres under each of the principal crops. Table XXIII. gives a comparative view for the years 1858, 1861, 1864, and 1867, of the quantity of land fenced and the numbers of acres under the respective crops, (excepting of course those which, having been newly introduced in the inquiries at the last census, could not be brought into a comparative table).

Extent of holdings.

The extent of holdings in the Colony was returned as 18,762,057 acres, viz., 5,068,440 acres freehold, and 13,693,617 acres leasehold.

The total number of acres fenced was 3,455,588, against 1,072,383 acres in 1864. No doubt this remarkable increase was, in a considerable degree, owing to the large extent of wire fencing erected in the pastoral districts, especially in Canterbury, where the number of acres in 1867 was returned as 1,013,576 acres in 1867, against 342,415 in 1864.

Land broken up, but not under crop.

The quantity of land broken up but not under crop was in December, 1867, 94,311 acres.

Land under crop.

The total quantity of land under crop was, in 1867, 676,909 acres, against 382,655 acres in 1864. Included in this total were,—47,786 acres of wheat, against 25,607 acres in 1864; 101,563 acres of oats, against 50,998 acres in 1864; 13,136 acres of barley, against 4,904 acres in 1864; 14,372 acres of potatoes, against 11,164 acres in 1864; 472,893 acres of sown grasses, against 272,123 acres in 1864. Details of the other crops (reducing the quantity given under the generalized heading of "in other crops" to 1,743 acres) will be found in the Table (No. XXI.).

* The only exceptions are the "Extent and Description of Fencing," (as distinguished from the "Extent of Land Fenced," which is fully given), and "Forest Trees (Plantations of)." The inquiries respecting these were duly made in the census schedules, but the returns were so defective in some instances (being, indeed, as to the former wholly blank for two of the provinces), or when given so qualified by doubts as to their correctness, or so manifestly incorrect, that it would not be possible to compile from them tables which would be of any real value.

Live Stock.

The aggregate number of live stock of all kinds (excepting poultry) was, in 1867, 8,924,520, against 5,310,062 in 1864. Tables XXIV.–XXVI.

Taking the principal kinds of live stock separately, the numbers were,—Horses, 65,715, against 49,409 in 1864; cattle, 312,835, against 249,760 in 1864; sheep, 8,418,579, against 4,937,273 in 1864. Amongst the additions introduced under the new Act are columns distinguishing the numbers of brood mares, breeding cows, and breeding ewes, which will be found in the Table (No. XXIV.).

The details of the information relating to live stock are in Table XXIV. for the provinces, and in Table XXV. for the electoral districts. No. XXVI. is a comparative table, showing the numbers in the years 1858, 1861, 1864, and 1867, respectively.

Table XXIV. contains also information relating to the annual production of butter and of cheese, and to the numbers and descriptions of agricultural machines in the Colony. According to the returns, the production of butter in 1867 amounted to 3,834,252 lbs., and of cheese to 1,300,082 lbs. There were 579 thrashing machines, viz., 92 steam, 17 water, and 470 horse; 736 reaping machines, 12 steam ploughs, and 28 steam harrows. Butter and cheese. Agricultural machines.

With respect to the tables which follow the above, viz., mills for grinding and dressing corn (No. XXVII.), breweries (No. XXVIII.), and other manufactories or works (Nos. XXIX., XXX.), every effort has been made to secure all attainable information. The results arrived at are given in the tables, but I have deemed it necessary to append to them notes indicating that they are to be regarded as defective,—probably, or certainly, understating the truth in several instances, through the failure of proprietors to supply the desired particulars, if not (as I cannot but apprehend may in some instances have been the fact) through want of sufficiently careful and thoughtful inquiry on the part of the persons intrusted locally with the charge of collecting the information. With regard to these special branches of inquiry, however, difficulty in obtaining full and accurate information is experienced in other countries as well as in New Zealand, as an illustration of which I may mention that I found notes appended to similar tables in the statistics of Victoria applying so exactly to the state of the case here that I thought I could not do better than to adopt them almost verbatim for my notes. At the same time, it is evident that the figures given have a definite value as showing the existence of at least the amount of industry and production indicated by them; the uncertainty being as to how much more there may be in the Colony than they show. Mills, breweries, manufactories, &c.

Tables are added relating to societies formed under Building and Land Societies Acts in the Colony (No. XXXI.), and to hospital accommodation and relief (No. XXXII.). An attempt was made to obtain information relating to some additional subjects on which the schedules to "The Census Act, 1858," authorize inquiry to be made, and which are not specified in the schedule to the Act of 1867. But I have to repeat what I stated on former occasions, viz., that, "while from some places the returns appeared "to be comparatively full and reliable, from others they were not such as to render "it practicable to classify and arrange the whole in any adequately comprehensive "and accurate shape, although no small amount of labour has been bestowed upon "them in this office. I would, however, repeat the expression of my hope that the "information will ultimately be found of value, not only in itself, but as a guide to "further inquiries which may issue in more satisfactory results." The Colony is still comparatively young; and as it advances to greater maturity in other respects, it may, I trust, be expected that the facilities for collecting and classifying statistics on subjects beyond those which (as relating immediately to its material progress) obtain primary attention, will manifest a corresponding advance, until they comprehend, in their degree, all that is now accomplished in older countries. Land and building societies. Hospitals.

The Appendix to Part I. contains (Appendix A.) descriptions of the territory comprised in the respective electoral districts named in the preceding Census Tables; and (Appendix B. and Appendix C.) tables showing approximately the aboriginal native population of the Colony. The former of these having been particularly referred to in this report, it is not necessary to remark further upon them in this place. Appendix.

Part II.—General Statistics.

New Zealand.

Population, &c. Table I.

The first table in this part is a summary of the population of the Colony, with the "condition" (married or unmarried) of the people, and the numbers and descriptions of houses inhabited by them. The information has, of course, been compiled from the census returns, and is to be found in detail in Part I. of this volume; but I have thought it expedient to give in this place a compendious view of this portion of the census results as an appropriate introduction to the tables which follow, and as filling the position in the series which, in the years when a census has not been taken, is occupied by the table showing an estimate of the population.

Immigration and Emigration.

Table II.

The immigration (over seas) to New Zealand in the year 1867 amounted to 11,126 persons, of whom 7,581 were males and 3,545 females. Of the males 6,757 were adults and 824 children; of the females 2,869 were adults and 676 children.

The emigration (over seas) from the Colony amounted to 6,267 persons, of whom 5,075 were males and 1,192 females. Of the males 4,680 were adults and 395 children; of the females 896 were adults and 296 children.

The net excess of immigration over emigration for the whole Colony in 1867 was 4,859, being 2,740 less than the net excess in 1866.

Taking the provinces separately, there was, in 1867, in Auckland a net excess of emigration over immigration amounting to 300. In all the other provinces the immigration exceeded the emigration; viz., in Taranaki, 10; in Wellington, 449; in Hawke's Bay, 170; in Nelson, 387; in Marlborough, 33; in Canterbury, 2,325; in Otago, 1,772; and in Southland, 13.

The following figures show the immigration and emigration in 1867, classified according to the countries from which the immigrants arrived, and to which the emigrants went:—

Immigration.				Emigration.
Countries.	M.	F.	Total.	Countries.	M.	F.	Total.
United Kingdom -	2,372	2,088	4,460	United Kingdom -	417	221	638
Australian Colonies -	4,929	1,343	6,272	Australian Colonies -	4,214	812	5,026
Other British Ports -	7	5	12	Other British Ports -	10	2	12
Foreign States - -	273	109	382	Foreign States - -	434	157	591

The excess of immigration over emigration, viewed in relation to countries, is thus shown to have been, United Kingdom, 3,822, and Australian Colonies, 1,246. The immigration and emigration from and to other British ports happened to be exactly the same number, viz., 12. But, as respects Foreign States, the emigration was 209 in excess of the immigration.

The table which, in previous years, professed to show the arrivals and departures between the several ports of the Colony, has been omitted in this volume. I have repeatedly, even when introducing it, deemed it necessary to point out its incompleteness, and almost inevitable inaccuracy; and in the report prefixed to the statistics for 1866 I remarked, "I do not think that the value of the statistical volume would be really diminished by the omission of this table in future years, especially as, even if it were perfectly accurate in itself, it could not afford any adequate view of the actual migration from one part of New Zealand to another, no considerable portion of which is by overland routes." In the present volume I have substituted for it a comparative table showing, with the closest attainable approximation to correctness, the immigration and emigration (over seas) to and from New Zealand during the respective years 1853 to 1867 inclusive.

Table III.

Births, Deaths, and Marriages.

Tables IV., V., Births.

The total number of births registered in New Zealand during the year was 8,918, viz., 4,595 males and 4,323 females. The total in 1866 was 8,466, viz., 4,284 males and 4,182 females. The increase in 1867 was therefore 452, viz., 311 males and 141 females. The increase in 1866, as compared with 1865, was 976, viz., 437 males and 539 females.

The total number of deaths registered in 1867 was 2,702, viz., 1,621 males and 1,081 females. The total in 1866 was 2,540, viz., 1,567 males and 973 females. The increase in 1867 was therefore 162, viz., 54 males and 108 females. In 1865 the number was 2,757, viz., 1,658 males and 1,099 females.

Deaths.

Of the deaths in 1867, 873 (viz., 471 males and 402 females) were under one year of age; 244 (viz., 123 males and 121 females), one and under two years; and 198 (viz., 106 males and 92 females), two and under five years; making a total of 1,315 (viz., 700 males and 615 females), or 48·66 per cent. of the whole under five years.

The general total of deaths includes 125 (viz., 118 males and 7 females), or 4·62 per cent. of the whole, from drowning; and 153 (viz., 137 males and 16 females), or 5·66 per cent. of the whole, from other external causes; making a total of 278 from such causes, being 10·28 per cent. of the deaths during the year.

The proportions of births and deaths to every thousand persons living in each of the last seven years are shown approximately in the following table:—

Year.	Estimated Population at Middle of Year.	Births.		Deaths.
		Number Registered in Year.	Ratio per 1,000 living.	Number Registered in Year.	Ratio per 1,000 living.
1861 -	89,323	3,441	38·52	1,109	12·41
1862 - -	112,416	4,064	36·15	1,231	10·95
1863 -	144,930	5,115	35·29	1,983	13·68
1864 - -	168,833	6,501	38·50	2,921	17·30
1865 -	182,113	7,490	41·12	2,757	15·13
1866 - -	197,360	8,466	42·89	2,540	12·86
1867 -	211,391	8,918	42·18	2,702	12·78

These figures show for 1867 one birth to every 23, and one death to every 78 persons living. The average for the seven years is one birth to every 25, and one death to every 74 persons.

The excess of births over deaths in 1867 was 6,216 (viz., 2,974 males and 3,242 females). The total excess of registered births over registered deaths in the 13 years included in these tables was 38,281 (viz., 17,922 males and 20,359 females).

Marriages. Tables VI., VII.

The total number of marriages solemnized in New Zealand in 1867 was 2,050, being 12 more than in 1866. Of these 1,886 were by ministers of religion and 164 by registrars. The respective numbers solemnized by ministers of the several religious bodies were as follow:—United Church of England and Ireland, 514; Church of Scotland, Free Church of Scotland, and Presbyterian Congregations, 708; Roman Catholic Church, 328; Wesleyan Methodists, 194; Congregational Independents, 57; Baptists, 52; Primitive Methodists, 20; Lutheran Church, 2; Hebrew Congregations, 4; and United Methodist Free Churches, 10.

The tables show the numbers of marriages in the respective provinces in each year since "The Marriage Act, 1854," came into operation; and the numbers solemnized by officiating ministers and by registrars in each year within that period.

Trade and Interchange.

Shipping. Tables VIII., IX.

Six tables are occupied by information relating to shipping.

The first two show the numbers, tonnage, and crews of vessels entered inwards and cleared outwards at the several ports of New Zealand during the year 1867. The total inwards was 944 vessels of 309,568 tonnage, being a decrease, as compared with 1866, of 75 in the number of vessels, and of 20,735 in the tonnage. The total outwards was 950 vessels of 308,169 tonnage, being as compared with 1866, a decrease of 36 in the number of vessels, but an increase of 1,190 in the tonnage.

Tables X., XI.

The next two tables show vessels, tonnage, and crews classified according to "countries whence arrived," and "countries for which cleared." Of the total of 944 vessels inwards, 88, of 63,644 tonnage, arrived from the United Kingdom; 783, of 217,186 tonnage, from the Australian Colonies and other British Possessions; and 73, of 28,738 tonnage, from Foreign Countries (including the Southern Whale Fishery). Of the total of 950 vessels outwards, 47, of 33,914 tonnage, cleared for the United Kingdom; 742, of 213,553 tonnage, for the Australian Colonies and other British Possessions; and 161, of 60,702 tonnage, for Foreign Countries (including the Southern Whale Fishery).

Tables XII., XIII.

The two following tables show the "nationality" of the vessels, inwards and outwards. Of the total 944 inwards, 283, of 153,967 tonnage, were British; 632, of 142,880

NEW ZEALAND.

tonnage, Colonial; 22, of 9,988 tonnage, American; 1, of 495 tonnage, French; 1, of 160 tonnage, Danish; 1, of 432 tonnage, German; 2, of 1,356 tonnage, Russian; and 2, of 290 tonnage, Tahitian....Of the total 950 outwards, 235, of 145,555 tonnage, were British; 684, of 149,417 tonnage, were Colonial; 23, of 9,951 tonnage, American; 1, of 702 tonnage, French; 2, of 638 tonnage, German; 1, of 160 tonnage, Danish; 2, of 1,356 tonnage, Russian; and 2, of 390 tonnage, Tahitian.

Table XXX.

The number of registered vessels belonging to ports in the Colony may be conveniently noticed here, although the table relating to them is placed in a subsequent part of the volume. The total number in December 1867 was 366, of 23,240 tonnage. Of these 173, of 9,306 tonnage, belonged to the port of Auckland, showing an apparent decrease of 135 vessels, of 3,999 tonnage, as compared with 1866. But (as is explained in a note to the table) this decrease on the year is only apparent, it having been ascertained that a large number of vessels previously counted were no longer in existence, and that, in fact, they had been incorrectly retained on the books long after they should have been omitted, because the owners (mostly aboriginal natives) had not understood the necessity for delivering up the certificates of registry.

Imports and exports. Tables XIV.–XXIX.

The total value of the imports of the Colony in 1867 was 5,344,607*l.* against 5,894,863*l.* in 1866, being a decrease of 550,256*l.*, or 9·33 per cent.

The following figures show the increase or decrease in each of the provinces in 1867, as compared with 1866:—

Imports. Total value in 1867 as compared with 1866.

Auckland	decrease	301,693, or 27·42	per cent.
Taranaki	decrease	32,458, or 50·47	„
Wellington	decrease	195,184, or 25·80	„
Hawke's Bay	decrease	4,799, or 5·81	„
Nelson	increase	10,976, or 2·49	„
Marlborough	increase	3,244, or 24·49	„
Canterbury	decrease	3,604, or 0·22	„
Otago	decrease	29,582, or 1·81	„
Southland	increase	2,807, or 1·50	„

A comparison of the value of imports in 1866 and 1867 according to the countries whence they were received gives the following results:—

	1866. £	1867. £		£
United Kingdom	2,737,702	2,779,463	Increase	41,761
British Colonies	2,894,159	2,332,744	Decrease	561,415
Foreign States	263,002	232,400	Decrease	30,602
Totals	5,894,863	5,344,607	Net decrease	550,256

Exports. Total value in 1867 as compared with 1866.

The total value of the exports from New Zealand in 1867 was 4,644,678*l.* against 4,520,074*l.* in 1866, being an increase in 1867 of 124,604*l.*, or 2·75 per cent. Excluding the value of imported goods re-exported from the Colony, the total value of exports of New Zealand produce and manufactures amounted in 1867 to 4,479,464*l.* against 4,396,100 in 1866, being an increase of 83,364*l.*, or 1·89 per cent.

More particular reference may be made to the two great exports of the Colony,—gold and wool.

Gold.

The total value of gold exported from the Colony in 1867 amounted to 2,700,275*l.* against 2,844,517*l.* in 1866, being a decrease of 144,242*l.*, or 5·07 per cent. Of the total value of gold exported in 1867, the following were the amounts of the produce of the gold fields in the several provinces:—Auckland, 20,700*l.*; Nelson (including Westland North). 894,728*l.*; Marlborough, 1,978*l.*; Canterbury (including Westland South), 1,159,326*l.*; Otago, 587,326*l.*; and Southland, 36,117*l.*

The total value of the gold which was exported from New Zealand up to the 31st of December 1867 amounted to 14,540,573*l.*

Wool.

The total value of wool exported from the Colony in 1867 was 1,580,608*l.* against 1,354,152*l.* in 1866, being an increase of 226,456*l.*, or 16·72 per cent.

Tables XIV.–XXIX.

The information relating to imports and exports which has thus been briefly summarised will be found at large in this volume (Part II.). Tables XIV. and XV. give the total value of imports and exports respectively for the several ports in New Zealand in 1867. Tables XVI. and XVII. show, in a condensed form, the total value of imports and exports for the Colony in each year from 1853 to 1867 inclusive, distinguishing the provinces and the respective amounts imported from or exported to the United Kingdom, British Colonies, and Foreign States. Tables XVIII. and XIX. show the imports and exports in detail at each port of the Colony in 1867. The ten following tables contain summaries presenting compendiously the totals of various articles of export in 1867, compared with previous years. Separate tables of this description are appropriated to gold, grain, kauri gum, oil, potatoes, timber, wool, and hides and sheepskins.

Revenue of the Colony.

The customs revenue in 1867 amounted to 843,804*l.* against 844,267*l.* in 1866, being a decrease of 463*l.*, or 0·05 per cent. Tables XXXI.–XXXVII.

The following figures show the comparative amounts realized by this branch of the revenue during the eight years, 1860 to 1867 inclusive:—

1860 - -	189,168	being an increase of	20,852,	or 12·38 per cent.

1867 - -	843,804	being a decrease of	463,	or 0·05 „

The total ordinary revenue in 1867 amounted to 1,225,584*l.* against 1,086,293*l.* in 1866, being an increase of 139,291*l.*, or 12·82 per cent.

The total territorial revenue in 1867 amounted to 561,730*l.*, against 776,429*l.* in 1866, being a decrease of 214,699*l.* of 27·65 per cent.

[It is to be understood that the total given as territorial revenue in 1867 includes 83,318*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.* duty on gold exported, and 53,487*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* for miners rights and gold field fees. The subjoined tabular view shows the component parts of the general total for each province and for the Colony:—

The general total of the revenue (both ordinary and territorial) amounted in 1867 to 1,787,314*l.* against 1,862,722*l.* in 1866, being a decrease of 75,408*l.* or 4·04 per cent. General total of revenue.

Income and expenditure. Tables XXXII., XXXIII., XXXIV.

Table XXXV.

The income and expenditure of the Colony and of the provinces are shown in three tables. The first of these (No. XXXII.) exhibits, on opposite pages, income and expenditure in their various branches as relating to the colonial treasury and the provincial treasuries taken collectively. The two succeeding tables show the income and expenditure of the several provinces taken separately. A table follows which shows in detail the receipts and disbursements of the receivers of land revenue in the several provinces.

Debt of the General and Provincial Governments.

Tables XXXVI. and XXXVIA.

Two tables of two sheets each (instead of one table as in previous years) are given to the debt of the general and provincial governments, authorized by Acts or Ordinances, up to the 31st of December 1867; to which date, it is to be borne in mind, the information strictly applies. The first (No. XXXVI.) exhibits the following particulars: the total amount authorized to be borrowed, specifying by what government and under what authority; the total amount raised on the 31st of December 1867, specifying the amount of debentures in circulation, the rate of interest, and when the respective debentures are redeemable; also the rate of sinking fund, the amount of sinking fund accrued, and the manner in which it has been invested. Table XXXVI A. (a new table) gives further information. No. XXXVI. showed the debt of the Colony owing by the general and provincial governments respectively, as the loans were authorized by each, but subsequent legislation, and the creation of new provinces, have distributed the liability in other proportions. No. XXXVI A. shows the actual liability of each government as it really existed on the 31st of December 1867, the authority for the adjustment being in each case quoted. A second series of columns in the table shows the amount of debentures that then remained to be issued under existing authorities. Explanatory remarks, when necessary, are added to each of the tables. To these, and to the notes to the respective tables, it will be necessary to refer for a view of this subject which it would not be possible to give clearly except in connexion with the figures as they are shown at length in the tables.

It will be seen that, according to No. XXXVI., the actual authorized liability of the Colony was 6,778,600*l.*; and, according to No. XXXVI A., 6,812,600*l.* The assistant treasurer has furnished the following memorandum in explanation of this apparent discrepancy :—

"An apparent discrepancy will be observed between the tables marked 36 and 36 a as to the total liabilities of the Colony. The explanation is, that while under existing powers the liability might be increased to 6,812,600 (Table XXXVI A.), it will be found ultimately that the actual liability will not exceed 6,778,600*l.* (Table XXXVI.), and probably will not reach quite to that amount."

The total amount of debentures in circulation on the 31st of December 1867 was 5,781,193*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.*, and the total amount of sinking fund accrued was 298,991*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*

Joint Stock Companies.

Table XXXVIII.

The total number of joint stock companies incorporated under the Acts of 1860 and 1862 up to the end of 1867 was 91. Of these, 1 was incorporated in 1861, 13 in 1862, 19 in 1863, 12 in 1864, 15 in 1865, 18 in 1866, and 13 in 1867. Of the companies established in 1867, two were in the province of Auckland, seven in the province of Canterbury, and four in the province of Otago. The table referred to in the margin shows various particulars relating to the several companies from the commencement of the operation of the Act of 1860. NEW ZEALAND.

Waste Lands—Sales, &c.

The information under this heading is differently arranged from the mode adopted in previous years, and extended to the Crown lands held under leases. Table XXXIX. shows the numbers of acres of waste lands sold in the several provinces in 1867, with the rate per acre, and other particulars. Table XL. shows the numbers of acres absolutely disposed of without sale—to immigrants; to naval and military settlers under New Zealand Settlements Acts, &c.; reserves granted for public purposes under "Public Reserves Act, 1854;" to Europeans and natives under "Waste Lands Act, 1858," "Crown Grants Act (No. 2), 1862," Native Reserves Acts, &c.; to natives by grants under "Native Lands Act, 1865," &c.; and in satisfaction of land, scrip, or otherwise not specified. Table XLI. (now introduced into the series for the first time) shows the Crown lands held under depasturing and other leases (except for gold mining), and the rents, &c., paid, for the year 1867 in the several provinces. Tables XXXIX., XL., and XLI.

Prices of Provisions and Live Stock.

A table, prepared on the same plan as in previous years, shows the average prices of provisions and live stock in each of the provinces in the year 1867. Table XLII.

Post Office.

The total numbers of letters received at the several post offices in New Zealand in 1867 were—foreign (from places without the Colony), 559,389, against 584,461 in 1866; and inland (within the Colony), 1,848,942, against 1,820,327 in 1866, making a general total of 2,408,331, against 2,404,788 in 1866, being an increase of 3,543. . . The total numbers of letters despatched were—foreign, 538,565, against 581,726 in 1866; and inland 1,864,344, against 1,772,130 in 1866, making a general total of 2,402,909, against 2,353,856 in 1866, being an increase of 49,053. Letters received and despatched. Tables XLIII., XLIV.

The total numbers of newspapers received in 1867 were—foreign, 973,885 against 1,166,351 in 1866; and inland, 696,635, against 793,177 in 1866, making a general total of 1,670,520 against 1,959,528 in 1866, being a decrease of 289,008. The total numbers of newspapers despatched in 1866 were—foreign 346,913, against 595,803 in 1866; and inland, 1,043,455, against 1,817,708 in 1866, making a general total of 1,390,368, against 2,413,511 in 1866, being a decrease of 23,143. Newspapers received and despatched. Tables XLV., XLVI.

A comparative table shows the postal revenue in detail, in the several provinces, for the respective years 1858 to 1867 inclusive. The total amount in 1867 was 55,331*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*, against 47,836*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* in 1866, being an increase of 7,495*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.*, or 15·66 per cent. This does not include the sums received as commission on the issue of money orders (1,846*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*), or for telegraphic messages (11,146*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*) Postal revenue. Tables XLVII.

The total number of money orders issued in New Zealand in 1867 was 24,473 against 22,710 in 1866, being an increase of 1,763. The total amount of these orders in 1867 was 115,610*l.* 13*s.* 0*d.*, against 108,779*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, being an increase of 6,831*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.* . . The total number of money orders paid in New Zealand in 1867 was 12,659, against 10,903 in 1866, being an increase of 1,756. The total amount of these orders in 1867 was 61,151*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*, against 52,549*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* in 1866, being an increase of 8,603*l.* 17*s.* Money Orders. Table XLVIII.

Savings Banks.

The information relating to savings banks now occupies two tables; a new and separate table being required for the transactions of the recently established Post Office Savings Banks in the Colony. Tables XLIX., L.

These banks (the first of which were opened in February 1867) at the end of the year numbered altogether 46, distributed as follows in the provinces:—12 in the province of Auckland; 1 in Taranaki; 1 in Hawke's Bay; 2 in Wellington; 3 in Marlborough; 3 in Nelson; 8 in Canterbury; 13 in Otago; and 3 in Southland. The aggregate number of accounts opened during the year was 2,520; the deposits in connexion with which amounted to a total of 96,372*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* The amount withdrawn was 26,344*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.* The number of accounts closed was 364, for an amount of 8,183*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* (included in the sum given as the total of the amount withdrawn). At Post Office Savings Banks. Table XLIX.

NEW ZEALAND.

the end of the year, therefore, the remaining number of depositors was 2,156, and the balance due to those depositors was 70,027*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*

Previously existing Savings Banks. Table L.

The number of savings banks, other than those connected with the post office, was 10. The total number of persons having deposits in these banks on the 31st of December 1867 was 4,423 (of whom 32 were Maories). The total deposits during the year amounted to 71,378*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.*; and the total of the sums withdrawn to 80,784*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.* The total amount to the credit of depositors at the end of the year was 85,658*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.*

Taking both classes of savings banks together, the following results appear. On the 31st of December 1867 there were 6,579 depositors, and there was a total to the credit of such depositors amounting to 155,686*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.* On the 31st December 1866 (when the Post Office Savings Bank system had not yet come into operation, the total number of depositors in the then existing banks was 4,513, to whose credit was a total amount of 91,863*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* A comparison of the figures for the two dates is gratifying, as affording (to quote the words of the Postmaster-General in his last Report), "evidence not only of material prosperity on the part of an important portion of the community, but also of the growth of habits of prudence and thrift which it was the object of these savings banks to foster and encourage."

Legal and criminal statistics.

Table LI., LXIII.

Thirteen tables are occupied by the Legal and Criminal Statistics of the Colony for 1867. Three of these (Nos. LI., LII., and LIII.) relate to the Supreme Court, showing the criminal and the civil cases, and the petitions and deeds of composition filed under the debtors and creditors Acts (this last table comprising the periods from the 1st June 1863, when the Act of 1862 came into operation, to the 1st of December 1867, from which date those Acts were superseded by the provisions of "The Bankruptcy Act, 1867"). . . Two tables, Nos. LIV. and LV., show the criminal and the civil cases brought before the several district courts. . . Seven tables, Nos. LVI.—LXII., are occupied by the cases brought before resident magistrates and magistrates' courts, in which the cases in which Europeans, or Maories, or both were concerned are distinguished. A comparative summary (No. LVIII.) shows the numbers of convictions in the resident magistrates' courts for each of the offences of most frequent occurrence in each year from 1853 to 1867 inclusive. . . The last table in this series (No. LXIII.) shows the numbers of prisoners committed to gaol in 1867, specifying the sexes, the cause of imprisonment, the native countries, the classes (as to social position), and the degree of education of the prisoners. The total number committed was 4,152 (viz., 3,570 males, and 582 females), being 525 more than in 1866, when the total was 3,627 (viz., 3,162 males, and 465 females).

Public Schools.

Table LXIV.

According to the Returns (supplied by the several provincial governments) from which the table was compiled, there was in the Colony, in December 1867, a total of 268 public schools, viz., 21 boys', 14 girls', and 233 mixed), being 15 schools more than in December 1866. The total number of teachers was 347 (viz., 232 male, and 115 female teachers), being 24 more than in 1866. The total (highest) number of pupils on the books in the December quarter was 12,866 (viz., 7,378 boys, and 5,488 girls), being an increase of 416 children on the total in December 1866. The proportions of these totals belonging to the respective provinces will be found detailed in the table (No. LXIV.), which also shows, so far as the Returns have supplied the information, the average daily attendance, the ages of the pupils, and the branches of education taught.

Meteorology.

Appendix A. to K.

In an Appendix to Part II. of the volume will be fouud a series of Meteorological tables for 1867, which have been supplied by Dr. Hector, Inspector of Meteorological Stations. The series includes 11 tables, the first of which gives, in a comprehensive form, a comparative view of the climate, as observed during the year 1867, at the Meteorological Stations in New Zealand (excepting Napier, from which there were no Returns). The 10 tables which follow show the results of observations at Mongonui, Auckland, Taranaki, Wellington, Nelson, Christchurch, Hokitika, Bealey, Dunedin, and Southland.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor ROBINSON to his Grace the Duke of BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(No. 118.)

MY LORD DUKE, Government House, Falkland Islands, September 29, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to forward the Blue Book of the Falkland Islands for the year 1867.

2. The local revenue amounted to 1,611*l.*, and exceeded that of 1866 by 425*l.* The parliamentary grant in aid of the local revenue for the financial year 1867-68 was 5,836*l.*, that for 1868–69, 5,016*l.*

3. I may be permitted to observe that in the short space of three years the local revenue has been nearly doubled, and that, taking into account the estimates now in course of preparation, our demands on the Imperial parliament have been reduced by an amount (1,743*l.*) which represents rather more than one-fourth of the total expenditure.

4. The following extract from a despatch which I addressed to you on the 25th of May last on the subject of the West Falkland Land Regulations will not be out of place. "When submitting to your Grace, on the 8th of August last, the new regulations with regard to the disposal of Crown lands on the West Falkland, I ventured on the following remarks :—

"I have reason to believe that the regulations are greatly appreciated by intending settlers, and I entertain a strong confidence that they will tend to the speedy and profitable occupation of the West Falkland group.

"I have now the pleasure to forward a chart with schedule attached, showing that these favourable anticipations have been entirely realized. The boundaries of the different sheep stations, into which the island has been divided, are indicated in the chart, and your Grace will observe that the whole of the available land on the main island has already passed into the hands of private individuals. Twelve months ago there was not a settler on the island, now there is not one acre of land with the exception of the Government reserves unoccupied. Twelve months ago the island did not contribute in any manner to the revenue, now the land rents amount (or rather will amount next year, for as yet the land is held under occupation licence, for which only half rent is paid) to over 1,300*l.* per annum. Believing the West Falkland to be peculiarly adapted for sheep, I always felt that the relaxation, as regards that island, of certain conditions, which I could not but see had retarded the settlement of the east island (I refer to the conditions to which Mr. Waldron objected when contemplating a settlement on the West Falkland, and which were detailed in my despatch No. 7 of 28th August 1866) was very desirable; but I freely confess that the actual result has far exceeded my most sanguine expectations."

I ought to add that since the above was written the large islands of Weddell and Saunders have been taken up, and that the only land now available is on the East Falkland, on which island some 150,000 acres (somewhat swampy and inferior) are still unoccupied.

matters, that imported sheep, especially those placed on the West Falkland, improve with remarkable rapidity. For example, out of one cargo landed on that island in the early part of last year from the warmer climate of the river Plate, about two per cent. died from the effects of the severe, but apparently necessary dipping process; the remainder in the course of a few weeks were in excellent condition, and have continued so ever since. These sheep when landed were poor and covered with scab. It is evident the food must be suitable and of good quality, or sheep brought suddenly from a hot to a cold climate, and so roughly acclimatized, if I may so term it, would not live at all. Of course sheep imported from England would fare better in point of climate than those brought from the River Plate. They would also be freer from scab. But the expense of this would be far greater, regard being had to the original cost of the sheep and the great distance of the Colony from England. The River Plate sheep, on the other hand, can be landed in the Falklands at a cost of from twenty to twenty-eight shillings per head.

6. In illustration of the value of this harbour as a port of refuge, I may mention that at one time in the month of August, after a continuance of bad weather, there were no less than eight vessels in port, with an aggregate tonnage of 3,798 tons, which had been more or less disabled in endeavouring to round the Horn, and which in all probability must have been lost (some at all events) but for the rest, refreshment, and facilities for effecting repairs afforded by this place; the inhospitable shores of Fuegia and Patagonia containing no suitable port of refuge, and the crews of the vessels being in more cases than one so worn out by cold, fatigue, and scurvy as to be incapable of working their crippled ships to Monte Video or Valparaiso in safety.

7. In other respects the condition of the Colony is much as it was at the date of my last annual Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WILLIAM ROBINSON,
Governor.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,

P.S. I am told at the last moment that owing to a pressure of business in the office the fair copy of the Blue Book cannot be completed in time for transmission by this mail. I am unwilling to delay this Report any longer, and will forward the Blue Book itself by the first opportunity.

No. 1.

No. 1.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-General HODGSON to his Grace the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(No. 110.)

The Queen's House, Colombo,
November 14, 1868.

MY LORD DUKE,

IN forwarding the Blue Book of Ceylon for the year 1867, I have the honour to submit the following report upon its contents. I shall confine my remarks to the several subjects treated of in similar despatches of previous years, so as to make the present a continuation of the reports which accompanied the Blue Books of former years.

Revenue and Expenditure.

2. The revenue of last year amounted to 969,936*l.* 9*s.* 9¼*d.*, being in excess of that of 1866 (962,873*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*) by 7,062*l.* 15*s.* 10¼*d.* The following are the principal items of increase:—Imports, 9,627*l.*; exports, 2,657*l.*, attributable chiefly to the general increase in the trade of the Colony, but particularly to larger importations of grain in 1867 than in the preceding year. Stamps, 2,350*l.* Sale of Government property, 20,336*l.*; in this amount is included a sum of 12,334*l.*, the value of stores and provisions transferred to the Military Department. Reimbursements, 10,960*l.*, being the amount recovered from the municipalities of the expenses incurred by Government on account of the police establishments within the municipal towns, as also of expenses incurred in connexion with roads in the town of Kandy. Interest on public funds, 17,591*l.*, being the interest on the amount invested in Indian Government Securities.

3. The returns show, on the other hand, a decrease under some other heads, of which the following are the principal:—Land sales, 20,220*l.*, owing to the scarcity of money and the consequent reduced demand for land. Under the head of land revenue there was a decrease of 6,300*l.* in the item of paddy tax in the southern province, caused chiefly by injury to the crops from inundations; but there was a large general increase of revenue in the other provinces, owing to increased cultivation and plentiful harvests, and the net decrease under this head was 674*l.* The decrease on tolls under the head rents, exclusive of lands, amounting to 14,008*l.*, is the result of the opening of the railway which has absorbed a large portion of the traffic formerly carried on on the Kandy Road. To the same cause may be attributed the decrease of 13,846*l.* under the head of licences, arrack, rum, and toddy; the diminution in the cart traffic, and in the number of foot passengers consequent on the completion of the railway having necessarily affected the sale of arrack, and caused a want of competition for some of the principal arrack rents.

4. The total ordinary expenditure of the year amounted to 927,932*l.* 3*s.* 1½*d.* The excess of revenue over expenditure was therefore 42,004*l.* 6*s.* 7¾*d.* In addition to the above sum of 927,932*l.* there was a further expenditure on account of roads, streets, and bridges, and works, and buildings of 28,847*l.* charged against the balances of former years, and of 67,545*l.* under the Surplus Funds Ordinance.

5. As compared with the expenditure of the preceding year, that of 1867 shows an increase of 10,262*l.* Under the head of establishments there is an increase of 22,219*l.* caused chiefly by additions to the establishments of the Director of Public Works and the Surveyor-General, the Medical Department, the Police, and the establishments of the Fiscals in the several provinces. Under the head of pensions and retired allowances, the decrease of 2,564*l.* is owing to the transfer of the payment of the military pensions to the Imperial Government from the 1st July 1867. Under the head of police and gaols there is an increase of 3,452*l.*, owing to the heavy expenditure incurred by the Indian Government on account of convicts at Malacca, and also on account of the transport of criminal prisoners to the Straits. Under the head of works and buildings there is an increase of 2,640*l.*; whilst on roads, streets, and bridges there is a decrease of 30,020*l.* owing partly to the transfer to the Municipalities of Colombo, Kandy, and Galle of the expenditure for the upkeep of roads within the gravets of those towns, and partly to the reduced votes granted in 1867 for roads, a decrease which is however more than counterbalanced by the expenditure incurred in the year on this account from balances and surplus funds. The increase of 29,972*l.* under the head miscellaneous is chiefly attributable to heavy payments made on account of the survey of temple lands. There is an increase of 30,000*l.* under the head of contributions towards military expenditure; and a decrease of 2,870*l.* under the head of colonial pay and allowances, owing to the transfer to the Imperial Government from the 1st July 1867 of the payment of the allowances to military and staff officers. The decrease of 11,805*l.* under the head of Government vessels is explained by the fact that in consequence of the sale of the steamer "Pearl" in 1866, no expenditure was incurred last year on this account.

Assets and Liabilities.

6. From the return furnished by the Auditor-General of assets and liabilities, it will be seen that the total amount of assets at the commencement of the current year 1868 was 583,851*l.*, and that the liabilities amounted to 462,220*l.*, showing an apparent balance in favour of the Government of 121,630*l.* Amongst the assets are included a sum of 113,419*l.* on account of revenue debts outstanding, a portion of which only may be considered to be recoverable, and a sum of 6,179*l.* on account of surcharges, as also a sum of 571*l.* on account of advances. If the aggregate of these, amounting to 120,170*l.* be deducted from the assets, the net available balance will be 1,460*l.*, which corresponds with the amount given in the statement forwarded with Sir Hercules Robinson's Despatch, No. 121, of the 7th June last; and to that Despatch I beg to refer your Grace for an explanation of the large reduction in the apparent amount of the available balances, as compared with the amounts given in former statements.

7. Appended to the auditor's statement is a memorandum of railway liabilities, amounting to 1,307,595*l.*, on account of debentures sold in England for railway purposes and interest due thereon. As provision has been made to meet these charges from special funds, they are not included in the ordinary statement of liabilities.

Military Expenditure.

8. The total expenditure incurred by the Colony in 1867 on account of its military defence was 150,115*l.*, in which is included the colonial contribution of 130,000*l.* It includes also, besides the pay of the Governor's aide-de-camp and mounted orderlies, certain other charges, such as pay and allowances of colonial establishments, pensions to native troops, loss on rations and commissariat charges, which the Colony had to defray until the 30th June 1867, when the arrangements for the entire transfer of its military expenditure to the Imperial Government were completed.

9. As it is not competent for this Government, under the instructions contained in your Grace's Despatch No. 207, of the 26th November 1867, to apply for detailed accounts of the expenditure incurred by the War Department in connexion with the military service of Ceylon, it has not been practicable to furnish all the information required under the head of military expenditure, and some of the returns in the Blue Book are therefore left blank.

Imports and Exports.

10. The value of goods imported in 1867 was 3,612,298*l.*, showing an increase of 95,114*l.* as compared with that of 1866, which amounted to 3,517,184*l.* There was also an increase of 268,757*l.* in the exports, the value for the two years having been, 1866, 3,070,247*l.*, 1867, 3,339,004*l.*

11. These figures do not include the specie imported and exported, which was considerably less in 1867 than in the preceding year. The results, therefore, are different when these are added, and the total value of the imports and exports of 1867 then stands thus as compared with those of 1866:—

Imports.

1866	£4,961,061
1867	4,504,338
Decrease in 1867	£456,723

Exports.

1866	£3,586,453
1867	3,530,224
Decrease in 1867	£56,229

12. The total value of goods, exclusive of specie, imported and retained in the Colony during 1867 amounted to 3,162,604*l.*

Imports, exclusive of specie - -	£3,612,298
Deduct imports exported - - -	449,694

Specie imported - - -	£892,040
Do. exported - - -	191,219
	£700,821

14. The total value, therefore, of goods and specie imported and retained in the Island during 1867 amounted to 3,863,425*l.*, as follows:—

Goods retained - - -	£3,162,604
Specie Do. - - - -	700,821
	£3,863,425

15. The total value of Ceylon produce exported in 1867 amounted to 2,889,310*l.*, viz.:—

Exports, exclusive of specie - -	£3,339,004
Deduct imports exported - - -	449,694
	£2,889,310

16. The revenue derived from imports and exports in 1867 was 286,125*l.*, showing an increase of 11,905*l.* as compared with that of the preceding year, which amounted to 274,220*l.*

17. I append to this Despatch a return of Exports of coffee, cinnamon, cocoanut oil, and coir for the the last ten years;

Return of the total value of Imports and Exports (including specie and bullion) in the years 1865, 1866 and 1867; and

A statement of the number and tonnage of Vessels entered and cleared in the same years.

Public Works.

18. In addition to the Return of Public Works included among the Blue Book Returns, I forward the following documents required by Her Majesty's Government:—

19. From the abstract attached to the Blue Book Returns furnished by the Director of Public Works, it will be seen that the total expenditure on public works during the past year amounted to 322,911*l.*, viz.:—

Government Houses at Colombo, Galle, and Kandy.

Not printed. Not printed.

22. From the enclosed report of the Director of Public Works, it will be seen that these buildings are in a state of good repair. I enclose also the report of the Colonial Storekeeper on the state of the public furniture of these houses. A board of survey having condemned the furniture in the Pavilion at Kandy as being generally old, worn out, and unserviceable, a list of new furniture to replace that condemned was forwarded by Sir Hercules Robinson with his despatch, No. 165, of the 28th June last, with a view to steps being taken to procure in England the new articles required.

Surveying Department.

23. Sir Hercules Robinson, in forwarding the report of the Surveyor General for the year 1866, remarked that the depressed state of the money market in Europe had a material effect on land sales, especially as respects the purchases made by Europeans. This remark is equally applicable to the land sales in 1867, the sum realized from which was considerably less than in 1866.

24. The number of lots alienated from the Crown during the year was 7,141, and the acreage 26,923 at an average rate per acre of 1*l.* 7*s.* 8½*d.*

25. The total sum realized by land sales amounted to 37,310*l.*, exclusive of fees, which amounted to 7,947*l.* The total sum in the previous year was 62,670*l.* by land sales, and 9,352*l.* from fees.

26. The following are the results of the sales of Crown lands in the different provinces, as compared with the sales in the preceding year:

	1866.			1867.
	Extent sold.	Amount realized.	Rate per Acre.	Extent sold.	Amount realized.	Rate per Acre.

	26,307	62,669		26,923	37,309

27. The Surveyor General reports that the survey of temple lands has progressed satisfactorily, and that it may be said to be now completed. The number of acres surveyed by the contractor during the year amounted to 223,997 acres, making the total extent surveyed by him from the commencement of his contract 368,650 acres. The sum paid to him during the year was 32,000*l.*

Electric Telegraph.

28. The Superintendent of Telegraphs in his Report on the working of the lines and offices during 1867 reports that the lines from Colombo to Galle were in the early part of the year in a very bad state, and that interruptions were of frequent occurrence. On the arrival of stores from England in July 1867, the construction of a new line was at once commenced, and the worst part, that from Berewela to Galle has been completed, and the remainder is in progress.

29. The line on the old Kandy Road has been dismantled, and an entirely new line has been constructed along the railway.

30. A new line has been constructed from Kandy to Nuwara Eliya, a distance of 47 miles.

31. An entirely new line has been constructed betwen Kandy and Dambulla in order to have direct communication with Trincomalee. The old line from Kandy to Mannar has been thoroughly repaired, and all decayed posts removed.

32. The amount expended on the construction of new lines and the re-construction of old lines was 4,598*l.*

33. The total receipts of the year, including those of the Indo-European and the Indian lines, amounted to 23,512*l.*, of which the sum of 7,767*l.* is due to this Government. This shows a decrease of 1,083*l.* as compared with the receipts of the preceding year, which amounted to 8,850*l.*

34. The ordinary expenditure for working the lines in Ceylon amounted to 8,678*l.*, showing a loss, as compared with the receipts, of 911*l.*

35. With your Grace's despatch, No. 236, of the 26th December 1867, you forwarded copy of a letter from the Director-General of Indian Telegraphs, proposing that Ceylon should reduce its charges on European messages, with a view to its admission as a party to the Paris Telegraph Convention, or that India should take over and work the Ceylon telegraphs, and take upon itself whatever profit or loss might be the result. The latter proposal was assented to by the Ceylon Government under certain conditions. Those conditions have been accepted by the Government of India; and by your Grace's despatch, No. 138, of the 13th June last, you authorized this Government to complete the arrangement, which will be carried out from the 1st January next, at which date the Director-General of Telegraphs in India hopes to be able to take over the Ceylon lines.

Railway.

36. I enclose reports from the Director-General of the Ceylon Railway and the Traffic Manager and Engineer for the half-years ending 30th June and 31st December 1867. Not printed.

37. The railway from Colombo to Kandy was completed in October 1867, and the line fully opened for traffic on the first day of that month, although passengers and a limited quantity of goods had been carried for some time previously.

38. The Director-General of the railway reports that the cost of the line, exclusive of interest on debentures, and after making a fair deduction for the exceptional expenses incidental to the formation and dissolution of the late Company, amounts to 1,436,127*l.*, or about 19,148*l.* per mile, a cost which (in view of the rugged character of the country, the excessive unhealthiness of a large portion of it, and the fact that the labour for constructing the line was almost entirely imported) Mr. Molesworth states may be considered extremely moderate.

39. The total length of the line is 75 miles.

40. The Director-General reports that the railway has been well and substantially constructed, that the way and works have been kept in efficient repair, and that the permanent way is in excellent order.

41. At the break of the monsoon in the latter part of October 1867, the traffic was interrupted for a short time by heavy landslips. The slips were, however, soon cleared, and the communication restored in a few days.

42. The working of the line has been satisfactory, and the traffic has been greater than was expected for the first year.

43. The number of passengers carried during the year was 156,167, and the tonnage of goods was 54,850.

CEYLON.

44. The receipts from passengers and goods traffic amounted to 81,560*l.*, and the working expenses to 47,933*l.*, showing a profit of 33,627*l.* in the transactions of the year.

Legislation.

45. Twenty Ordinances were passed in the session of 1867, from Nos. 6 to 21 of 1867, and Nos. 1 to 4 of 1868, the last four having been enacted at the commencement of the present year. Nos. 1 to 5 of 1867 were passed in the session of 1866, and were noticed in Sir Hercules Robinson's despatch, No. 210, of the 14th September 1867.

No. 6 of 1867 provides for the appointment of commissioners to prepare a new edition of the local enactments, omitting therefrom such as have expired, or have been disallowed or repealed. The measure was necessary, as these enactments were scattered over three or four quarto volumes, and it was not always easy to distinguish between those which were in force and those which had been repealed or had expired.

Ordinance No. 7.—"For the more effectual protection of Her Majesty's naval and "victualling stores in this Island" was prepared in accordance with the instructions of Her Majesty's Government. It embodies the provisions of the Imperial Act 27 & 28 Vict. c. 91, with such modifications as were necessary to meet the circumstances of the Colony.

The provisions of Ordinance No. 8 "for the better protection of Government "property entrusted to the charge of pioneers, and for the apprehension of pioneer "deserters," are identical with those of the Ordinance No. 23 of 1865, which was disallowed by Her Majesty's Government because it authorized the infliction of corporal punishment on pioneers deserting with Government property. But in consequence of certain representations made by the head of the Public Works Department, Her Majesty's Government afterwards authorized the re-enactment of the measure, with the provision to which objection was at first taken.

No. 9 amends the Joint Stock Companies Ordinance, 1861, with a view to removing all doubt as to the legality of operations being carried on in Ceylon by companies which are incorporated in England, not only by special Act, but under the general Joint Stock Companies Act.

No. 10 amends the Fiscal's Ordinance, 1867, in accordance with the instructions of Her Majesty's Government, so as to enable the fees to be paid by the suitors on account of process serving to be carried to the credit of the general revenue instead of being formed into a separate fund for the purpose of remunerating the officers in the Fiscal's Department.

Ordinance No. 11 of 1867 authorizes the expenditure of 25,000*l.* in addition to the 1,285,000*l.* already granted for railway construction purposes, in order to provide for certain engines and trucks required in consequence of traffic in excess of that originally contemplated.

Ordinance No. 12 "to provide for the military expenditure of the Colony" is in substitution of Ordinance No. 16 of 1864. It is based upon the recommendations contained in the Military Commission Report, and is in strict accordance with the instructions of Her Majesty's Government.

No. 13 provides for the supplementary contingent charges for the year 1867.

No. 14 consolidates and amends the law in respect to the collection of tolls. In its main features it is the same as Ordinance No. 22 of 1861, the difference being chiefly in the clause relating to exemptions from the payment of toll, which in this Ordinance are limited to the Governor and his suite, and to the military when travelling on duty, whilst in the former Ordinance many other officers were included in the list of exemptions. No. 4 of 1868 was passed in connexion with this Ordinance, and it authorizes the collection of tolls at certain places which were not included in the Toll Ordinance of 1867.

No. 15, amending the Ordinance No. 6 of 1866, was brought forward in order to meet certain difficulties pointed out by the Registrar-General in respect to making copies of deeds to be registered under the Ordinance of 1866; and it authorizes the Governor, by proclamation, to dispense with the taking of exact copies of deeds in any districts in which it may not be convenient to carry out the measure in the mode contemplated by the Ordinance of 1866, and provides for the registration of only the substance of the deeds.

No. 16 authorizes a change in the designation of certain public officers, their former designations having been found to be inconvenient, and not applicable to existing circumstances.

No. 17, for the better prevention of contagious diseases, was passed in accordance with the instructions of Her Majesty's Government, and will, it is hoped, prove to be an important sanitary measure.

No. 18 of 1867, relating to the registration of births and deaths, re-enacts the provisions of the Ordinance of 1862 on this subject, with a further provision for the registration of past births, in respect to which a difficulty was experienced on the measure being brought into operation in March 1867.

No. 19, to restrict the use of opium and bang, was rendered necessary in consequence of the increasing number of shops for the sale of these drugs, which were frequented by people of bad character, and which it was desirable to place under control. The Ordinance prohibits the possession by any person of opium beyond a limited quantity, and the sale of opium or bang without licence, except for medicinal purposes. The measure is only to be brought into operation in such places as the Governor shall from time to time appoint by Proclamation.

No. 20 legalizes certain marriages solemnised by an acting registrar, to whose appointment the sanction of the Governor was inadvertently not obtained at the time.

No. 21 is entitled "An Ordinance to promote the maintenance and extension of "paddy cultivation in this Island." The operation of the Irrigation Ordinance of 1856 and 1861 was limited respectively to five years, and in view of the expiration of the last-mentioned enactment at the end of 1867, it was necessary to bring forward a fresh Ordinance on the subject, re-enacting the provisions of the old Ordinance, with such amendments as the working of the measure had shown to be necessary or desirable. The Ordinance also contains certain new clauses to carry out the scheme adopted by the Legislative Council in respect to irrigation works.

No. 1 of 1868 provides for the contingent services of 1868.

No. 2 provides for the working expenses of the railway from the traffic receipts. It authorizes the expenditure incurred from the opening of the line in October 1865 to the 31st December 1867, and a further sum on account of the estimated expenditure for 1868.

No. 3 authorizes an alteration in one of the votes granted by the Ordinance No. 2 of 1867, providing for the appropriation of a portion of the surplus revenues of past years to works and services of acknowledged public utility.

Population.

46. The total population of all classes of inhabitants for 1867, including the military, is stated in the returns to be 2,054,861, showing an excess of 15,531 over the number given in the returns for 1860, viz., 2,039,330.

47. The following are stated to be the numbers of births, marriages, and deaths, viz.:—

Births - - - -	42,788
Marriages - - -	24,433
Deaths - - - -	44,224

48. These figures cannot be relied upon, but it is to be hoped that under the provisions of the Ordinance which has recently been passed by the Legislative Council (No. 5 of 1868 "for taking a census of this Island"), the Government will be enabled to obtain more accurate statistics of the population of the Island.

Public Health.

49. The principal civil medical officer, in his report for 1867, states that the prevailing diseases of the year have presented much the same type as those of former years, being chiefly fever, dysentery, and diarrhœa.

50. Cholera, which broke out in the northern province towards the close of 1866, assumed a very violent form in the early part of 1867, and spread very extensively, especially in the peninsula of Jaffna, causing great mortality amongst the population. A commission was appointed by Sir Hercules Robinson to inquire into the origin and progress of the disease, and their report was forwarded to your Grace with Sir H. Robinson's Despatch No. 243, of the 28th October 1867.

51. The number of cases of cholera in the northern province was 10,064, of which 6,862 proved fatal, showing a percentage of 67·83 to the number of attacks. The total number of cases in all the other provinces was only 63, with 42 deaths, or 66·6 per cent. Dr. Charsley states in his report, that the disease has now entirely disappeared from the Island.

CEYLON.

52. There were but few cases of smallpox in 1867; the total number in the whole Island being only 349, with 38 deaths; whilst in 1866 the number of cases was 1,035, and the number of deaths 101.

53. The returns of vaccination show that 65,015 individuals were vaccinated during 1867, against 65,496 in 1866. The successful cases are, however, reported to be 49,065 in 1867 against 47,686 in 1866.

Education.

54. I enclose a copy of the 24th Report of the School Commission for the period from 1st July 1866 to 30th June 1867, which gives a full account of the Government Schools up to the middle of last year.

55. The returns for 1867 show that there were 116 public schools, in which there were 6,549 pupils, showing an increase, as compared with the previous year, of one school and of 565 pupils.

56. The expenditure by the Government on account of education shows an increase of 476*l.*, the total amount expended during 1867 being 15,351*l.*

57. The receipts in 1867 under the head of fees amounted to 2,383*l.*, being an increase of 306*l.* as compared with the sum received in 1866.

58. The returns from the different missionary bodies show that whilst there was an increase in the number of schools supported by them, there was a decrease in the number of pupils attending them. The following is an abstract of these schools :—

	Number of Schools.	Number of Pupils.
Society for the Propagation of the Gospel -	142	4,426
Church Missionary Society - - -	76	3,141
Wesleyan Missionary Society - -	100	1,163
Presbyterians - - - -	1	18
Baptist Missionary Society - -	13	597
American Missionary Society - -	55	1,986
Roman Catholic Missionary Society - -	84	1,236
	471	12,567

59. The numbers in 1866 were 357 schools, and 14,074 pupils.

60. The number of private schools in 1867 was 273, with an attendance of 5,413, showing an increase, as compared with 1866, of 63 schools and 964 pupils.

61. With his Despatch, No. 9, of the 14th January last, Sir Hercules Robinson forwarded to your Grace a copy of the report of the sub-committee of the Legislative Council appointed to inquire into, and report upon the state and prospect of education in the Island, and he stated the decision come to by the Government and the Legislative Council on the various recommendations of the sub-committee. I do not think it necessary to advert here in detail to all those recommendations; but the most important of them which have been adopted by the Government, and which will effect a radical change in the system of public education in Ceylon are,—

1st. The appointment of a Director of Public Instruction in lieu of the existing School Commission, by whom the Educational Department has hitherto been administered.

2nd. The extension of vernacular schools eventually, if possible, to every village throughout the Island, for inparting primary education in the Sinhalese and Tamil languages.

3rd. The discontinuance of the connexion between the Queen's College and the Calcutta University, and the substitution in lieu thereof of the establishment of three English scholarships of the yearly value of 150*l.* each to last for three years.

4th. The establishment of classes of normal pupils to be trained as teachers, English classes in connexion with the Colombo Academy, and Native classes with the Industrial and Central schools.

5th. The extension of female education by the establishment of vernacular schools, and of girls' schools corresponding with the boys' mixed and central schools.

6th. The adoption of the system of grants-in-aid on the principle recognized in India.

62. By your Despatch, No. 200, of the 26th August last, your Grace has approved of the changes proposed, and the new scheme will be carried out on the arrival of a Director of Public Instruction from England. A vote for 20,020*l.* will be taken in the Supply Bill for next year to meet the expenses of the new system.

63. Prefixed to the Blue Book Returns will be found a table, giving a statistical view of the progress of this Colony for the years 1821 to 1867 inclusive, and an abstract of the principal statistical results for the years 1866 and 1867, prepared in the form suggested by the International Statistical Congress at the meeting held in London in 1860.

64. I do not send the reports of the several heads of departments referred to in this Despatch, as it has been decided by Sir Hercules Robinson that these reports should be printed and laid before the Legislative Council. A complete copy of these reports will be hereafter forwarded to your Grace.

I have, &c.
(Signed) STUDHOLME HODGSON.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,

Several other applications for similar schools are only awaiting the report of the Sub-Inspector or the erection of a School-house, the latter being a condition which the Commission require in every instance as a test of the sincerity of the applicants.

The amount realized by school fees in 1866 was 2,077*l.* 2*s.* 0½*d.*, to which must be added 77*l.* 1*s.* 0*d.*, being receipts on account of stationery, showing an increase in the receipts from schools in 1866, as compared with 1865, of 115*l.* 7*s.* 4½*d.*, and as compared with 1864, of 15*l.* 8*s.* 3¾*d.*

Colombo Industrial School.

9. The Commission regret that in consequence of the prolonged absence of the Rev. J. Thurstan on leave, they have been unable to take any steps toward the resuscitation of the Colombo Industrial School. The Vernacular School attached to it has however been continued, and the house and grounds have been kept in order, under the supervision of the Government agent.

Galle Central and Mixed Schools.

10. At the beginning of the present year the Galle Central and Mixed Schools were, upon the recommendation of the Inspector, formed into one Institution, under the supervision of Mr. J. Anthonisz, head teacher of the Central School, and a class of 10 pupil teachers was attached to it, instead of the two, who had just completed their course of instruction, and been appointed to assistant teacherships under the Commission.

Jaffna Girls' School.

11. Miss Gray, Head Teacher of the Jaffna Girls' School, having proceeded to England on leave of absence for six months, her place has been ably supplied by Mrs. Koch, an English trained teacher, whose services the Commission were fortunate in securing on the spot.

Grants-in-aid.

12. The amount of grants made to private and other schools during the year 1866 is 791*l.* The Roman Catholic Boys' Schools at Trincomalee and Chilaw have been added to the number of Grant-in-aid Schools.

New schools.

13. Since the date of the last report the following Schools have been opened:—a Boys' Mixed School at Akuramboda; a Boys' Mixed School at Katugastota; a Girls' Mixed School at Hambantota; a Boys' Vernacular School at Kandaliyadda Paluwa; a Boys' Vernacular School at Biyagama; a Boys' Vernacular School at Tantirimulla; a Boys' Vernacular School at Maturata; a Boys' Vernacular School at Kattuwa; a Boys' Vernacular School at Wádduwa. The following schools have been closed:—the Kollupitiya Girls' School, the Vernacular Boys' and Girls' Schools at Kottáwa, the Paranagama Vernacular Boys' School; and the following temporarily closed:—the Puttalam Boys' Mixed School, and the Udatenna Boys' Mixed School.

Turnour prize.

14. There were two candidates for the Turnour prize in 1866, but as the Examiners reported that neither of them was deserving of it, the prize was not awarded. Upon the suggestion of the acting inspector, certain alterations have been made in the programme of the examination, which, it is hoped, will render it a more searching test of the real merits of the candidates.

Local examination.

15. The Examiner's report of the fifth local examination, held under the Government notification of the 26th November 1861, will be found in the Appendix.

Calcutta University.

16. The result of the last examination at Queen's College and the Colombo Academy in connexion with the University of Calcutta was as follows:—Messrs. Weeresooria and Jayesinhe were placed in the first division, and Messrs. Moorugayah and A. Silva in the second division.

Inspection.

17. The inspector's reports with the accompanying tables give every information as to the state of the Central, English, and Mixed Schools in all the Provinces.

Members.

18. The Rev. A. P. Lovekin and the Rev. A. Young have been appointed as members of the Commission in the room of the Rev. G. Schrader and the Rev. C. Merson.

19. Mr. Sendall, the inspector of schools, having proceeded to England on a year's leave of absence, Mr. Steward, of Queen's College, was appointed to act for him, his place being supplied by Mr. Britto, a former student of the college, who had proceeded to his B.A. degree in the University of Calcutta, and had been for some time employed in an important educational institution in India.

20. The thanks of the Commission are due to the Sub-Committees of Kandy, Galle, and other stations, and to several official and private superintendents, for their valuable aid in reference to the schools in which they have respectively interested themselves.

21. Financial and statistical returns, similar to those appended to the last report, will be found in the Appendices.

No. 2.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir Richard Graves MacDonnell, C.B. to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

(No. 584.)

My Lord Duke, Government House, Hong Kong, October 5, 1868.

I have the honour to forward herewith the Blue Book Returns for 1867, and late as is the period at which I transmit it, it is only due to the staff in the Colonial Secretary's office to state that it was received by me last May, and it is solely owing to a somewhat protracted illness from which I had suffered, and the pressure of the daily work of administration, that I have not transmitted it earlier.

Notwithstanding the great length at which I commented on the Blue Book returns for the previous year (1866), transmitted in my despatch, No. 384, of last year, there is very much in the returns now transmitted which invite comment and explanation. I only regret that I am unable by this opportunity to find time to give the explanations which I should wish. I shall, therefore, reserve them till next year, when, if I shall then be here, I can do better justice to the subject.

I have, &c.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, &c. &c. &c.

LABUAN.

No. 3.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Pope Hennessy to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

(No. 57.)

My Lord Duke, Government House, Labuan, November 18, 1868.

1. In forwarding to your Grace the Blue Book for 1867 I avail myself of the opportunity of giving a brief description of the Colony of Labuan.

Position.

2. The tenth article of the Treaty between the late Sultan of Borneo and Her Majesty the Queen defines the limits of the Colony. That article says:—

"It being desirable that British subjects should have some port where they may "careen and refit their vessels, and where they may deposit such stores and merchan- "dise as shall be necessary for the carrying on of their trade with the dominions of "Borneo, His Highness the Sultan hereby confirms the cession already spontaneously "made by him in 1845 of the Island of Labuan, situated on the north-west coast of "Borneo, together with the adjacent islets of Kuraman, Little Rusakan, Great Rusakan, "Daat, and Malankasan, and all the straits, islets, and seas situated half way between "the fore-mentioned islets and the mainland of Borneo; likewise the distance of ten "geographical miles from the Island of Labuan to the westward and northward, and "from the nearest point half way between the islets of Malankasan and the mainland of "Borneo in a line running north till it intersects a line extended from west to east, "from a point ten miles to the northward of the northern extremity of the Island of "Labuan, to be possessed in perpetuity and sovereignty by Her Britannic Majesty and "Her successors; and in order to avoid occasions of difference which might otherwise "arise, His Highness the Sultan engages not to make any similar cession, either of an "island or of any settlement on the mainland, in any part of his dominions to any other "nation, or to the subjects or citizens thereof, without the consent of Her Britannic "Majesty."

LABUAN.

3. The Colony is in longitude 115° 19′ E., and latitude 5° 14′ N., so that it lies to the east of a line drawn from Hong Kong to the western coast of Australia, and is about 314 miles north of the equator.

4. The islet of Malankasan, the nearest portion of the Colony to the great Island of Borneo, is only half a mile from the mainland; but Victoria Harbour, Labuan, is about four miles further off.

5. Brunei, the capital of Borneo, and the residence of the Sultan, is about thirty miles from Labuan.

6. The Colony occupies a central position with reference to the chief emporiums of commerce in the East. It is between the Phillipine Islands and the Dutch possessions, being about 650 miles from Manilla and 900 miles from Batavia. It is 1,000 miles to the south of Hong Kong and 1,900 to the north of Western Australia. It is 707 miles from Singapore and 600 miles from the French Colony of Saigon.

Size.

7. Labuan is about the same size as St. Helena but somewhat smaller, being only 45 square miles in area; it is, however, larger than Hong Kong, Bermuda, Gambia, Gibraltar, or Heligoland.

In shape it is a sort of obtuse-angled triangle; the base, or furthest side from the Island of Borneo, being a straight coast line 11 miles in length, running N.E. and S.W., the other two sides being about six or seven miles in length. The south-eastern coast line presents two indentations; one, a semicircular shallow bay, three miles in width, and the other, the safe anchorage of Victoria Harbour. The eastern side of the Island forms a shallow bay, almost filled with coral reefs and sand banks. The road from Victoria Harbour to Coal Point runs close to this coast.

Soil and other Physical Features.

8. Little or nothing has been written on the physical geography of Labuan, and in addition to my own superficial observations, I must ask your Grace to rely mainly on the more valuable notes of Mr. Motley, who was manager to the Coal Company many years ago, and who was one of the few men of science who have made any practical remarks on the geological phenomena of the Island.

9. In the edition for this year of Bradshaw's Overland Route to the East, Labuan is described as having an elevation of only 70 feet above the level of the sea; and in one of the early descriptions given by Sir James Brooke, the first governor, a similar statement is made.

10. But the fact is, the highest land has an elevation of about 350 feet, and the tops of the trees on the two northern ridges are stated by Captain Reed, in his China Sea Directory, published this year, to be about 460 feet above the level of the sea.

11. These two narrow ridges are about three miles in length, and, for the greater part, of a uniform height, descending quite abruptly on the south side, so that one can look down upon the tops of the tallest trees in the forest beneath; on the other side the ridge slopes away gently to the north.

12. The largest of these ridges commences at Kubong Bluff, in a cliff 80 feet high, and after rising sharply to 300 feet, crosses the Island in a S.S.W. direction to Luke Point, where it meets the sea in a cliff 100 feet high.

13. The second ridge is somewhat higher, though less regular than the first. It commences at Tanjong Kubong, a few hundred yards to the North of Kubong Bluff, and runs parallel to it.

14. Between these two ridges are the argillaceous strata containing the upper section of the coal seams; and between them, in the western valley, about half a mile from the coast, the petroleum springs are found.

15. Looking towards the south from the Kubong Bluff and Luke Point ridge, the central portion of the Island is visible. It consists mainly of a rich alluvial plain of valuable land, about 12,000 acres in extent.

16. Ten years ago this was hidden by the primeval forest; but now, owing to the Kadyan clearings, it is covered with doab grass, and dotted here and there with a homestead surrounded by paddy fields and fruit gardens.

17. The clearing has, however, been done in the rudest manner, and the ground is still to some extent encumbered with half-burned trunks of gigantic trees.

18. When Mr. Motley compiled his notes in 1851, he calculated that the marshy swamps occupied about one-ninth of the whole island. At that time they were very unhealthy and almost impassable. But, owing to the recent clearings in the centre and the drainage towards the south-east, many of these swamps have now become in the hands of the Kadyans extremely productive.

19. Including the plain just mentioned, the surface of the island may be described as consisting of three varieties of soil. The first, covering about three-fourths of the whole island, is a fine and deep yellow loam, well adapted for nearly all tropical productions. This soil, from an intermixture of sand and particles of oxide of iron, is not liable to become so hard and parched in the dry season as commonly happens to most of the soils of India. This soil also covers the broken spurs and deep ravines which are very numerous between the central plain and the coast. These ravines occasionally render surveying and road making extremely difficult.

20. The second variety of soil is to be found along the coast, being a sandy acccumulation of recent shells and corals, and the third consists of tracts of peat and white sand, at a higher elevation, similar to those found upon the sandstone hills in England. The latter, which are the only valueless soils in the Island, are not of any extent, except at the south-east angle, where they run for about two miles along the shore in an irregular band of about a mile in width. This tract, so valueless for agricultural purposes, was the first part of the Island originally selected as the site of the settlement, and it was the first extensive clearing. Its proximity to the harbour no doubt accounts for this selection, which probably retarded to some extent the early progress of the Colony. The Kadyans, an agricultural race from the neighbourhood of Brunei, did not commit a similar mistake, they knew where to find the good land, and when they immigrated to Labuan they went direct to the central plain.

21. In the estimates for 1869 I have made provision for the cost of a main road and branch roads through this plain.

The Coal.

22. Of the geological phenomena of Labuan, the most remarkable is the coal formation. In a recent report to the directors of the Oriental Coal Company, Mr. Lumsden, the manager, describes the Island as being built up of a great mass of coal measures, incorporated with the new red sandstone, and forming an elevated segment of a large coal basin, the two ends and opposite sides of which extend into the sea.

23. Seven seams or outcrops of coal have been discovered, ranging from one foot and a half to eleven feet in thickness. These seams are arranged in two well-defined groups, separated by the high ridges of sandstone and conglomerate rocks already referred to. Mr. Lumsden calls these groups "upper" and "lower" in relation to the sandstone. The smaller division of the Island situated north of the ridges contains the upper section, and the larger division, south of the ridges, contains the lower section.

24. The upper section consists of four seams of coal, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 in a descending order. Nos. 2 and 3 are, in Mr. Lumsden's opinion, too thin to work with any profit at present. Nos. 1 and 4 are respectively 4 feet and 11 feet thick. No. 4 seam lies immediately over the sandstone which forms the high ridge. The strike of the strata is from east to west, in which direction it must be 4,000 yards in length of Nos. 1 and 4 seams with an aggregate thickness of 15 feet of clean coal. The dip or inclination of strata is to the north at an angle of about 30 degrees.

25. All the mining operations have hitherto been confined to this section and the working of Nos. 1 and 4 seams.

26. The lower section embraces three outcrops of coals four feet thick each, but they have never been proved in depth. The strike of the strata on this south side of the ridge is from N.E. to S.W., so that within the compass of the Island there must be at least 7,000 yards in length of the three seams measuring in the aggregate 12 feet thick. The inclination of the strata is to the N.W., and ranges from 30 to as high as 70 degrees. One of the seams in this section has been traced to within 2,000 yards of Victoria Harbour, and as the outcrop is in that direction, it is possible that this coal may be got close to the town and convenient for shipping.

27. The coal field is therefore of the length and breadth of the Island, in two sections, the upper section containing two workable seams and the lower section three workable seams of coal, being five seams in all of an aggregate thickness of 27 feet. Mr. Lumsden thinks it quite safe to estimate the length of this thickness of coal at two miles, which leaves more than the usual allowance for wants, faults, and waste. Taking the workable depth at from 100 fathoms to 150 fathoms vertically, this gives on the slope or inclination of the measures a breadth of at least 600 yards. These dimensions represent a mass of coal 20,000,000 tons in weight, which is equal to an output of 100,000 tons of coal a year for 200 years. Mr. Lumsden states that there is a supply in the upper section alone for

LABUAN.

50 years at the rate of 200,000 tons a year. Thus, for all practical purposes, the Labuan coal fields may be regarded as inexhaustible.

28. As far as the upper section of coal has been explored, it appears to be comparatively free of disturbing faults. The strata continue regular and preserve nearly unchanged their strike and angle of inclination, the coal maintaining a uniform depth, thickness, and quality. There is no mining difficulty to contend with.

29. Mr. Lumsden notices another favourable circumstance in the Labuan colliery—that there are no noxious gases to trouble the miners. There is neither fire-damp nor choke-damp, and the ventilation is as untainted as if the coal were got in an open quarry. In going down the shaft and visiting the workings I have always found the ventilation good.

30. A small volume of air properly coursed keeps the mines comparatively cool and fresh. It is worth remarking, that while the temperature of English mines ranges above the heat at the surface, the underground workings in Labuan are considerably cooler than the atmosphere on the pit bank, so much so, that in the heat of the day it is a most agreeable change to a person habituated to mining to go underground.

31. As to the financial results of working the coal, I venture to recapitulate some facts I had the honour to lay before your Grace in Despatch No. 28, of 1868.

32. The following figures exhibit an approximate statement of the amount of coal raised at the Labuan collieries, and a statement of the local expenses since the first company was formed :—

EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO COMPANY.

	Coal raised.		Salaries and Expenses.
	Tons.	Cwt.	£	s.	d.
1850	1,167	0	1,845	16	6

1854	9,427	0	19,414	5	1
1855	5,208	0	12,946	13	2
1856	3,527	0	13,642	0	0
1857	313	0	5,022	0	0

	LABUAN COAL COMPANY, LIMITED.
1860	-	-	1,418	7	3
1861	40	0	8,905	12	5
1862	3,255	0	7,486	1	2
1863	10,882	0	12,157	15	6
1864	15,889	0	16,736	13	2
1865	6,270	0	9,882	8	6
1866	7,971	0	19,555	14	7
1867	7,074	0	10,800	7	2
	51,981	0	86,942	19	9

33. Thus, since 1850, the total quantity of coal raised has been 80,642 tons.

34. The cost of production has been far more than 2*l.* per ton, for the salaries and expenses at Labuan alone have amounted to 158,562*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.*, and to this must be added the home salaries and expenses, of which, since the year 1857, I can find no record here.

35. From 1850 to 1857 the home salaries and expenses amounted to 11,243*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*

36. During the whole of the period from 1850 to May 1868, the average receipts, deducting commissions for brokers, did not exceed 1*l.* per ton.

37. The old companies have therefore lost at least 1*l.* per ton on every ton of coal raised.

38. I venture to think that this is mainly owing to the cause to which I presumed to direct your Grace's atttention in my Despatch No. 42 of 1867, namely, the total failure of the coolie immigration.

39. Thousands of coolies have been brought to this Island and sent back again to China at the cost of the company, and a large per-centage of these so-called labourers have been unable or unwilling to do a single day's work.

40. The manager of the old company who preceded Mr. Morel, Mr. Sinclair, informed me that during his time one thousand coolies were thus brought to the mines, but that only twenty of these men did a fair day's work,—such a day's work, he said, as he saw the ordinary Labuan convicts performing in the road gangs.

41. To the inordinate cost of production under this extravagant system must be added the lavish expenditure upon the European staff at the collieries.

42. The manager and his subordinates have been paid salaries actually greater than the salaries of the Governor of the Colony and his officials.

43. In addition to his salary, a large sum was annually appropriated to the manager of the mines as a "table allowance," and the naval, military, and civil officers stationed in the Island had the benefit of a constant series of expensive entertainments.

44. Probably these two causes alone had quadrupled the real cost of production.

45. I am happy to say that the long standing difficulty of obtaining a sufficient number of coal hewers, and the extravagant system of working the mines, are no longer in existence.

46. In sanctioning the introduction of convicts from the Straits Settlements, Her Majesty's Government have solved the labour question.

47. Convict labour is now used to the exclusion of all free labour on the public works of the Colony, and this free labour is at the disposal of the manager of the mines.

48. In loading ships with coal, and in overground working at the colliery, the convicts are also employed, with your Grace's sanction, whenever the manager requires such labour.

49. This system is of mutual financial advantage to the colliery and the Government.

50. I had the satisfaction of reporting to your Grace, in Despatch No. 31 of the 7th of July 1868, that the pay sheets of the colliery for the month of June showed a balance of profit after paying all expenses, being the first profit obtained at the mines for nearly twenty years.

51. I have gone through the colliery accounts for the subsequent months up to the 7th of this month (November 1868), and I find that this profit has gone on steadily increasing every month.

52. The yield last month was 723 tons, and all the working expenses here of obtaining this coal absorb less than sixty per cent. of the money received for it.

53. The average selling price of the coal at Labuan has been of late $6.90 per ton.

54. As to the quality of the coal now raised by the Oriental Coal Company, I have the honour to refer your Grace to my Despatch, No. 53, of the 17th of October 1868.

General Trade.

55. In Despatches No. 8 and No. 10 of February, and No. 46 of October 1868, I pointed out the general prosperity and commercial progress of Labuan, irrespective of the coal trade.

Finance.

56. The financial condition of the Colony has been noticed in my observations to the Legislative Council in closing the session of 1868. (Despatch No. 56. of the 20th of October 1868.)

Public Health.

57. The sanitary state of the Colony has been much improved of late. The extensive clearings made by the Kadyans, the drainage operations, and certain improvements at the barracks have contributed to this result.

Climate, &c.

58. The climate of Labuan closely resembles that of the warm summer months in the south of Ireland. The temperature is far lower than in most of the Queen's eastern dominions. It varies very little during the year, the extreme changes being from 71° to 90°. Its insular condition, its proximity to the highest mountain ranges in Borneo, and its relation to the equatorial cloud ring, no doubt account for the remarkable fact that the rain generally falls at night. The rain-fall for the last three years has been:—1865, 146 inches; 1866, 166 inches; and 1867, 166 inches.

59. The perpetual verdure of the island, its numerous stately trees and flowering shrubs, and the luxurious foliage of the adjacent islets, render Labuan extremely beautiful. It has the reputation of possessing the finest fruit in the east. For oranges, pummellos, mangoes, and mangosteens it is said to be unrivalled; and the pine apple, bananas, lansets, and other varieties of fruit are cultivated in abundance.

Population.

60. The population is mainly composed of the Chinese settlers and the Kadyans; and they may be truly described as constituting a most industrious and peaceful community.

No. 4.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B., to his Grace the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(Separate).

MY LORD DUKE, Mauritius, August 11, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to transmit the Statistical Returns forming the annual Blue Book of Mauritius for 1867.

2. To comment on them is to perform a painful duty, so strongly do they testify in various ways to the terrible ordeal of sickness and suffering through which the Colony has been passing. Following on the rice famine in India, and combined with the continued shortness of the sugar crop, the epidemic indeed last year reduced the general prosperity of this Island to a lower ebb than it had sunk to for many years previously.

Taxes, Duties, &c.

3. The rates of import duty on wine, beer, and tobacco had to be considerably raised, in order to meet financial exigencies, and an acreage duty equivalent to the increase on the foreign article was placed on the cultivation of tobacco within the Island. The introduction of opium, which was supposed to be smuggled in by the Chinese traders to a large extent, was also for the first time legalized, on payment of a duty of 10*s.* per lb., licences for its retail within the Island being likewise issued at 10*l.* each.

4. There is no reason to suppose that these measures will lead to an increased consumption of the drug, whilst on the other hand, they render it the interest of many persons to aid the customs and police in checking its illicit introduction.

Revenue and Expenditure.

5. The revenue of the year had been estimated on the usual data at 710,055*l.*, but soon after the epidemic extended to Port Louis, in February, trade and industry became so completely paralysed as to render it clear that a large falling off must be anticipated, though no one then dreamt that it would amount to as much as 25 per cent. Every effort was therefore made to reduce the expenditure, and although much unforeseen outlay was necessitated by the measures adopted to cope with the disease, a net saving of 60,382*l.* was effected, diminishing the ultimate deficit on the year to 107,610*l.*

6. This result will be more clearly understood on reference to the subjoined comparative statement:—

	Revenue 1867.	Expenditure 1867.
Estimated	£710,055	£702,984	Surplus £ 7,071
Actual -	£534,992	£642,602	Deficit £107,610
Falling off	£175,063	Reduction £60,602

7. The Colonial Treasury was fortunately able to meet this further drain on its resources, and although, in consequence of the return of the fever with the hot weather, the revenue has not rallied even up to the present date, I feel confident, nevertheless, from the reduction in establishments and other economical arrangements made when introducing the estimates for the present year, that any further deficit will be avoided.

Local Revenues.

8. The expenditure of the municipality of Port Louis was greatly swollen by the advances, amounting to upwards of 20,000*l*,. which it had to make to the local Board of Health on account of the epidemic. Those advances were made under the security of a mortgage on the sanitary rates for the next 16 years, calculated to cover interest and to extinguish the principal, an arrangement since regularized by Ordinance No. 12 of 1868.

9. The total amount of debentures issued by the municipality during the year appears to have reached 38,880*l*. ; and as only 10,840*l*. overdue debentures were cancelled, there was an increase of 28,040*l*. to the municipal debt. The annual interest paid on account of that debt during the year amounted to no less than 9,000*l*., which at seven per cent. would represent a capital of 130,000*l*.

10. Statements showing the revenue and expenditure of the General Board of Health and of the Poor Law Committees are for the first time inserted.

11. Until the taking effect of Ordinance, No. 27 of 1866, each of the rural districts had its own Board of Health, and raised and disbursed its sanitary rates separately; but most fortunately this system, which led in almost every case to insolvency and inaction, had been abolished prior to the outbreak of the epidemic, all financial authority except in Port Louis being transferred to the General Board.

12. As that body had had no time to collect funds to meet the emergency, I was obliged to sanction an advance of 5,000*l*. from the Colonial Treasury, with the aid of which, and the proceeds of a sanitary rate of 1*s*. in the pound on house property in the country, it was enabled to made the disbursements most urgently required, amounting in the aggregate to 12,363*l*., exclusive of 2,692*l*. provided on the annual estimates on account of the three medical inspectors and their staff.

13. A similar but even more complete concentration of all financial powers in the hands of a Central Commission—inasmuch as the town is included—has, as your Grace is aware, been recently enacted by the Legislature in the case of the relief of the poor; but in 1867 either elective or nominated committees existed in every district, though, except in Port Louis where the duty devolved on the municipality, they nowhere showed themselves equal to the occasion, and but for advances from the General Board of Health, the sick poor of the rural districts would have been almost entirely neglected.

14. In Port Louis, as will be seen, the expenditure exceeded the receipts by no less than 8,314*l*., a fact which explains the readiness with which the municipality agreed to resign for the future the charge of the poor of the town to the Central Commission.

15. The outlay of all the rural committees combined barely reached 5,000*l*., which was in the aggregate covered by the rates they collected. In addition, however, to their obligations to the General Board of Health, debts amounting to 843*l*. 0*s*. 6*d*. were incurred to the Civil Hospital and Lunatic Asylum for the treatment of paupers, which have since been declared irrecoverable by the Legislature, and struck off charge by Government.

Military Expenditure.

16. The total outlay of Great Britain on account of the protection of the Island, as set forth in detail, amounts to 98,741*l*. 0*s*. 7*d*., of which 45,000*l*. was contributed from the Colonial Treasury. As no credit is given in the Deputy Commissary General's statement for rent of canteens, Government lands, &c., &c., which must amount to a considerable sum, nor allowance made for the admission, duty free, of all supplies for the troops, it may, I apprehend, be fairly assumed that Mauritius last year defrayed one-half of the military expenditure incurred on its account. The burden is a heavy one in the crippled state of its finances, but as Her Majesty's Government has lately declared its inability to diminish it, it would not be becoming in me to say more on the point.

17. As I have seen it stated, however, that the Royal Commission on the employment of Indian troops in the Colonies has designated Mauritius as one of those where this course could be followed with advantage, I feel bound to record my dissent in the strongest possible terms to this recommendation, supposing it to be meant to refer to the introduction of an ordinary Sepoy regiment, which could not but prove a source of constant anxiety, if not of positive danger, looking to the great preponderance of the Indian element in the population.

18. On sanitary grounds, moreover, there is little to be said in favour of such an arrangement, the natives of India being more liable than Europeans to succumb to the epidemic and endemic fevers of the Island; but in point of fact it is in the power of the military authorities to place the garrison of the Island, however composed, beyond all extraordinary risk on the score of health, by at once erecting the barracks, which have been for so many years talked of, on the elevated plateau of the interior, where the fever has never penetrated.

19. That the troops escaped with comparatively small loss (under 3 per cent. of the strength) last year was due, first, to the 32d regiment being quartered at Mahébourg, on the windward side of the Island, to which the epidemic had not then extended; and secondly, to the 2/13th regiment and the Royal Artillery having been promptly removed to the quarantine stations of Cannonier Point and Flat Island, which were lent by the Civil Government for this purpose. The battalion of the 13th was indeed withdrawn altogether from Mauritius in May, and as the 86th regiment, destined to relieve it, was detained in the Cape Colony till December, a good deal of risk was avoided.

Public Works.

20. Owing to the disorganization of labour by sickness, conjoined with the state of the revenue, nothing beyond incidental repairs were executed. The total expended, including roads and bridges, amounting to little more than two-fifths of what had been originally voted.

Civil Establishments.

21. As already mentioned, considerable reductions were made in this respect, the task being facilitated by the numerous vacancies occasioned in every department by deaths or retirements through ill-health.

22. During the height of the epidemic in the months of April and May it was not without extreme difficulty that the daily work of most of the public offices was carried on, whilst throughout the year nine-tenths of the employés were subject to repeated absences through relapses of fever.

23. Some idea of the extent to which the efficiency of the service was thus affected may be formed from the case of the police force, which, out of an average strength of 807 men, lost 98 (over 12 per cent.) by death, and 80 by discharge on the ground of physical incapacity for duty, or from that of the railway staff which, though only five Europeans and 25 Creoles and Indians died out of a total of about 500 men, had during the height of the disease not less than from 50 to 60 Europeans and from 100 to 150 Indians and Creoles laid up at the same time with fever, the attacks at that date, even when terminating favourably, lasting for a month and upwards. There were times, indeed, when it appeared next to impossible, with every effort and precaution on the part of those responsible, to keep the streets watched by night, or the trains running by day; but I am glad to state, nevertheless, that no interruption in either respect actually occurred.

Population.

24. I am again unable to transmit any detailed report on the vital statistics of the Colony, owing, as before, to the illness and departure on leave of absence of Dr. Edwards, the general sanitary inspector; and desirable as it is to determine in advance, with as much accuracy as possible, the true cipher of the population of the Colony at the beginning of the year, in order that a correct basis for calculating the fearful rate of mortality that ensued during its course may be established, this task is by no means easy.

25. In my Despatch, transmitting the Blue Book for 1866, I stated that the total of 341,165, estimated as existing on the 31st December, according to the births, deaths, and arrivals recorded since the census of 1861, was in my opinion below the reality, owing to the entries under the head of immigration being confined solely to immigrants from India officially reported, whereas many had come at their own expense both from that and other countries.

26. This is fully proved by the figures given in the Appendix to the present Return, which show that, whilst the arrivals, exclusive of such immigrants, of the military and of shipping, from the 8th April 1861 to 31st December 1867, amounted to 30,903, the corresponding departures were only 15,727, leaving the aggregate population larger by 15,176 than it would have been reckoned at under the old system. The greater portion of these immigrants, at their own expense, no doubt settled in Port Louis and its immediate neighbourhood.

27. From the enclosed tabular statement, prepared in the Colonial Secretary's Office, in which a rectification of the population returns in this and other respects has been carefully made for each year since the census, it will be seen, that on the 1st January 1867, the resident population was certainly not under 360,378 souls; besides this, however, the garrison and the shipping ought to be taken into account before estimating the ratio of mortality, the deaths in both being recorded in the registers of the Civil Status Office.

28. The former, including wives and families, may be reckoned as at the time of the census, at 2,500. For the latter, it is more difficult to make proper allowance; the only statistics available relating to the crews alone, though large numbers of passengers, as in the case of ships carrying Indian and Chinese coolies to the British West Indies or Cuba, are not unfrequently detained for weeks in port, refitting. The crews of all vessels entered inwards during 1867 amounted to 11,067 men, but of course many were here but for a short period, whilst others returned more than once. Considering the unsanitary state of the harbour, the liability of unacclimatised persons to disease, and the omission of passengers, it would not, I think, be unfair to add half this number, say 5,500, to the population included within the bills of mortality on 1st January 1867, which would thus be augmented to 368,000.

29. As the aggregate mortality during the year amounted to 41,201, as against 12,652 in 1865 and 12,548 in 1866, the excess due to the epidemic may be taken at about 28,600. The per-centage of deaths being thus raised from less than $3\frac{1}{2}$ to about $11\frac{1}{5}$, or considerably more than trebled. It must be borne in mind, however, in order to form a correct estimate of the ravages of the disease, that it was confined throughout the year almost entirely to the leeward side of the Island, and affected, therefore, not much more than half the population.

30. From the subjoined table a rough but tolerably correct idea of the distribution of the population among the nine districts into which the Colony is divided may be formed; and, as the exact number of deaths in 1866 and 1867 and their ratio per cent. is inserted opposite to each district, the relative proportions in which they suffered may be seen. It is not easy, however, to distinguish absolutely the leeward from the windward districts, as there are two, viz., Plaines Wilhems and Moka, occupying mainly the elevated central plateau of the Island, and thus, for the most part, exempt from fever, yet running down very nearly to the leeward coast, and containing villages in proximity thereto which were all but depopulated.

32. Discarding these, as affording no safe criterion, it may be stated, that in the four leeward districts proper, Black River, Port Louis, Pamplemousses, and Rivière du Rempart, with a population estimated at 202,000, the deaths were 33,588, or 16·62 per cent., equal to fully fivefold their ordinary rate; on the other hand, in the three windward districts, Flacq, Grand Port, and Savane, with a population of 114,000, they amounted to only 3,985, or a trifle under 3·5 per cent,—as nearly as possible their normal ratio. Even this does not give the full extent of the contrast, for a great many persons attacked by the disease in Port Louis and Pamplemousses migrated to the higher regions or to the opposite coast, and if they happened to die, reduced the death rolls of the former at the expense of the latter districts.

33. When it is added that this vast mortality was no more evenly distributed over the year than it was over the Island, but that by far the larger part of it was crowded into three or four months, upwards of 25,000 persons having died in March, April, and May, 15,000 of them in Port Louis alone, the daily death-roll in that city at one period having exceeded 300, thus surpassing what it had ever been during the cholera, some idea may be formed of the horrors of the situation, and of the enormous difficulties with which the Government, the Municipality, and the General Board of Health were called upon unexpectedly to contend, in providing for attendance on the sick, burying the dead, &c.

34. Various causes have been assigned for this terrible calamity, but in the absence of the report of the Commission which I appointed in May 1867 to inquire into the subject, I shall but very briefly touch on them. Among medical men within the Colony three leading theories are current:—first, that this malarious fever was introduced direct and unchanged from India; second, that it is a modification or development of the bilious remittent fever, known here for many years past as the "Bombay fever;" thirdly, that it is a local outbreak, occasioned by noxious emanations from the accumulated organic matter which encumbers the estuaries and harbours of the coast.

MAURITIUS.

35. The last, to which the Chief Medical Officer has from the first adhered, and which will be found ably supported and elucidated in his Annual Report on Diseases treated in the District Prison Hospitals, strikes me as so natural and well founded, taking into account the density of the population, the limited water supply of the last few years, and the filthy habits of the Indians and ex-apprentices, that it seems needless to encounter the objections to the two former theories, arising respectively from the facts, that the Mauritius epidemic is not communicable from man to man, and that it is of an intermittent character.

36. In England, the want of proper drainage, and neglect of other sanitary precautions in Port Louis, appear generally to have been regarded as the reasons, if not of the origin of the fever, at any rate of its malignity; but a closer examination of facts would lead to material qualification of any views of this kind. No doubt the drainage of Port Louis is very defective, and its night service by no means properly performed, but the municipality is certainly justified in asserting that the town had never been in a cleanlier state than at the commencement of 1867, the beds of the streams which convey its surface drainage to the sea, and of the gutters leading into them, having been thoroughly cleared after the inundation of 1865, and a fresh contract for scavengering on an extended scale entered into in 1866. Again, so far from originating in Port Louis, the epidemic took its rise many months before in the district of Black River, the very one referred to in the last report of the General Sanitary Inspector, Dr. Edwards, as the healthiest in the Island, its mortality in 1865 having been little over 2·5 per cent., although, as will be seen by the table, in 1867 it rose to 14·9, or within a fraction of 6 times as high, presenting, in spite of its gentle eminences, wide spreading valleys, and sparse population, as near as may be the same proportional augmentation as in the narrow streets and crowded habitations of the city.

37. The whole course of the visitation indeed, from first to last, has been so mysterious, not to say apparently capricious, as to prove beyond a doubt that it has been mainly dependent on extremely complicated and recondite meteorological phenomena. It has made little distinction either in town or country between the well kept mansions of the rich and the squalid hovels of the poor, has in some cases passed by the swampiest localities to attack the inhabitants of dry and elevated spots beyond; and after stopping short for months at certain limits has suddenly continued its resistless onward progress, or again, without apparent reason, swept back over districts where its ravages were all but extinct.

38. In making these remarks, I do not mean for one moment to deny that the malignity and persistency of the disease are due in a very considerable degree to the absence of proper sanitary arrangements throughout the Island. That a death rate so fearful as that which literally decimated the population of Port Louis twice over within the space of a few months, might have been greatly moderated by the adoption beforehand of proper measures cannot be doubted; but the neglect of a sound system of hygiène might till very recently be charged against municipal authorities in most parts of the world, and unfortunately the principles best suited for tropical climates have been as yet by no means definitely determined and placed beyond dispute.

39. In India the Governments of the different Presidencies have recently turned their attention to this question, and a plan of sewerage is, I perceive, being prepared for Madras, which may serve as a model here; though, owing to the situation of Port Louis, and the absolute necessity of preventing the further pollution of the harbour, the expense of any scheme that may be adopted must necessarily prove very heavy.

40. Ten years ago a Commission recommended that the four principal streams which descend through the town should be converted into huge masonry culverts into which a network of sewers should be turned, at a cost of about 90,000*l.*; but the proposal encountered great opposition, and was finally repudiated at the instance of another Commission; fortunately, I apprehend, since the direct discharge of the entire filth of so large a population into a comparatively small basin, so narrow in its exit that the tides with difficulty run in and out, could hardly have failed to make bad worse. Little has been attempted subsequently in the way of improvement, except the establishment of another company for converting the deodorized nightsoil into manure for agricultural purposes; but a new scheme of underground sewerage has recently been started, and as your Grace is aware, I have appointed a Committee of engineers to investigate the matter and report as to the best method of proceedings.

Immigration.

41. Of the extent to which an ample and regular allowance of food combined with constant medical surveillance sufficed to ward off, or render innocuous, the attacks of the epidemic, even when at its height, satisfactory proofs will be found in the Annual Report of the Protector of Immigrants, which as usual is bound up with the Blue Book.

42. Mr. Beyts shows, from the returns of the officers of the civil status that the death rate among Indians employed on sugar estates was only 6·1 per cent. as compared with 12·9 per cent. amongst those who were their own masters. By far the greater mortality on sugar estates moreover was among the women and children, the former as a general rule refusing to be treated in hospital. Among the labourers under engagement the deaths, as already reported, did not exceed the extremely low average of 4·08 per cent.

43. The Hospital Ordinance passed in 1865 may be pronounced, under the circumstances, to have worked most successfully, although some of its provisions of necessity fell into temporary abeyance from the great demand for the services of medical men.

44. There is little else in the Protector's Report to call for special remark. Immigration was at a standstill throughout the year, so far as India was concerned, the only arrivals having been 350 time expired men from Réunion, a source of supply since cut off by the steps taken by the Government of that Colony to prevent further engagements being attested before the British Consul.

Education.

45. I have little that is satisfactory to add in forwarding the reports on this head. The epidemic was particularly rife among children, and owing to the number who were too ill to attend, and to the fears of parents in other cases, the schools in the Leeward Districts were almost entirely deserted. Those of the Government were closed with my approval in April, and the services of those masters who had not been attacked by fever were, when necessary, utilized as registrars of deaths. In most cases both government and grant-in-aid schools were after an interval re-opened, but the attendance continued, with constant interruptions, on a very much reduced scale to the end of the year. The Royal College kept its terms as usual, but several of the professors died, others were obliged to invalid, and the number of pupils fell to barely a third of what it had recently been.

Savings Bank.

46. From the Report of the Acting Manager of this Institution, it will be seen that one of the objects for which it was established was fulfilled, inasmuch as great use was made of it during the epidemic. The amount of deposits withdrawn was 72,000*l.*; but on the other hand 55,500*l.* was deposited. The number of depositors was reduced by 599; of these, some died, others returned to India, the sums withdrawn by the latter class having averaged 28*l.* per head.

Administration of Justice.

47. I enclose returns of the civil and criminal cases and other business dealt with by the Supreme Court in the years 1866 and 1867 respectively. A considerable reduction in all respects is exhibited in the latter year, litigants, counsel, witnesses, and prisoners having been alike affected by the fever.

48. The number of trials at the assizes was less than half, arising, as stated in the Report of the Acting Procureur-General from actual diminution of the criminal classes, and not from moral reformation or want of detection. The police, indeed, as Mr. Colin testifies, not only maintained its efficiency in spite of every obstacle, but rendered valuable services to the sick, and great assistance in sanitary matters.

49. As regards capital offences, the falling off last year was in proportion, but, as will be seen from the quinquennial synopsis of crimes annexed to the Report, neither the number of cases nor of persons was so low as in some years of the series.

50. Three persons were convicted of murder, of whom two were executed, and ten of the minor crime of manslaughter, none having been actually acquitted. With respect to gang robberies and petty larcenies, I concur with Mr. Colin in anticipating that the stringent measures recently adopted with your Grace's sanction for the registration of Indians who have completed their term of industrial residence on sugar plantations will materially tend to put a stop to these offences.

Gaols and Prisoners.

51. I felt myself called upon to explain to your Grace some months ago that the overcrowding and other evils charged against the prison system in Mauritius in the digest of information as to colonial prisons, lately laid before Parliament, was founded in a great measure upon misapprehension of the facts, and to show that the average mortality among Indian prisoners here had been much below what, on the authority of the Bengal Sanitary Commission, it was in that Presidency. Had I at that time been cognizant of Lord Napier's minute of 10th July 1866 on the defective condition of the gaols in the Madras Presidency, or of the Report of the Madras Sanitary Commissioner, I might have been tempted to add that the death rate in this Island was actually much less than half what it is in that part of India. The sad reverse of last year has, however, taken away occasion of boasting, for the epidemic found, as already mentioned, full scope amongst the class which usually supplies the gaol population, and the mortality of 1867 was fearfully augmented.

52. From the ordinary returns, as set forth in the Blue Book, neither the maximum, minimum, nor average lock-up is ascertainable, and they strike me as being generally so complicated and unsuitable to colonial usage, that I venture to suggest that one of the best results of the attention which has lately been directed to the subject, would be the substitution of simpler and more easily intelligible forms.

53. As regards the comparative extent of sickness and mortality adequate information may be obtained from the annual report of diseases treated in the district prison hospitals, contributed by the chief medical officer, and from the subsidiary report of the prison surgeon of Port Louis, attached to the Acting Procureur-General's report on the civil prisons of that town. It will be seen that Dr. Reid considers the sick list of the prisons moderate, bearing in mind the extent to which the epidemic prevailed in the districts in which they were situated, and he shows that though the mortality was very much heavier than in the three preceding years, it did not greatly exceed that of 1863, when Bombay fever made great ravages. According to his calculations the death rate per cent. of the average daily strength was—

In 1863 - - -	11·393
„ 1864 - - -	5·636
„ 1865 - - -	3·500
„ 1866 - - -	3·443
„ 1867 - - -	12·139

In some observations on Dr. Pougnet's report for Port Louis gaol, the chief medical officer gives the per-centage there as 11·30 only, but it should have been stated at about a half per cent. higher, as the deaths which occurred at Flat Island are not taken into account, although the prisoners sent there are included in the average strength.

Legislation.

55. The Council of Government continued to meet regularly throughout the year, and, as will be seen from the report of the Acting Procureur-General, passed several laws of great importance. Foremost among these Mr. Colin rightly places the Ordinance for consolidating the law as to Indian labourers already referred to, which by continuing to old immigrants the same obligation of accounting for their place of residence and means of livelihood as rests upon those who have not yet served five years in the Colony affords a basis for many salutary reforms, and is universally looked upon as the commencement of a new era of social improvement. Hitherto, from a fear lest immigration might be stopped in case the slightest restriction were imposed, this class of the community has been suffered to live precisely as it thought proper, and there can be no doubt that not only the increase of crime but the deterioration of the sanitary state of the Island are mainly due to the licence thus permitted. The epidemic brought matters in this latter respect to a crisis, and with the aid of the experience of the Protector of Immigrants, and of the Superintendent of Police, the late Procureur-General, Mr. Sholto Douglas, succeeded in framing the enactment in question, which has since received the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

56. Among the other measures which Mr. Douglas had taken in hand, with legal experience and consummate ability, which commanded the confidence of all parties, was the reformation of the entire code of civil procedure, which is so cumbrous and expensive as to constitute, especially in the case of the forcible sale of small properties, a complete denial of justice. He did not live to finish his labours in this direction, although, with the aid of the Law Committee of Council, great progress had been made, and it consequently devolved on his successor to take up the work where he left it. The only instalment of legal reform in 1867 was the Ordinance "to amend the "law relating to irregular successions," in other words, successions falling to illegitimate relations, a large class unhappily in most communities where a mixture of races exists.

Exchange—Money—Weights and Measures.

57. There is probably no country in the world which would benefit more than Mauritius from the introduction of uniformity of weights, measures, and coins. The accounts of the Government are made up in British sterling money, and duties are levied at the Custom House according to the imperial standards of weights and size; the books of bankers and merchants are kept in dollars and cents and shopkeepers frequently price their goods in livres and sous, which, like the weights and measures invariably used in commercial transactions, are the same as those of France before the first Revolution.

58. When it is added that a large proportion of the goods imported come from this latter country invoiced according to the decimal system which has been established there for 70 years, and charged for in modern French money, the complex calculations often requisite for passing an entry at the customs may be understood; the confusion and loss, however, caused to persons newly arrived in the country by having to make their purchases in "gros" or "aunes" or "velts" and pay for them by exchanging real coins for nominal and imaginary ones, can hardly be conceived without a trial.

59. Complicated as the question is when considered in all its bearings, and difficult as it would undoubtedly prove to introduce new denominations without compulsory regulations, which could hardly be resorted to in a British possession, I should have been tempted to ask permission to adopt the French metric system, now that it has been made permissive in Great Britain by Act of Parliament, if I had not been sanguine that further light would be thrown on the subject during the discussions of the International Conference which was held at Paris last year in connexion with the exhibition of the weights, measures, and coins of all nations.

Imports and Exports.

60. A comparision with those of the previous year shows a serious falling off, owing on the one hand to the commercial stagnation caused by the epidemic, on the other to the shortness of the sugar crop:—

	Imports (excluding specie.)	Exports.
1866 - -	£2,048,000	£2,501,000
1867 - -	1,720,000	2,003,800
Falling off -	£328,000	£498,000

India still stands at the head of the list in respect of imports, though owing to the reduction in the price of rice their value was less by a third than in the preceding year. Great Britain as usual is second and France third. The exports from Australia were less valuable by nearly a quarter of a million, and Great Britain consequently again resumed the first place, though not by a large amount. The quantity of sugar shipped during the year was 100,000 tons, as against 124,000 in 1866; and as the average prices of the two years was nearly the same, say 18*s.* 4*d.* as against 18*s* 6*d.* per cwt., the difference in the estimated value stands at 420,722*l.*

Shipping.

61. The tonnage of vessels arriving at and leaving Port Louis fell in about the same proportions, amounting inwards to 245,000 and outwards to 250,000 tons. The proportion of British ships was somewhat larger than usual, which is explained by the larger quantity of sugar exported to England.

General Remarks.

62. In concluding this melancholy chapter in the history of Mauritius, I am preserved alike from indulging in extravagant anticipations of a speedy return to prosperity on the one hand and from gloomy forebodings on the other, by having carefully watched all that has occurred since the close of the year. Had I been writing at that date, I might naturally enough have erred in the former respect, for the epidemic had at that time all but disappeared, while the promise of the coming crop was unprecedentedly favourable. The gradual revival, however, of the disease with the return of hot weather served to dim the brightness of the prospect, which became altogether clouded over when there followed on the 11th and 12th March a hurricane more destructive by far than any which had been experienced during the last 30 or 40 years.

MAURITIUS.

63. For a moment it seemed as if the misfortunes of the Colonists were about to overwhelm them, but notwithstanding that the state of the public health is still far from satisfactory, that the injury to the canes seems likely to prove as great as at first apprehended, and that the extra expenditure entailed on the Colonial Treasury by the damage to the railways and other public works has necessitated recourse to a loan, a sensible increase of commercial and agricultural activity is already discernable, and as nearly two-thirds of 1868 have now elapsed, I feel warranted in predicting that the state of affairs at the end of this year will be in all respects much better than at the end of last.

64. This result will be chiefly due, under Divine Providence, to the courage, energy, and intelligence with which the planters have contended against the successive difficulties which have beset them. In the neighbouring island of Réunion, although the scourge of pestilence has been escaped, the hurricane of March, following, as the Council-General expresses it, "on six years of unexampled agricultural distress," has driven that body to appeal to the Emperor for pecuniary assistance on a large scale from the mother country. In Mauritius, although exceptions may have been taken to the amount of the military contribution on the ground that the troops are kept here mainly for Imperial purposes, no disposition has been shown to have recourse to a movement of this kind, or to rely on aught save their own unassisted efforts to extricate themselves from the embarrassments by which through the force of circumstances they are surrounded, and once more to restore this fertile island to the prosperous condition it had attained by means of Indian immigration.

65. Fervently hoping that these efforts will prove successful,

I have, &c.

SIR, Government Savings Bank, July 30, 1868.

I HAVE now the honour to lay before your Excellency the annual report upon the operations of the Government Savings Bank for the past year 1867. The report is accompanied with the usual statements in elucidation thereof.

2. I have to express my regret that I have been unable to submit the report at an earlier period, the repeated attacks of fever to which the chief clerk has been subject, even up to a late period, have prevented the completion of the examination of the books of the bank by the Audit Office till within the last few days.

3. Until the several accounts, which are annually becoming more numerous, were examined and verified and a balance sheet established, no reliable statements could be made out affording sufficient correct data upon which to draw out a report.

4. Although the progress made by the bank during the past year shows no increase, on the contrary a decrease in the number of depositors and in the amount deposited, it has however fully responded to one of the chief objects of the institution, which is, to encourage all classes, particularly those depending on the fruits of their industry, to save in the time of prosperity so as to insure to them certain relief in the hour of sickness and distress.

5. The operations of the bank during the past year will, I trust, fully exemplify that this essential object has been accomplished and that the institution has been the means of affording great relief during the prevalence of the late epidemic.

6. Appendix No. 1* shows the nature and extent of the operations during 1867, when compared with those of the previous year, 1866, exhibits a marked decrease in each item, but this could not have been otherwise considering the large amount of sickness, privation, and mortality which unfortunately existed during the greater part of the year, particularly in the months of March, April, May, June and July, necessarily causing, not only a decrease in the number of depositors and the sums deposited, but large demands for the repayment of the deposits already made.

7. During the months just referred to, deposits to the amount of 35,439*l.* were withdrawn. The repayment of so large a sum could not but have proved a great relief to many suffering families and individuals, and have contributed largely to mitigate the distress and misery which was then so widely spread throughout the Island and more particularly in Port Louis.

* The Appendices to this Report not printed.

8. Appendix No. 2. shows the extent to which the operations of the bank were influenced by the prevailing epidemic. It also shows that as its baneful effects diminished a reaction soon followed; the deposits increasing and the withdrawals decreasing, the latter was however occasionally increased by Indians returning to their country and taking with them their savings.

9. I may here mention, that since the commencement of the year to the 30th of June last, there have been 702 new depositors, being at the rate of 117 per month, and sums deposited have amounted to 31,150*l.* Last year to the 30th of June there were 554 new depositors and 28,874*l.* deposited; there have been large sums withdrawn during the former period by parties proceeding to Europe, and by the settlement of successions which have been, as might be expected, many, from the increased number of deaths.

10. I may further add that after the hurricane in March last, when the repayment of deposits might have been looked for, and which took place but to a limited extent, the number of new depositors increased particularly among the Indian population, who no doubt, after the destruction of their cases, found that the bank was a safer and more profitable place of deposit for their savings than burying them in the ground.

11. Appendix No. 3. exhibits in detail the principal causes of the withdrawal of deposits and the closing accounts. It shows the large amount of savings continued to be made by the Indian population which has enabled all of them to return to their country with little fortunes; during the last two years 21,038*l.* have been withdrawn from the bank for this purpose, giving an average of 28*l.* per Indian.

12. It further shows that the same class continued to invest money in the purchase of land and in other profitable sources of industry, thus making them a useful and productive portion of the general population.

13. Appendix No. 4. details the several classes of the Indian depositors and the amount held by each class, which in aggregate amounts to 56,404*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*, rather exceeding one third of the total deposits and which give an average of 20*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* to each Indian; the remaining two-thirds, viz., 107,188*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, are held by the general population, of which latter sum, 32,660*l*, 19*s* 7¾*d.*, nearly one third of it is deposited for the benefit of 1,242 children, 479 being Europeans and 763 Creoles.

14. Appendix No. 5. refers to the operations of the branch banks and shows that they were not influenced by the late epidemic to the same extent as the central bank.

15. I avail of this opportunity to state, that the alteration your Excellency was pleased to approve of in allowing deposits and payments to be made each day of the week, except on Saturday, instead of two days in the week, and which alteration came into operation on the 15th January last, has been attended with increased transactions in the Grand Port and Savanne districts, particularly in the latter one, being more distant from Port Louis. In the other districts no marked change has taken place within the last six months; the branch bank re-opened at Plaines Wilhems, and the one opened for the first time at Moka, have commenced transactions, but none have taken place at Pamplemousses.

16. By the end of the year the advantages of the present alteration will be better understood. I may here mention that opening these branches have been attended with no expense beyond the supply of the necessary books to record transactions.

I have, &c.

Crime.

The disastrous fever epidemic which devastated the island during the year 1867 could not fail to work its effect on crime. Thus it will be seen that in comparison with 1866 there was a very considerable reduction in the number of cases, and of persons tried at the assizes for serious offences.

This decrease may in a great measure be ascribed to actual diminution of crime (arising from the above cause), rather than from any want of detection, and of bringing to justice. And this opportunity may be taken to observe that much as the police force of the Colony suffered from the epidemic, and great as was the additional duty cast upon them, decimated as they were with fever, it is due to that department of the service to testify to the praiseworthy manner in which every grade performed their duty, surmounting difficulties, and in addition to their normal duties, affording most valuable assistance to the sick and destitute. Although their strength and efficiency was much crippled by disease, yet I believe that the cause of justice did not materially suffer. The fever having committed the worst of its ravages on the back streets and over-crowded dwellings, the criminal portion of the community, as is usual in such case, suffered more than any other, the decrease in crime may therefore be fairly attributed to the diminution of the population from whence the greater number of criminals are drawn rather than to any actual moral reformation or want of detection.

2. Under these circumstances, no very reliable result or conclusion can be drawn by any comparison between 1867 and any previous year; nevertheless, it is to be remarked that the total number of persons charged and cases tried rather exceed 1865, and bear a close average to the previous years, leading to the inference that crime must rather be on the increase than decreasing in the Colony.

3. As regards capital offences, there have been 14 persons charged on 12 separate accusations of murder; of these, three were convicted of the capital charge, two of whom were executed and the other reprieved, the remainder were found guilty of manslaughter, except one, against whom a Nolle prosequi was entered, and none were acquitted. As is usually the case in this Colony, the origin of these crimes was, in the greater number of cases, jealousy and quarrels about women in the Indian portion of the population (by whom all these crimes were committed), and the victims for the most part females, as the following table shows:

Sex of Victim.		Motive of Crime.						Remarks.
Male.	Female.	Jealousy.	Robbery.	Revenge.	Drunken Quarrel.	Other Causes.
3	10	9	3	1	—	—	—	One Indian tried on double charge of murder.

The above table substantiates the remarks previously made by Mr. Dickson and myself on the subject of the substitution of decapitation for hanging. With hardly an exception, the prisoners charged with the murder of a female committed the deed whilst under feelings of jealousy (frequently without foundation), and went to the scaffold with exultation, or on the other hand, expressed regret at not being hanged if the verdict against them only amounted to "manslaughter."

4. A rise in the number of cases of "wounds and blows wilfully inflicted, without intention to kill, "but which nevertheless caused death" is observable, and this may be accounted for from the number of persons who, during the past year, suffered from organic disease, principally of enlargement of the spleen arising from repeated attacks of fever, and who, when subjected to the slightest bodily shock, were liable to instantaneous death. Thus it occurred that many persons were indicted under this article of the law for assaults which, had they been inflicted on healthy subjects, would have been harmless and trivial.

Under the head of Wounds and Blows causing sickness, is a case in which 25 Lascar seamen of a British ship mutinied in the harbour of Port Louis, and violently assaulted the master and other officers of the vessel. The case was a serious one, as the death of the master resulted indirectly from the wounds inflicted on him, and had not technical difficulties intervened, the parties would have been tried for murder. Two cases of coining, a crime which has long been dormant in the Island, have been tried, this year; the two offences related to the same gang, and may be considered exceptional, as there is no reason to suppose that false coining exists to any extent, if at all, in the Colony.

Under the head of "Rape" is included those cases which are embraced under the Ordinance No. 12 of 1866, for having sexual connexion with children under nine years of age, where no actual "violence" can be proved to have been used.

Of the four cases brought to trial, three were tried under counts based upon this Ordinance, and the full term of two years' imprisonment was inflicted on those who were convicted. Adverting therefore to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State's Despatch No. 10, of the 26th March 1867, it may be remarked that the offences punishable under the new law have not, up to the present time, shown any signs of increase, and although the maximum punishment is considerably less than that of the English law, yet from the trial of two years which the Ordinance has undergone, it appears to have worked well and accomplished the object for which it was framed. A diminution will also be remarked in the number of gang robberies by night, with violence, an offence which for some years had been on the increase, and assumed a somewhat serious character from the fact that the perpetrators were organized in bands and were exceedingly difficult of detection. They were chiefly Madras Indians of the vagrant class, and their depredations were usually upon shopkeepers of their own nation. These malefactors doubtlessly suffered heavily by the fever epidemic, but from the active measures that have been taken for several years past to put down this very dangerous crime, it may be reasonably hoped that, with the increased supervision of the vagrants, and the more ample power which by the Ordinance now under consideration of the Home Government has been confided in the authorities, this offence may be shortly removed from our criminal annals.

Legislation, 1867.

Among the many important laws which were passed by the Council of Government during 1867, the Ordinance No. 31 of that year is the first in point of public utility to be noticed in reviewing the legislation of the period.

The introduction into Mauritius of labourers from India had been carried on under various systems, each of which required in a greater or lesser degree an amended legislation as regards the rights and duties of the immigrant during his sojourn in the Colony; but it had long been customary to leave the laws of one system to continue in force, while new principles crept in with succeeding Ordinances which were only intended to amend the previous laws, and this course gave rise to so much confusion that it was resolved to consolidate the greater part of the Ordinances on this important subject. The time chosen for doing so was deemed the more suitable, inasmuch as the local Ordinance No. 16 of 1862, and the Indian Act, No. 13 of 1864, on immigration, seemed by their satisfactory working during several years to have placed on a permanent basis the present system of introducing labourers into the Colony.

Moreover, the organic legislation on masters and servants in Mauritius, which had had in view the protection and control of the working classes just emerging from slavery, was ill-adapted to the more enlightened condition of the actual labourers of the Colony, and to the excellent relations now existing in this Colony between employers and the employed.

It had also become urgent to place more decisive checks upon vagrancy, the besetting sin of our Indian immigrant population, and to introduce many other useful provisions as to task-work, wages, tickets, arrest for desertion, vacant estates, procedure in the stipendiary courts, &c., of which the want had been recognized.

To meet these various requirements, the Ordinance No. 31 of 1867 was passed; it reproduces the clauses of previous Ordinances, of which the utility had been confirmed by experience, and it contains many salutary provisions on the points above mentioned.

This law, when published as a draft of law for public information, occupied the attention of the public and of the local press to an unusual degree, and was warmly received by the community, who, with reason, anticipated from its provisions much benefit to the social order and prosperity of the Colony.

The 74th article of the law enables the Governor to empower the clerks of the stipendiary magistrates to carry on, in lieu of the latter, certain formal duties, such as the signing of contracts of service, &c.; this provision was introduced to facilitate the working of a scheme of economy, by the consolidation of the district and stipendiary magistracies. The law, however, was not to take effect until approved by the Home Government, and nevertheless it was urgent that the magistrates of those districts in which the consolidation had been effected, should be at once relieved from the performance of those duties; the temporary Ordinance No. 32, of 1867 was therefore passed to afford that relief pending the coming into operation of the principal law.

No. 1.

As a consequence of the prison reforms, which had taken place during the past four years, the question of the treatment of youthful offenders in gaol was taken up, and two experimental institutions were created, with the object of separating juvenile offenders from adults of the criminal class; these establishments were undoubtedly an improvement on the former practice of unclassed association, but the good derived from them was limited, as they had to be carried on under the general system of gaol discipline applicable to grown-up prisoners, a principal evil of which was that it allowed the juvenile offender to return to the evil society of his former companions so soon as his sentence, which seldom exceeded a few weeks' or months' detention had expired; moreover, children could not be removed from this corrupt association until they had violated the law, when it was often too late to undo their criminal training. At the same time, the Colony, less favoured in this respect than the mother country, possessed no industrial school, or other such institution supported by private benevolence, wherein the reformation of such children might be attempted.

It thus became necessary for the Government to establish reformatory schools, the subject of the Ordinance No. 1. That law provides for the detention at a reformatory school, until the age of 15, of juvenile offenders, and of children not under proper control, for their discipline and instruction during their confinement, and for their employment at the conclusion thereof.

The cardinal provisions of the Ordinance were borrowed from the Imperial statutes, 17 & 18 Vict., c. 86., and 19 & 20 Vict., c. 28.

Nos. 18 and 20.

An important improvement on the law relating to irregular successions, namely, successions falling to illegitimate relatives, was effected by the Ordinances Nos. 18 and 20. Previously, the judicial costs connected with the formalities of being sent into possession of an irregular succession were oftentimes so considerable as to exceed the value of the property itself, whereas legitimate heirs were held by the Civil Code to be invested as of right with the estate accruing to them.

This distinction was found in practice to be the cause of so much hardship to small proprietors entitled to irregular successions, that the law was amended to enable them to be sent into possession in the same manner as legitimate heirs.

No. 16.

The Government having set up lines for electric telegraph along the railway, a law (No. 16) was passed to regulate the transmission and delivery of messages, and to protect the lines from injury. The Ordinance provides for the punishment of telegraph officers, in cases of breach of confidence, &c., for the arrest and trial of persons wilfully damaging the material of the telegraph, and for the levying of charges and their recovery. The subordinate rules, subject to which the public are entitled to make use of the electric telegraph, are framed apart from the Ordinance by the Governor in Executive Council.

No. 7.

By the law of the Colony the Master of the Supreme Court, before whom all judicial sales of real estate are made, is the depositary of very large sums of money, consisting of deposits of sale-price, fees of office, stamp duty, and costs of registration.

While the late Mr. Robert Temple held that office, he brought to the notice of the Government the insufficiency of the system then in force for the safe keeping of the monies passing through his department. A Committee was thereupon appointed to fix on a plan of deposit and refund, which should guarantee to the Government and the public the safety of sums lodged with the master, and should prevent the commission of abuses in matters of money on the part of an unscrupulous or dishonest officer.

The result of the labours of the Committee is the Ordinance No. 7, which requires all such deposits to be made under the form of a bank cheque drawn in favour of the Colonial Treasurer, and all sums refunded to be paid by that officer on a cheque issued by the master. Under this system fraud becomes almost impracticable, as the receipts and payments of the master are confined, as far as possible, to representative instead of actual values.

No. 33.

At the instance of the members of the profession, the laws on sworn land surveyors were revised in Ordinance No. 33, in order to render more secure rights which were daily infringed with impunity, to provide for the regular deposit of memoranda of survey at the Archives Office, and to amend the tariff of fees payable in matters of survey.

No. 13.

It was found necessary to impose additional custom duties on wine, beer, and porter, in order to provide for the expenses incurred for additional rolling stock on the railway, and to meet the cost of erecting the electric telegraph.

Nos. 2, 25, 29, 30.

These Ordinances were passed to secure the revenue of the Colony, which, having fallen off on several important items, was not equal to the expenditure, although all possible reductions had been made on that side.

No. 11.

The finances of the Municipal Corporation of Port Louis were placed on a more satisfactory footing than they had hitherto been by the Ordinance No. 11, which, by raising from 5*l.* to 10*l.*, the maximum amount of poor rates payable annually by any person, relieved the municipality from the burden which it had long borne of furnishing a yearly subsidy of never less than 2,000*l.* from its general revenues, to make up the difference which always occurred between the receipts and expenditure of the Poor Relief Committee of the town.

The same law also provided for a more complete collection of poor rates and municipal taxes, by enabling the corporation to recover these on attaching in the hands of persons owing money to rate-payers the sums claimed from the latter.

No. 15.

As the Procureur-General of Mauritius is a member of the Executive Council, which is at times required to sit as a Land Court, he is unable to represent the Ministère Public before that court, and that duty is therefore performed by his substitute.

In consequence, however, of certain departmenal arrangements, it happened that the joint duties of Acting Procureur-General and Substitute Procureur-General were for a time carried on by one officer, and it then became necessary to pass this temporary Ordinance, to provide, during that interval, for the representation of the Ministère Public before the Land Court.

No. 6.

During the fearful epidemic of 1867 the mortality was so great that the officers of Civil Status charged with the registration of deaths, were unable to overtake their work, and it was found expedient to appoint assistant officers of Civil Status at several points in each district, in order to avoid delaying the interment of corpses, and for public convenience. The declarations so received are rendered valid by the Ordinance No. 6.

Nos. 9 and 14.

These Ordinances were passed to provide for the repayment, by additional direct taxation on the Roman Catholic inhabitants of two districts, of an advance made at their request from the Colonial Treasury, to enable them to repair the churches of their respective parishes.

No. 12.

Unnecessary restrictions having been imposed upon the introduction of dogs in the Colony at a time when hydrophobia was very prevalent an application was made by the inhabitants for a relaxation of the rule, to enable passengers by the overland mail, or from Australia, &c., to land dogs in Mauritius.

This is now made lawful by Ordinance No. 12, which at the same time provides against the landing of dogs labouring under dangerous maladies.

No. 22.

The period during which it is prohibited to hunt deer is specified in the game laws of the Colony as being between the 1st September and 15th May following. As, however, it is recognized that the circumstances of the season may render it advantageous that some discretionary power should exist to authorize hunting during that period, or a portion thereof, the Ordinance No. 22 was passed to enable the Governor to do so by Proclamation.

No. 4.

This Ordinance had in view the carrying out of sentences of death by decapitation instead of by hanging. I have nothing to add to the recommendation of Mr. Dickson, and of the late Mr. Douglas, as to the advisability of effecting this change in the Penal Code; but I fully concur in the views expressed by them, and I believe the law would have had a most salutary effect on the criminal portion of the Indian population of Mauritius.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

No. 5.

No. 5.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir HARRY ST. GEORGE ORD, C.B., to the Earl GRANVILLE, K.G.

(No. 41.)

MY LORD, Government House, Singapore, February 10, 1869.

IN obedience to the instructions contained in the Despatch No. 219, 27 October 1868, of His Grace the late Secretary of State for the Colonies, I have the honour to forward a Report on the Blue Book of the Settlements for the year 1867 forwarded in my Despatch, No. 179, 28 August 1868.

2. I explained to His Grace in my Despatch, No. 252, of 21st December 1868, that I had refrained from making a Report on the Blue Book of the previous year, finding great difficulty in obtaining information respecting the past state of the Colony, whilst such as I possessed was given in a form which rendered its comparison with the present state of the Settlements extremely difficult, and the principal object of a Report on the Blue Book being to show by comparison with previous Reports in what respects the Colony was advancing or retrograding, I thought it better to defer making a Report until the completion of the Blue Book for 1868 should give me reliable grounds for such a comparison.

3. His Grace's instructions are, however, peremptory to make a Report, and I have the honour to state as regards the nine months of the year to which the book relates.

Taxes.—Fees.

4. There has been no alteration since the transfer in the taxes and fees levied in the Settlements, the former are principally received from excise duties on opium and spirits, and from a stamp duty, in fact of a revenue of about a million of dollars five eighths are derived from these two sources. The others are lands, rents, port dues, and fines, and the balance is made up of the re-imbursement of expense incurred on account of the Indian Convicts and from the Municipalities towards the support of the police.

Revenue and Expenditure.

5. These have been—

Revenue - - - -	£192,948
Expenditure - - - - -	183,783

There are no means of comparing this with the revenues of the preceding years, the accounts of the Indian Government not being kept in a form to admit of a comparison. There appears no doubt that there has been an increase in the revenue.

6. In addition to the foregoing there was received and appropriated by the municipality in the management of the towns at the three Settlements, and also in contributing to the support of the police

Revenue - - - -	£50,655
Expenditure - - - - -	46,413

Public Debt.

7. The only public debt is a small sum of 19,541*l.*, part of a sum of 42,500*l.* authorized to be taken from the deposits of Suitors in the Supreme Court, at an interest of from four to five per cent., for the purpose of meeting certain heavy charges entailed by the necessity of building a Government House and providing new steamers for the service of the Colony.

Military Contribution.

8. The Colony is to pay 59,300*l.* per annum for the cost of its military protection, but Her Majesty's Government does not appear to have decided finally what the force allotted for this purpose shall be.

Volunteers.

9. There is a small body of volunteers at Singapore consisting of a company of rifles which was raised on the outbreak of the mutiny in India in 1857 and was the first of the corps which that event called into existence.

Public Works.

10. The expenditure under this head has not been large and the principal efforts of the department have been directed to the building of the Government House, which is greatly needed, the Governor being at present lodged in a very small and incommodious private residence for which the high rent of 700*l.* per annum is paid.

Legislative.

11. Thirty-two Acts were passed during the session; some of the earlier made provision for alterations rendered necessary in consequence of the transfer in the adoption of the dollar currency in lieu of the rupee, and the mode of converting old currency into new. The Excise and Stamp Acts were amended, hackney carriages and passenger ships regulated, and an important measure called the "Preservation of the Peace Act" was passed for the purpose of enabling the Government to deal with cases of rioting arising out of the action of the Chinese secret societies.

Imports and Exports.

12. These amounted to—

Imports	£7,911,032
Exports	6,183,268
Total	£14,094,290

This would give an average total of each for the whole year of—

Imports	£7,729,085
Exports	9,088,780
And a grand total of	£17,617,865

From such return as we possess it would appear that the trade under the Indian Government was of late years larger than this. Taking the three last years given, and converting the rupees at two shillings sterling, we find—

	1863–64.	1864–65.	1865–66.
Imports	£8,520,555	£8,876,376	£9,700,195
Exports	8,325,371	9,693,941	9,924,088
Total	£16,845,926	£18,570,317	£19,624,283

I am unable to account for this result.

Shipping.

13. The return of shipping cleared from the Colony would also appear by comparison with those returns not to be increasing:—

	Tons.
It amounted for nine months to	664,635
Which for the year would represent	830,793
It was under the Indian Government 1863–64	761,670
" " " 1864–65	790,407
" " " 1865–66	908,410

This is not capable of explanation.

Crimes.

14. It must be admitted that crime is frequent amongst the Malay and Chinese population. In the case of the former it constantly takes the form of what is known as "gang robbery," when a party of natives meet by concert at night at the house of some person known to possess money and make a sudden attack, killing and wounding every one in the way until the house is cleared, when they plunder it, and as they are generally men from a different village or quarter, too often get off with their plunder undetected.

15. The Chinese are more addicted to robbery except when excited by hostile feelings against a different secret society, or hoey as they are called, when they break out into acts of great violence. During the month of August, George Town, Penang, was the scene of most violent riots arising from this cause and many lives were lost by both the rival societies, the Ghee Hins and the Toh-peh-Kongs, whilst great destruction of property was caused by fire and plundering.

16. Steps are being taken to deal with these outbreaks, but unless by the exercise of greater vigilance on the part of the police and an increase of this force, I do not see much probability of our being able to cope sufficiently with what may be termed the ordinary crime of the Settlements.

17. In obedience to the instructions in the Despatch of his Grace the Secretary of State, No. 241, 26 November 1868, I have the honour to forward a report by Lieut.-Governor Anson, Penang, on the Blue Book for 1867 for that Settlement.

18. I also enclose a minute by Captain Playfair, acting Lieut.-Governor of Malacca, on the Report on that Settlement which was furnished by Mr. Cairns directly to the late Secretary of State, together with a return showing the total annual amount received by the different magistrates in the Settlements in the way of salary, travelling allowance, fees, or under any other head, also the number of days each court sits, the distance of each court from head quarters or from the next court, the arrangement of the circuit and the number of cases heard thereat. His Grace's instructions limited this return to the magistrate at Malacca, but I have thought it better to supply the information in question for all the magistrates in the Settlements; this enables it to be seen at a glance what is the nature and extent of the duty they perform and the remuneration they receive for it.

19. His Grace's request to be supplied with information respecting the occupation of the Stadt House shall be complied with very shortly. I have before me a scheme by which I think it will be possible to turn this residence to good account and at very small expense. Mr. Cairns' suggestion respecting the conversion of the gaol into a residence for the Governor and Chief Justice on their visits is simply impracticable, so long as transmarine convicts are retained in the Settlement, and it would be a most unwise and extravagant waste of the public money to appropriate a building of this character to such a purpose even if it were not required as a place of confinement for prisoners.

20. His Grace states that he sees no reason why the expenses of Malacca should continually exceed its revenue, and desires me to report my view as to the steps which should be taken to equalize the revenue and expenditure. When I state that this has baffled the endeavours of the Government of India for many years past your Lordship will I trust not be surprised that I am unprepared to offer any solution of the question. The discrepancy between the revenue and expenditure of this Settlement has long engaged my attention and I hope to be in a position to address your Lordship on the matter at no very distant date.

21. I do not notice anything else in Mr. Cairns' report on which it seems necessary that I should address your lordship at length. His Grace justly observed that several of the matters Mr. Cairns brought under the notice of the Secretary of State should properly have formed in the first instance the subject of communications to the Governor, and had Mr. Cairns thought proper to express his views upon them to me I should readily have entered into the consideration of them with him.

22. I must add that I hold an entirely different opinion from Mr. Cairns as to the expediency of endeavouring to place the means of obtaining justice within the reach of the poor to as great an extent as is consistent with a reasonable economy. With this end I have during the last winter directed the magistrate at Malacca to increase the number of the stations at which he holds court, and it will be seen after a reasonable trial whether the views I entertain of the great boon that this will be to the people, and the extent to which it will be appreciated by them, views in which in which Acting Lieut.-Governor Playfair fully concurs, are borne out by the result, and also whether the additional expense is commensurate with the advantage gained. If the experiment proves successful I shall probably carry out a similar measure in Province Wellesley and possibly to some extent in Penang. The Island of Singapore is so small and the town so readily accessible that a measure of this sort is not required in the Settlement.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1 in No. 5.

No. 1,055.

Lieut.-Governor's Office.
Prince of Wales Island, Dec. 21, 1868.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith a Report on the Blue Book of this Settlement for the year 1867.

2. The transfer of the Settlement to the Colonial Government having taken place only on the 1st April, and having myself taken over charge of it from the Resident Councillor appointed under the Indian Government only on 8th June, together with the absence of Blue Books for former years, and the different method of arranging documents and returns under the late Government, render it impossible for me to furnish a comprehensive Report for this year.

I have, &c.
(Signed) A. E. H. ANSON,
Lieut.-Governor.

His Excellency the Governor, Straits Settlement.

REPORT ON BLUE BOOK FOR 1867.

Taxes, Duties, &c.

1. The principal taxes are those levied on opium, spirits, toddy, and pawn shops, all of which are farmed out. A tax is also levied by the municipality of 10 per cent. on all houses and 5 per cent. on all lands throughout the Settlement, about one half of which is paid into the Government Treasury to cover the cost of the police and magistrates' establishments. The amount paid by the municipality on this account during the year was 7,347*l.* 15*s.* 11¾*d.*

Revenue and Expenditure.

2. The revenue shown in the Blue Book return for 1867 is only for the nine months during which the Settlement has been under the Colonial Government. The return for 1866 is an average of nine months for that year. The financial year under the Indian Government commenced on the 1st April, and the alteration to 1st January in accordance with the colonial rule renders it impossible to make any comparison between the revenue of this and former years.

3. The chief sources of revenue are the farms which were let on 1st May at the following rates:—

	£	s.	d.
Opium Farm - - - -	20,017	10	0	per annum.
Spirit Farm - - - -	15,096	0	0	„
Toddy Farm - - - -	1,313	5	0	„
Pawnshop Farm - - -	2,524	10	0	„

The riots in August caused a reduction in the revenue from stamps, land, and fees of court.

Local Revenue.

4. The revenue of the municipality, which is derived from taxes levied throughout the whole Settlement, was 14,102*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.*, rather more than one half of which was, as has been already stated, paid to the Government on account of the police and magistrates' departments.

5 Out of this revenue the cost of the conservancy of George Town, the repairs to roads, and bridges, and waterworks in Prince of Wales Island, and the construction of ferry boats and their landing places in Province Wellesley has to be defrayed. The roads and bridges in Province Wellesley are constructed and repaired at the cost of Government.

Public Works.

6. In consequence of the transfer being about to take place very small sums were voted by the late Government under this heading for the year's expenditure. Only minor works have therefore been carried out.

Legislation.

7. The Legislative Council met twice in the Settlement after the riots and passed two Acts, viz.:—

No. 21. An Act to authorize a commission of inquiry into the origin and causes of the riots at Penang.

No. 22. An Act to indemnify officers of Government and other persons for proceedings during the recent riots in Penang.

Civil Establishments.

8. It is probable that the cost of these will before long be augmented in consequence of new appointments, of the general low rates of the salaries of the inferior class of office holders, and the increasing cost of living in the Settlement.

Pensions.

9. Amongst those to whom pensions are payable out of the revenues of the Settlement is the Rajah of Quedah. This pension was granted in 1801 to a predecessor of the present Rajah in return for his giving over the Island of Penang to the East India Company. The amount is 2,125*l.* per annum.

Population.

10. It is doubtful whether the figures representing the population of the Settlement which, as taken at the last census, is stated to have been 124,672 persons of both sexes, are to be relied on. But supposing them to be so as there is neither registration of births nor deaths in the Settlement, nor any account taken of the increase by immigration, it is impossible to give a fair estimate of the present population, but there is every reason to believe that it has been steadily increasing, and that the sexual disparity has been gradually decreasing.

Ecclesiastical.

11. The chaplain appointed under the Indian administration not having been relieved by a chaplain appointed under the Colonial Government has continued to minister to the Protestant community. The attendants at the Protestant church are estimated at 125, and those at the Roman Catholic church, over which a bishop presides, at from 600 to 700. The great portion of the population, including the Malays, are Mussulmans. There are also Chinese, Budhists, and Hindoos. Very little success has hitherto attended the labours of the missionaries. The Roman Catholics number amongst their congregations the Mulatto descendants of the early Portuguese settlers in the Straits.

Education.

12. But little has been done for the education of the general population. The number of scholars attending the schools under European instruction is as follows:—

	No. of Pupils.
Free school, with a grant in aid from Government of 255*l.* per annum	250 males.
School of the Chrétien Frères	150 „
Roman Catholic Orphanage	90 females.
Convent Boarding School for the better class	40 „
Mission School of the Plymouth Brethren, with a grant in aid from Government of 76*l.* 10*s.* per annum, since abandoned	61 males.

13. There are two Vernacular schools in Province Wellesley, and there is one in Prince of Wales Island, all of which are supported by Government, viz.:—

	No. of Pupils.
Bukit Tamboon, Province Wellesley	20 males.
Permatang Pow	20 „
Glugor, Prince of Wales Island	30 „

14. There is a number of small schools kept by Hajis, but little else is taught in them beyond reading Malay, and this only with the view of learning the Koran.

Moneys, &c.

15. The introduction of the Hong Kong dollar in place of the rupee has been effected and the half dollar, twenty, ten, and five cent. pieces are found to be a great convenience to the public and have been readily received into circulation.

Imports and Exports.

16. The imports from the United Kingdom figure at 284,383*l.*, and the exports at 488,544*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* The most considerable trade is carried on with Sumatra, the exports to which country are estimated at 1,576,970*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, and the imports therefrom at 308,042*l.* 18*s.* 0*d.* The imports and exports are steadily increasing.

Grants of Land.

17. The greater part of the land, and the best of it, has been disposed of, and unfortunately at so low a rate that in many instances it has been taken up by persons of such very limited means that they have been unable to do anything towards its improvement.

Gaols and Prisoners.

18. The construction and economy of the gaols admit of improvement. The number of transmarine convicts is decreasing, and it appears probable that in a few years there will be none left in gaol.

19. There are two gaols in Prince of Wales Island, one for transmarine convicts and for prisoners sentenced to the house of correction, the two classes of prisoners being located in separate parts of the same building. This gaol is under the charge of the assistant engineer, who also bears the title of superintendent of convicts. The other gaol is under the charge of the sheriff, and occupied by prisoners awaiting trial or under sentence of death, and by debtors.

20. There is a small prison at Butterworth, in Province Wellesley, for prisoners condemned by the Province Magistrate and for a few transmarine convicts employed at work on the roads.

21. The transmarine convicts, who are mostly from India, generally behave well, and many of those on tickets-of-leave form the most respectable portion of our Indian population.

Crime.

22. A great amount of crime preceded and was the accompaniment of the outbreak of the riots of August and swelled the criminal returns beyond their usual proportions.

Charitable Institutions.

23. The hospitals remained under the charge of the assistant surgeon of the Indian establishment. There are two general hospitals, viz., one in Prince of Wales Island and the other in Province Wellesley. The former is pretty well adapted to the requirements of the island, but is situated at an inconvenient distance from town for the removal to it of bad cases of sickness and cases of accident requiring immediate treatment. The Province Hospital will require alteration and extension when the new medical establishment of the Colony shall have been organized.

24. The daily average number of patients in the hospitals during the year was as under:—

General Hospital, Prince of Wales Island - - -	42
Do. Province Wellesley - -	14
Transmarine Convict Hospital, Prince of Wales Island -	24
Do. Do. Province Wellesley -	7
House of Correction Hospital - - -	8
Colonial Jail Hospital - - - -	2

25. Great improvement is needed in the interior arrangements of the lunatic asylum where all classes of patients are at present domiciled in one room, which from its construction might more properly be designated a cage. The daily average number of patients during the year has been 38.

26. The poor house is under the control of a society named the Anti-Mendicity Society, and is supported by the voluntary contributions of its members. The efforts of the society are insufficient to meet the requirements of the poor of the Settlement, and the society's establishment and the arrangements connected with it are open to great improvement. The daily average number of inmates has been 80.

27. The orphanage at the convent, supported by the exertions and under the control of the sisters of charity, is a very well conducted and useful institution.

General Remarks.

28. The riots which had for some time been fomenting and which burst forth in August, not only put a temporary check upon business but caused loss to the whole mercantile community, and it is to be feared in many instances poverty and suffering to families and individuals.

29. It is, however, to be hoped that the measures taken on this occasion will prove efficacious in preventing any future outbreak. There can be no doubt that the periodical disturbances which have occurred owing to the quarrels of the secret societies have been a great drawback to the advancement of the Settlement, and if their recurrence be not provided against they may lead to its ruin. In other respects the Settlement has been prosperous.

(Signed) A. E. H. ANSON,
Lieut.-Governor.

Enclosure 2 in No. 5.

CAPTAIN PLAYFAIR'S REPORT.

After perusal of the accompanying report I beg to offer a few remarks on the following paragraphs:—

Para. 11. With regard to the military establishment, which is at the lowest nominal state at which I should ever wish to see it, formerly there was one third of a company of artillery besides two companies of infantry, this was withdrawn some years ago, and the infantry reduced to its present small number which does not admit of the men having, according to regulation, four nights in bed, and in the event of their services being required on an emergency there would not be more than about 25 men available. Mr. Cairns admits that we live in the midst of unscrupulous people in the surrounding states, who would take advantage of any symptom of weakness on our part; he notes also the dangerous element of the numerous secret societies here, not entirely confined to the Chinese; it seems strange that Mr. Cairns should suggest a reduction of the already small military force, having only one officer with it. I agree with him on one point, that it would be undesirable to have the military composed of Malays such as the "Ceylon Rifles."

Para. 12. The accompanying return shows the work performed in the magistrate's court during the last year. My experience of the duties of this office causes me to come to a different conclusion from Mr. Cairns. The work may occasionally be got through in two or three hours, but in my time such was the exception. In comparing the magistrate's salary with that of other officers whose position is less important and responsibility not so great, I am of opinion that he would be underpaid with 500*l.*, besides he is the responsible person when the Lieut.-Governor is absent in the country, and performs any immediate duty requiring attention during the Lieut.-Governor's absence. I consider that the magistrate's work and position perfectly justify his present salary. Respecting the country courts, I certainly am in favour of upholding them, I look upon them as of vast importance to the people. Mr. Cairns allows that they were necessary when there were gangs of Chinese at the tin mines, but the object of these courts were not to render justice to the miners only but to be of advantage to the general population; the primary object is that the magistrate should go amongst the people, hearing and settling disputes, &c., instead of these people having to leave their houses and come long distances in search of justice; at the same time, I admit, that unless the magistrate himself can speak the language to these people the advantage we seek to afford them is wholly lost, as being unaccustomed to the town courts, where interpreters are used, they are suspicious and distrustful of any interpretation, therefore, instead of reducing the magistrate's pay, I would recommend that he be called upon to pass an examination in the colloquial, in order to be able to talk to these country people; I should say that in six months this could easily be accomplished.

Para. 16. Here Mr. Cairns mentions that a small fee is imposed on the shipping on account of port clearances, this is a mistake as no charge has ever been made on this account.

Para. 29. I am not aware that there is any question at present of withdrawing the transmarine convicts, and as long as they are here the whole of the existing accommodation is required, and the present system of management indespensable; however, arrangements are at present being made for accommodating his Excellency the Governor or his Honour the Chief Justice in the Stadt House, during their periodical visits, that building being allotted at the same time as the permanent residence of the Lieut.-Governor.

Paras. 32 and 33. I forward a distribution return of convict orderlies as they exist at present, but as there is a general complaint that convicts are not in sufficient numbers available for municipal roads in towns, so many being employed on the country roads, I agree with Mr. Cairns, that the orderlies should all be withdrawn from private houses, as printed in italic in the return, making 12 available, leaving only those employed as punkah pullers in public offices. The town roads are much in want of thorough repairs.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

Para. 45. The Survey Department being one of the most important in this Settlement I consider that every effort should be made to place it on an efficient footing; at present work proceeds very slowly. An account of the reduced state of the establishment, consequent on the sickness and death of several of the subordinates, considering that our revenue is entirely controlled by the survey, I would recommend that every inducement be held forth to secure efficient hands to keep up this department to its full strength.

Para. 53. I entirely concur with Mr. Cairns in his remarks about gambling, the most strenuous efforts of the authorities to suppress this vice have hitherto failed and will I fear always prove perfectly useless owing to the native police being unable to resist the temptation of bribes. After 12 years experience, since the Act of 1856 was passed, seeing that the evil has not lessened, I would recommend that as we are unable to suppress it, we ought to control it by licensing a farm. I have known instances of people being brought up for gambling several times being fined the highest amounts; they simply pay the fine and resume the same course the next day.

Para. 55. I cannot agree with the recommendation of a cadet being appointed here, the work in the marine and post offices is very trifling and is carried on satisfactorily at present by the clerks employed. With regard to the appointment of deputy commissioner it was recommended as far back as 1859 that he should be invested with small magisterial powers to settle minor cases and control the collection of the land revenue, these powers however have never been granted to him. I agree so far with Mr. Cairns that a good European inspector is all that is required for the police in town, but considering the number of police in the country and the distances of the stations round the boundary, it is also requisite that some supervision be had over them, and it is impossible that one inspector could do all. Therefore, instead of doing away with the deputy commissioner I would suggest that the power originally recommended be granted to him. I admit it would be a good school for training a cadet, but until by years and experience he gained the knowledge required, and could be entrusted with magisterial powers, I consider his services would be superfluous here.

MEMORANDUM.

The employment of convicts in any menial capacity has always been contrary to the rules of the prison department in the Straits, those few prisoners who have been employed at the Government house, the Lieut.-Governor's houses and the houses of the Comptroller and his officers, are on duty chiefly as messengers and punkah pullers, and on the latter case particularly to be ready to call at night, in the event of anything of importance taking place in the convict prison. Such men are "special service men" selected for the purpose on good behaviour, and are as much on duty as orderlies in the military service. If the late Lieut.-Governor of Malacca made use of them in any other capacity, he probably was not aware of the convict regulations on the subject.

The only exception to this rule is made in the case of warders who reside within the walls of the prison, who are allowed one of these "special men" to cook their meals; this is not unusual in England, and it has here the advantage of keeping the prison free from strange servants, who would doubtless seek opportunity to aid in the escape of their fellow countrymen.

I see no sufficient reason to alter the present arrangement, except on the score of there being a paucity of convicts, as stated by Captain Playfair, but as transportation to the Straits has ceased, this is an expected contingency, and to strengthen the road gangs by removing men from another necessary service would not appear to me to be judicious.

No. 6.

No. 6.

COPY of a LETTER from Lieutenant-Governor CAIRNS to Sir FREDERIC ROGERS, Bart.

SIR, London, October 31, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to forward the information required by your letter of the 28th instant, in elucidation of the Blue Book Returns for 1867.

I could have wished that it had been less imperfect, but not having been made aware that a covering letter, of the nature of a special report, ought to accompany the returns, or, in other words, that the report of the Governor would not be deemed sufficient as a resumé of the condition of the three Settlements, I contented myself with embodying in the returns themselves such observations for his Excellency's guidance as were suggested by the different headings which I was called upon to fill up.

Being now without the opportunity of consulting my office records, I can only trust that due allowance will be made for the necessarily hasty and general nature of this report.

Revenue and Expenditure.

1. During the first nine months of the existence of the Straits Settlements as a Crown Colony, i.e., from the 1st of April to the 31st December 1867, the revenue of those Settlements has amounted to 192,948*l.* 5*s.* 4½*d.* and the expenditure to 183,783*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*; thus leaving a satisfactory surplus, which I trust may be found to indicate buoyancy and promise for the future.

2. I regret that the figures representing the total contribution of Malacca to the general revenue, as well as its local expenditure, are not at this moment available; but they would serve to show that the latter exceeds the former by several thousand pounds, and that the oldest of the Settlements is the poorest.

3. This is to be traced to various causes, and mainly to its situation, which is too far removed from the convenient calling places of European commerce, and indeed unsuited by the natural obstacle of its shallow roadstead as a place of resort for merchant vessels of any considerable tonnage.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

4. Had Singapore not passed out of Native hands it might have fared better with this fine old city, still selected as it is by the Straits Chinese as an agreeable retreat from business when once they have accumulated wealth at Singapore, but not as a money-making place, or in the morning of their shrewd and stirring life.

5. Its permanent revenue is, therefore, mainly derived from its land rents and sales, the former producing 1,255*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* in 1867, and the latter 157*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* To these figures must be added the survey fees, amounting to 203*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*, while further items of receipt from the same source are described as tenths on commuted lands, tenths on uncommuted lands, town quitrents, fees on the issue of leases, transfer registration, and search fees, and notice and attachment fees (in the case of defaulters).

6. I have purposely given priority to the land revenue, as being a permanent and natural source of income to the State; but first in order of actual pecuniary profit is the Opium and Spirit Farm, sold together for a short term of years, and of which the annual yield is 6,502*l.* 10*s.* The Toddy and Baang Farm produced 133*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and the other farms the following sums:—

	£	s.	d.
Tin farm	119	6	4
Pawnbrokers' licences	78	4	0
Timber farm	49	18	9
Brick-kilns	41	17	3
Coral and granite	11	1	0

7. It does not seem necessary to specify in this place the other headings, which are the same, with few exceptions, in the three Settlements; nor am I able to present a comparative statement as a test of the elasticity of the revenue, any tabular account such as should supply this information not having been framed in the public offices prior to their transfer from the Indian to the Colonial Department. It is my belief, however, that in future years, if we except such seasons of drought as occasionally visit the plains of Malacca, the increase of the land revenue will be steadily progressive. Irrigation works, such as we could afford to execute, may not, it is true, do much for so flat a country as spreads far into the interior with but few and shallow streams, and still rarer intervals of rising ground; but there is said to be a noticeable increase of cultivation in recent years, and the Chinese are clearing the jungles where Padi has never before been tried.

8. I turn now to the expenditure for the year, the particulars being as follows:

	£	s.	d.
Civil establishment	6,623	10	10
Contingent expenditure	893	10	7
Judicial establishment	1,502	13	6
Contingent expenditure	91	12	5
Ecclesiastical establishment	363	19	0
Contingent expenditure	10	5	10
Miscellaneous expenditure	15,715	1	8
Pensions	418	5	6
Making a total of	£25,618	19	4

9. This was exclusive of the cost of the military establishment, for which no separate apportionment is made from the local revenue. The only note-worthy items are the two last; the miscellaneous expenditure, which includes grants to schools, charitable allowances, grant to the pauper and leper hospitals, convict hospital charges, money allowance and rations to the convict department, police charges, local and sheriff's gaol charges, transport, outlay upon works and buildings, roads, streets, and bridges, postal services, fuel for Government steamers, up-keep of lighthouses, harbour department exclusive of establishments, &c., and the payment of pensions, which in two cases are political, Sultan Ali, late Sultan of Johore, receiving an annual allowance of 433*l.* 10*s.*, and Syed Suban, a petty border chief, 231*l.* 16*s.* 4¾*d.*, both for services rendered or advantages granted to the British Government in former years. An old Chinaman, once the recognized head of his community, when it was the practice of the Dutch to select some individual as the responsible representative of his countrymen, enjoys, by agreement, a superannuation allowance of 42*l.* 8*s.* 1½*d.*; and there are a few pensions drawn by the police, in no case exceeding 9*l.* per annum.

Local Revenues.

10. The Municipality of Malacca is not wealthy; its receipts for the nine months amounted to 2,707*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.* and its expenditure to 2,699*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.* Its funds are derived from a tax upon lands situated within a four-mile radius, houses, horses, carriages, carts, and a few other items. It is called upon to defray a large part of the cost of the police, with the expenses of the Commissioners' establishment, &c., but, on the other hand, it has hitherto been supplied with prison labour for cleansing the town, and other municipal purposes, without being pressed for payment, although, as a matter of account, it has been debited in the usual way. There is reason to hope that with the growth of material prosperity within the Settlement, which is greatly encouraged at present by large speculations in tapioca, the number of tiled houses, horses, carts, and vehicles of every description, will steadily increase, to the enrichment of the municipality and consequent improvement of the streets and bye-roads in their charge. As things are, the scavenging is done very well, and the better classes are becoming impressed with the advantage of unchoked drains and running water, where stagnation and filth were the rule before.

Military Establishment and Expenditure.

11. Malacca might properly be made a subaltern's command, the force under him to consist of one company of Madras Sepoys. The cost of such an establishment could not be great, although it must be admitted that the local revenue is not adequate to defray it. The case, however, is clearly one in which the Colony as a whole may, for its own advantage and in support of its prestige, be called upon to provide for the expenditure at each of the three Settlements. It is to be borne in mind that we, part-owners of the peninsula, live in the midst of unscrupulous and seething native states, many of them utterly barbarous, where the will of the strongest is the only recognized law, and with whom as neighbours any symptom of weakness on our part would immediately lead to piratical incursions on theirs. With this knowledge and conviction, I would not wholly denude the settlement of a military force. Then as to the question of race, the natives are Malays; all the petty rajahs upon our borders are Malays. Malay secret societies either exist by themselves or are affiliated to the Chinese hoeys. Malay fanaticism is wild, uncalculating, and of rapid growth, and the temptations which chiefs of their own blood and faith might offer would probably be found to tell with fatal effect on their fidelity. I must therefore strongly object to any scheme by which the garrison should be composed of Malays, whether raised as a local force or brought from Ceylon; indeed, rather than introduce such a dangerous element, I should prefer that the military were altogether withdrawn, and their place taken by a strong police force, properly drilled and equipped, to consist of the same class of men as the Sepoys recruited at Madras or in the Punjaub, our present Malay police being of course simultaneously disbanded.

Magistrate's Courts.

12. The business in the minor courts is very light, seldom occupying the magistrate longer than from three to four hours daily. Country courts are held once a month at four and recently five small stations, at distances from Malacca varying from twelve to twenty-one miles; but the cases coming before them are few and unimportant, and in my opinion scarcely justify the expenditure on account of the magistrate's travelling allowance and the gratuity to his interpreter. When tin mining was profitable and brought large gangs of Chinese into the district, a country court was a real advantage to the neighbourhood, procuring speedy justice to be done between man and man, but this condition of things has passed away. In any revision of the establishments, I should be disposed to recommend the reduction of the magistrate and commissioner's salary from 750*l.*, its present amount, to 500*l.* per annum, which would be an adequate return for the duties he is called upon to perform.

Imports and Exports.

13. The return of the Marine or Harbour Department, showing the value of the imports and exports for 1867, has been incorporated in the Blue Book with that framed by the Registrar of Imports and Exports at Singapore. The trade is mainly a coasting trade, carried on by means of schooners and other small craft plying between this port and Singapore, occasionally visiting Penang and the Dutch and Malayan territories within and around the Straits. Two small merchant steamers belonging to Chinese firms are now on the Singapore line, bringing specie and Chinese goods to Malacca, and taking away full cargoes of tin, tapioca, fruit, poultry, gambier, blachang (a preparation of shrimps) tiles, Sumatra ponies, rice, dried fish, and other produce either of this Settlement, as in the case of the tapioca, fruit, and poultry, or of places beyond it whence it is brought for shipment. Tin no longer attracts any attention as a local product, but considerable quantities of the metal are shipped here from the adjoining states.

14. The port is a free one, but transhipments to the native territories are generally subjected, on being landed there, to a heavy and capricious black mail. Ammunition is largely purchased in Singapore for the border states, and our local traders are not slow to take advantage of any unusual commotion, to throw in supplies of gunpowder and other munitions of war, a disposition which it has sometimes been my duty to endeavour to keep within bounds.

Shipping.

15. The tonnage of vessels entered at Malacca (the only port at the Settlement) during 1867 was 68,989, of which 494 British vessels represented a tonnage of 62,302, with crews amounting to 9,295, and 125 Foreign vessels a tonnage of 6,687, with crews of 1,347. Of British vessels 50 entered in ballast, their tonnage being 14,973, and of Foreign the number was 23 and the tonnage 1,210. Of vessels cleared the tonnage was 71,120, of which British was 64,760 tons and Foreign 6,360. The number of British vessels was returned at 655, with crews of 11,160, and of Foreign 181 vessels (mostly Dutch and Malayan), with crews of 1,782. Of the total number of vessels cleared 149 were in ballast, representing a tonnage of 14,929 tons.

16. The only charges imposed upon shipping are small fees on account of the port clearance of each vessel, and what are termed the Straits Lights dues at so much a ton, and according to distance, being for the upkeep of the lighthouses and light ship, of which two are off the coast of Malacca (Cape Rachado lighthouse and the "Torch.")

Population.

17. According to the most reliable estimate, the population of Malacca numbers 36,023 males and 31,244 females of all races. The coloured population is set down at 34,578 males and 30,041 females, and the whites (many of whom, however, have some admixture of native blood) are returned at 1,445 males and 1,203 females, making a grand total of 67,267 souls, exclusive of military and transmarine convicts, of which last the number at Malacca is 686. The territory being estimated to have an area of 658 square miles, the population to the square mile would be about 102.

18. It has hitherto been found impossible to ascertain the number of births and marriages occurring among the natives, both Malays and Chinese keeping no record of such events, and rather resenting any interference in this respect. The total deaths obtained from the mortuary returns furnished by the police give the figures 986 for all races. Among the Christians of different sects (the Roman Catholics claiming a great majority) the births are returned at 80, and the marriages at 28. The figures in the corresponding returns for Singapore and Penang are—

Singapore.		Penang.
Births - -	63	Births - -	59
Marriages -	18	Marriages -	29

But at those settlements only the Christian death-rate is given.

19. Of the population of Malacca quite two-thirds are engaged at the crop season in agricultural pursuits, but many even of these, and some of them natives of the far inland kampongs or hamlets, are occupied in sea-fishing at other times of the year.

20. The Chinese are the chief commercial men of the town, but they also own, or rent upon twenty year leases, large tracts of land suitable for tapioca and other cultivation, while not a few of them farm patches of sugar cane and vegetables, turning their speculation to the best account.

21. The importance of a correct census being taken as soon but as judiciously as possible, it is scarcely necessary for me here to urge. Until the numbering of the people shall have been satisfactorily accomplished, we can but imperfectly feel our way, or estimate our duties, rights, and powers. We must, however, remember that any unusual movement of this kind is apt to suggest suspicion to the ignorant Asiatic mind; as an instance of the reasoning of which I may mention that when, in framing statistics for the Blue Book of the past year, I called upon the punghulus, or headmen, for a return of the cattle and other live stock within the Settlement, the poor villagers, who could see no motive for such a proceeding but a pretext for taxing their flocks and herds, drove their goats into town in large numbers to effect an immediate sale.

22. Of the native or coloured races the great numerical preponderance is with the Malays. Next come the Chinese, many of whom have a semi-Malayan origin, derived through six or more resident generations. Third in importance are the Tamils, or "Klings," also in great part native born, and there are a few Bugis, Arabs, and wild forest tribes known as Mantras, Jaccouns, and Orang Huban, with a sprinkling of islanders from the surrounding states.

Immigration.

23. There is not at present any noticeable immigration from other parts of the Peninsular or from the Islands, although life and property are but little respected there, and taxation scarcely felt within our limits. The Malay is a wild man and prefers a wild life among his people, with the recurring excitement of a perfectly unjustifiable foray and the attraction of spoil to the quiet of a village patrolled by the police. A few Chinese arrive yearly at Malacca, but their numbers are balanced by the departure of those of their countrymen who may have saved a little money as house servants or estate coolies, and who wish to carry their savings to their native land.

Education.

24. There are ten vernacular schools (one of which is Tamil), supported by Government; one superior English school, to which the Government largely contributes; three Roman Catholic mission schools, partly supported by Government and partly dependent on private subscriptions; two Roman Catholic mission schools without any Government grant, and two private schools (but their number is always varying) unconnected with State patronage or any religious body. Within the year it was my reluctant duty to have to recommend that the only Female Protestant School in the Settlement should have the Government grant withheld, as no longer accomplishing any useful purpose. The schoolmistress, although a well-intentioned person, had proved herself unfitted for the proper management of such an institution, and the public had ceased to support her, or to seek instruction for their children at her hands. I am not without hope that in a short time some new arrangement, by which the services of a competent instructress may be secured, may enable me to apply for a renewal of the grant, not only to the Government but to the Church Missionary Society, which (as well as the London Mission) had assisted in creating and maintaining the school.

25. The Boy's English School, also known as the Free School, is now in good hands, and will, I fully expect, attain to increasing popularity among the Chinese, who are already liberal subscribers to its funds. Poor boys are taught without charge, except for books, and for other children a very small monthly charge is made. I have adopted the course of placing several respectable Chinese merchants on the managing committee, of which I am ex-officio president, and of presiding at a monthly visitation of the school, when a partial examination is held. Great care is taken that the education imparted shall be purely secular, and I am glad to say that the strictness with which I have enforced this essential rule has led to an increased attendance of Tamil and Mussulman pupils. The Roman Catholic schools (many of the Free School boys are Catholics) are mainly attended by infants and young children, two being for little girls, and all being well conducted and accomplishing satisfactory results. I visit these institutions with the indefatigable Mission Fathers, whose whole lives are devoted to doing good. Their Mantra or Jaccoun Mission has already civilized and even Christianized many poor degraded creatures (not Mahomedans) of the wildest forest tribes; thanks, in the main, to the life-long zeal and tact of the Reverend Father Borie, a Frenchman, and the founder of what may truly be called a church in the wilderness—a church and a school, for in this instance they are inseparably connected.

26. The vernacular schools give instruction in reading and writing, with, occasionally, a little rudimentary arithmetic. The Koràn is allowed to be used as a reading book for the Malays, and in my opinion wisely, as any attempt to discourage its use would attach suspicion to our motives and perhaps result in the removal of all the boys.

27. The police now attend these schools, and if an inspector of education were appointed, who should visit periodically these and similar institutions throughout the Straits, a great improvement would early follow, both in the nature of the instruction imparted and in the qualifications of the gurus or teachers, who, as a rule, are themselves sadly in want of more light.

28. When a Malay youth has learned to intone his Koràn, which he often does without any clear conception of its meaning, and to write a letter, he is generally taken away from school to be married, or to help in the field; and from that moment literature and he have parted company for ever.

Gaols and Prisons.

29. There are three such buildings in Malacca, consisting of Her Majesty's, or, as it is often called, the Sheriff's Gaol, the Convict Gaol, and the House of Correction, and all situated within the town. They are kept in the most admirable order, but the time must soon come when the necessity for so much gaol accommodation will no longer exist. As the Indian convicts are likely to be returned, and as the local convicts are but few in number, I should propose to convert Her Majesty's gaol, which is a spacious modern building and well placed, into a suitable temporary residence for his Excellency the Governor and the Judge of the Supreme Court, thus leaving the upper portion of the Stadt House (the lower rooms are occupied by almost all the public departments as offices, and the Lieutenant-Governor's office is here) for the Lieutenant-Governor, who is at present debarred the use of the Government House, for the reason that it is required for the Governor during one month in each year, and for the Judge during another.

30. There are seven wards in the local convict gaol, or House of Correction, and three in the gaol for transmarine convicts. These prisons, as well as the Sheriff's Gaol, have been visited by me at irregular intervals, and without notice given, and I have never had reason to find fault. The only defect is the want of a female attendant, in the rare event of a female prisoner being in custody. On such occasions a woman ought to be hired, but her services need not be of a permanent nature.

31. It should not be overlooked, in a report of this kind, that to the ample supply of transmarine convict labour Malacca owes the creation, extension, and up-keep of most of its road communications, the construction of its bridges, police stations, and other public works and buildings, and that when this supply dies out, or is cut off, hired labour will have to take its place.

32. It has also been the practice to attach convicts to the various public departments and institutions, as watchmen, assistants, or orderlies. Thus, six such messengers attend at the Lieutenant-Governor's house and office, three are told off for the police magistrate, three for the assistant engineer and assistant superintendent of convicts, two for the assistant surgeon, one as punkah puller at the Supreme Court, twelve as field assistants in the Survey Department, three as domestics in the Stadt House, four as Stadt House gardeners, two for the Sheriff's Gaol, five as signallers at the flag-staff, four as attendants at the burial ground, eight as district bungalow keepers, four at Cape Rachado lighthouse, one at the Boys' Free School (as sweeper), three at the Government timber store, two at the Pauper Hospital, two with the superintendent of artificers, while the municipality has been given as many as 30 when the supply of local prisoners has proved insufficient.

33. When transmarine convicts cease to arrive, or are withdrawn, provision must be made for the employment of free labour in the Survey Department, at the flag-staff, and lighthouse, and by the municipality; but I am of opinion that even now a beginning should be made, by reducing the number attached to the Lieutenant-Governor's office, and by wholly withdrawing all such assistants or orderlies from the other departments (with the exceptions stated above). Invalids might still be employed in the Stadt House grounds, but their number should be restricted to three.

34. There are eight convict working parties, each consisting of from 22 to 59 men, with convict overseers, permanently located in the country districts, and employed in the repair of the bridges, and of upwards of 200 miles of admirably kept roads and paths, while smaller bodies of men are told off for special duties, such as clearing the rivers of drift and weeds, guarding the Anicut—an irrigation work at Gadhi, supplying timber for the Government lime kiln, burning charcoal, and quarrying coral; or, as artificers or warders, are engaged within the gaol.

35. The disease to which the convicts are most liable is a type of low fever, known as jungle fever, and contracted in unhealthy parts of the interior. As soon as reported sick, they are at once removed to the hospital in town.

36. Attempts to escape are of rare occurrence, and still more rarely successful. The discipline is by no means severe, and the system of promoting good-conduct men to be warders and overseers has produced the most satisfactory results; thus, all the gaol guards are convicts, and one European superintendent is found to suffice.

Police Force.

37. The police force consists of a total strength of 202 men, including a deputy commissioner, an European inspector, eight sergeant-majors, five corporals, 15 lance corporals, and 172 constables of various grades. There are six town stations, and 16 beyond the town limits, those upon the frontier, where the men are better paid, answering the purposes of preventing raids upon our territory, and of giving timely notice of any unusual disturbances across the border. The men wear a neat uniform procured from England, and are now being properly drilled. All ranks pay a small contribution towards a police pension fund, but Malays are so restless, so impatient of discipline, and so much attached to their native village, that it is quite the exception when they can be induced to remain in the force for any length of time. They will not enlist, it is found, for long periods, only a few for more than three years; but as they all marry early, and it is proposed to build small barracks for married men at each of the more distant stations, I am hopeful that we may gradually increase the popularity of the service.

Charitable Institutions.

38. The Paupers Hospital is situated in the centre of the town, but apart from the shops and dwellings. It provides ample accommodation for all the wants of the place. About 25 cases are generally in the wards, the greater number being Chinese, who suffer chiefly from skin diseases of an aggravated character, induced it is supposed partly by poor and unwholesome diet, by opium smoking, and partly by an excessive addiction to fresh pork. This and the Leper Hospital, built on an island at some distance from the town, are in receipt of an allowance from Government, but depend also on public charity for support.

39. The number of lepers in residence on the island of Pulo Serimbon, all being free to go or stay, has been 18 during the year, and every attention was paid to their wants and even comforts. There are, however, several lepers on the mainland who prefer to lead a mendicant's life, one of them having to my knowledge a wife, and, I regret to say, a family in the town.

Government Houses and Buildings.

40. These buildings are all in satisfactory order. The Stadt House has been recently altered and partly re-furnished. There is a good garden attached, and with its fine grounds, open site, and commanding view, this old Dutch edifice is every way superior to any of the other residences at Malacca.

41. The powder magazine on the hill above it is at once an eyesore and an ever-present danger. I lost no time in reporting the matter, and steps are being taken not only for the removal of the large amount of military powder in store, but for the construction of a civil powder magazine (to be used by the traders) on a site in the roadstead remote from any dwelling.

42. A new jetty of a rough but useful design was constructed at my suggestion in the present year (1867). At low water the tide recedes so far that even small row boats cannot approach the land, but one may always land or embark at the jetty stairs, although mail* steamers and other large vessels must anchor at a distance of two miles from the shore.

General Observations.

43. It is computed that there are 91,000 acres of cultivated land within the Settlement, and 330,120 acres, mainly consisting of brushwood and forest, which are not in cultivation. Of the cultivated land 53,700 acres are believed to be laid down in Padi (it is said that the yield meets only one third of the consumption,) 33,950 acres in fruit patches or gardens (mainly cocoanut, mangosteen, durian, duku, rambutan, and mata-kuching), 10,000 in tapioca (but this last which is at present a very paying crop, is fast increasing), and the remainder in sugar cane, vegetables, and other tropical garden produce.

44. Figures are necessarily only approximative where a survey has yet to be made, and the survey staff at Malacca is by no means equal to the task before it, if the extent of the cultivated lands is to be correctly ascertained within any reasonable term of years.

45. As the future prosperity of this non-mercantile Settlement must almost entirely depend on its agricultural productiveness, it is greatly to be desired that the Survey Department should be temporarily enlarged, and its labours quickened and regulated by the presence of the Surveyor General, an officer of much experience, but whose services would assuredly be more valuable to the Colony were he more constantly detached from Singapore.

46. Under a recent enactment, all squatters or occupiers of Crown lands at Malacca are required to take leases for the same, with a view to uniformity of tenure, simplicity in the mode of collecting the revenue, and the prevention of encroachments or other abuses. They are given the option of purchasing their holdings in fee simple, either alternative presupposing the survey of all such lands, which is still very far from complete.

* The British India Steam Navigation Company have a contract with the Colony for carrying the India mails monthly between the three Settlements and Calcutta.

47. The squatters are the sub-tenants, or resident cultivators, of the lands which were surrendered to the East India Company by the Dutch proprietors in the years 1828 and 1829. Until 1838 these sub-tenants paid tenths in kind to the Government, but in that year money payments at a fixed rate, founded on an exceedingly moderate estimate of the value of the tenth, were introduced by means of commutation deeds having 20 years to run. In these papers the boundaries and acreage of the land were roughly described, but not upon the basis of a survey. The acceptance, however, of this arrangement was left optional with the people, to whom it might well have commended itself as calculated to save them from extortion and many preferred the old uncertain system of annual valuation and payment in kind, as continued from the Dutch, and probably adopted by these last from an Eastern usage of very ancient date. When the term of these deeds expired a few were renewed for short periods, but the mass of the cultivators reverted from choice to the system of an annual assessment of the Government share, and this share was taken in money or kind, as might best suit their convenience at the time.

48. In the year just closed commutation by means of a yearly money payment was declared to be compulsory at a fixed valuation, as follows:—Upon all lands situated within two miles of the town, 2*s.* 1½*d.* per acre per annum; within four miles, 1*s.* 10½*d.*, and beyond four miles, 1*s.* 0½*d.*, such lands to be taken on lease as before stated.

The terms upon which they might be purchased were also to be regulated by their distance from Malacca: If within two miles of the town radius, the price was to be 1*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* per acre; within four miles, 1*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, and beyond that distance, 12*s.* 9*d.*

49. The number of leases taken in 1867 was 324, and of lands sold in fee simple, 15, representing in the former case an acreage of ac. 6,922, rs. 3, ps. 26, and in the latter of ac. 152, rs. 3, ps. 34.

50. On my arrival in the Settlement I found that the Nanning Division (our latest and poorest acquisition) was hopelessly in arrear with the payment of tithes on account of the old commutation deeds, that all trace of many of the defaulters had been lost; that many of the lots or holdings, as described in the deeds, were wholly indistinguishable, and that prosecutions were proceeding or impending against numbers of poor thriftless people for the recovery of a debt which most of them were ignorant of having incurred. The arrears being due by some deceased relation, or not improbably by some unknown individual whom they may have unwittingly succeeded in the cultivation of a field or garden that had lain waste and unclaimed for years.

51. This state of things I was enabled to bring to an end by offering easy terms in all cases, and in some, where a palpable injustice was being done, or where the absolute penury of the debtor was clearly established, by abandoning all further proceedings.

52. This concession to the people was balanced, in a financial sense, by a modification of the commutation order above referred to, which had directed that a fixed rate of assessment should henceforth be levied in the case of all lands, of whatever description, held or to be held upon lease within the Settlement. As the crops grown upon high lands, and in fruit gardens, which abound at Malacca, are greatly more valuable than, acre for acre, crops of grain, I obtained the Governor's consent to a revised regulation, whereby it was made discretionary on the part of the Lieut.-Governor, to assess such high lands or gardens, either at the rates named in the recent order, or according to the estimated value of the one-tenth of the produce; and by this means, which is accepted as a perfectly fair arrangement, and which in practice is found to work well, the value of the Government interest in such lands has in many instances been considerably raised.

Gambling and other Offences.

53. The Malays and Chinese are not litigious like the different coloured races inhabiting Ceylon, nor are crimes of violence prevalent amongst them, although, when assaults are committed, the results are too often serious from the frequency with which the kris is drawn or the parang used, and without one or other of these weapons but few of the inhabitants stir abroad. Cattle stealing is a crime of rare occurrence, while charges connected with petty larcenies by the lowest class of Chinese are common. On the other hand a passion for gambling pervades all classes. Of the Chinese it may be said to be the national pastime, and the only result of our efforts to make it criminal is the thorough demoralization of the police, who extort large amounts as hush money from the players and then become their confederates and scouts. If, what is rare, an information for gambling be laid by some constable in good faith, the explanation of his zeal may be found in the insufficiency of the bribe.

54. These are facts within my daily experience, and I submit that the only way to deal with them would be to recognize and control the evil by imposing a tax upon what must be termed the hereditary propensity of a large and certainly the most important section of the community; to legalize, in short, under proper restriction, what we only aggravate in the attempt to prohibit.

Revision of Establishments.

55. I will conclude with the suggestion that a writer or cadet should be attached to the Lieut.-Governor's office to whom might be entrusted the direct supervision of the Harbour, Police, and Post Office Departments, and who might also be appointed Assistant Collector of Revenue with magisterial powers.

56. By this arrangement the Marine Office, the duties of which are at present very imperfectly performed by a clerk, would be placed on a footing of efficiency without additional expense, and a saving of at least 300*l.* a year would result from the abolition of the office of paid Deputy Commissioner of Police, an appointment which, with a good European Inspector such as we now possess and should always require, is wholly superfluous at Malacca. The monthly circuit of the country courts which are held in the police stations or an adjoining bungalow might also be made by the additional magistrate in the course of his visits to the rural police, while his attention would be given to revenue matters and land questions during his progress through the various districts. No better means could be proposed for his becoming rapidly and thoroughly acquainted with the Malay character and language, and his salary might be limited, as in Ceylon, to 200*l.* a year as writer, with an additional allowance of 100*l.* and his travelling expenses until he had passed the required examinations.

Downing Street.

SIR, Malacca, January 23, 1869.

IN forwarding the enclosed return, I have the honour to state, for the information of his Excellency the Governor, that the Police Court and Court of Requests is open from 10 to 4, five days in the week, at Malacca; the sixth day courts are held in the country. Occasionally the work is light, at other times it is quite the reverse. I regret to say that during the last four months it has increased very considerably. I have already sent up for trial for murder three cases, and for robbery accompanied with violence three; some of these cases have occupied me for days, and in one case alone the depositions, exclusive of information, fill 30 pages of foolscap. There being only one clerk in the Police Court, the magistrate is compelled to take down all depositions. The large increase in fines for criminal offences for the year 1868, the period that I have been at Malacca, also shows the increase of crime, or that the police have been more vigilant and attentive to their duties than formerly.

With regard to the country courts, I may mention that it is of very great importance that the magistrate should be as much as possible in the country for the following reasons, viz., to hear complaints and give advice, settle trivial questions between parties, try cases, criminal and civil, in the district, and, in fact, to show the people that they are cared for. Were it not for these courts, which are now held a distance of from 15 to 32 miles from Malacca, (and to visit the far ones, and hold two courts in the day, I am generally obliged to proceed half way the evening before, after holding my court in Malacca, returning the following day but one in time for court,) the police would overlook many offences to save themselves the trouble of bringing offenders in a distance, and persons would forego their claims for the same reason.

In conclusion, I think it but due to myself to point out that it was my own suggestion increasing the visits in the country; that the Honourable Captain Playfair, Acting Lieut.-Governor, (late police magistrate, Malacca,) entirely concurred with me; that the necessity presented itself to me during the short period I was officiating Lieut.-Governor here, and when I had opportunities of visiting the whole of the country, and gaining considerable information; and that the self imposed extra work is very severe and trying to the constitution.

I have, &c.,
A. R. ORD,
Police Magistrate and Commissioner,
Court of Requests.

Acting Lieut.-Governor,

a This magistrate is employed solely at Singapore. The cases referred in column three were heard between the 15th September and 31st December 1868. He only arrived in the Settlement in the month of August 1868, and commenced work on the 15th September 1868.

b This magistrate's duties are confined solely to Singapore.

c This magistrate's duties are confined entirely to Singapore.

d This magistrate is very rarely required to perform any duty except at Singapore.

e This magistrate's duties are confined to George Town in the Island of Penang, and he is not required to travel on other parts of the Island.

f This officer is the only magistrate in Province Wellesley, and has to travel between two stations 65 miles apart.

g The small number of cases heard at this station is, in my opinion, owing to the length of time between each visit. If it were visited once a week it would be a great boon to the people living on the north, who have now to come to Butterworth. It also would prevent the police from being so long away from their stations, several of them being upwards of 15 miles to the north of Butterworth.

h This officer is the only magistrate in Malacca, and besides holding court in the town, has to visit ten stations distributed over an area of country 50 miles in length and 30 in breadth. Some of these, as Battang, Malacca, Nialas, Soongye, Rambye, and Qualla Linghy, are new stations, ordered by the Government to be visited experimentally for a limited period. If it is found that they furnish a sufficient amount of work to justify the trouble and expense incurred, they will be permanently adopted as stations.

BAHAMAS (CHURCH OF ENGLAND DISENDOWMENT).

RETURN to an Address of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 11 June 1869;—for,

"A COPY of the ACT passed by the Legislature of the Bahamas for the DISENDOWMENT of the CHURCH of ENGLAND in that Colony."

Colonial Office, 5 August 1869.

W. MONSELL.

32 Vict. Cap. 27.

32 Vict. c. 27.

(No. 1,754.)

AN ACT to amend the ECCLESIASTICAL LAWS of the COLONY, and for other Purposes.

(Assented to 1st June 1869.)
(Confirmed 7th October 1869.)

WHEREAS, the present condition of the Colonial finances renders it necessary that the Public Expenditure should be reduced. And, whereas the United Churches of England and Ireland, and the Presbyterian Church of Saint Andrew are supported and maintained by funds derived from the General Revenue; and, whereas a very large number of the inhabitants of the Islands comprised within this Government, are connected with denominations of the Christian Religion, other than those aforesaid, and contribute voluntarily towards the support and maintenance of their Ministers and Churches. And, whereas the double burthen of supporting by private donations their own Ministers and Churches, and by taxation the Clergy and Churches of the United Churches of England and Ireland, and the Church of Saint Andrew, has occasioned great discontent, and it is therefore expedient that a change should take place in the Laws regulating the present Ecclesiastical Establishment of the Colony in such a manner as will be least injurious to the religious interests of a large number of the people who have hitherto been dependent upon State aid alone; and as it will in its results ultimately effect the desired reduction in the Public Expenditure and the termination of all causes of discontent; May it therefore please the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by His Excellency Sir James Walker, Knight Commander of the most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, and Companion of the most Honourable Order of the Bath, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Bahama Islands, the Legislative Council and Assembly of the said Islands, and it is hereby enacted and ordained by the authority of the same as follows:

Preamble.

I. That from and after the commencement of this Act, the building of Churches, Chapels or other Ecclesiastical Edifices of the said United Churches of England and Ireland, or of any branch of the Presbyterian Church, or of any other Church or religious denomination whatever, and the repair of or addition to all Churches, Chapels and other Ecclesiastical Edifices of the hereinbefore named Churches, shall cease to be a charge on the General Revenue of the Colony any existing right or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

The erection, repair, or addition to Church buildings to be no longer a charge on the general Revenue.

II. That

The Legal Estate of Churches to vest in Commissioners.

II. That upon the commencement of this Act the legal estate in all Churches and Chapels within the Bahama Islands dedicated to or which are in any manner held to the use of the said United Church of England and Ireland, as such Church has been recognised by law in this Colony, and which have been heretofore considered or dealt with as Public Property, shall vest in the Commissioners to be hereinafter named upon trust to hold, preserve and maintain such Chapels and Churches with their respective appurtenances for the celebration of Public Worship and for the performance of other religious services according to the rites and ceremonies of the United Churches of England and Ireland or by whatever style or title such Church shall hereafter be known in the United Kingdom, as such rites or ceremonies are now or may hereafter be recognised and established by law in the said United Kingdom.

The Bishop with certain Clergy and Lay-members to be Commissioners.

III. That the Bishop of the Diocese for the time being, the Incumbent of Christ Church, Saint Matthew and Saint John, for the time being, together with five Laymen being Members of the said United Church of England and Ireland to be selected and appointed as hereinafter provided for, shall form a Board of Commissioners, and such Board is hereby constituted a corporate body under the style of the Commissioners of the Church of England in the Bahamas for the purposes by this Act declared.

Lay-members of Commission—how appointed.

IV. That the Lay-members of the said board shall in the first instance be nominated by the Governor, but all vacancies which shall occur among such Lay-members by death, resignation, removal from the Colony or by any member ceasing to be a member of the Church of England as the same shall be established by law in the United Kingdom, shall be filled up by the remaining or continuing Commissioners in such manner as may by any rule made by the Commissioners for the purpose to be provided for.

The payment of salaries and allowances to the Clergy provided for, vide Schedule A.

V. That the annual salaries and allowances which are at present attached by law permanently to the several Ecclesiastical Offices in the Schedule hereto annexed, marked (A.), shall continue to be paid out of the Public Treasury as heretofore, to the parties holding the same for a period of seven years only; Provided however that any Clergyman who may at the date of the commencement of this Act, be holding any of the said Offices shall have his existing interest conserved to him, and shall, so long as he may continue to hold such office, and notwithstanding any thing herein contained, be entitled to have and receive the salary or allowance thereto attached, and which he may be receiving at the time this Act shall come into operation: and provided further, that in the event of any vacancy occurring in any of the said offices between the date of the commencement of this Act and the end of the said term of seven years, no person appointed to any of the said offices shall be deemed to have a vested interest therein beyond the said term of seven years, or be entitled to claim any continuing interest in such office thereafter.

Repealing clause.

VI. That so much of any Act of the General Assembly of these Islands as is inconsistent with or repugnant to the preceding section shall be and the same is hereby declared to be repealed.

The division of the Colony into Parishes retained for civil purposes only.

VII. Whereas, in consequence of the alterations by this Act made in the system of Church Endowment, it is expedient that the division of the Colony into Parishes should be retained only for civil purposes, be it enacted, that from and after the coming into operation of this Act, no Ecclesiastical character shall attach to the division of the Colony into Parishes as provided for by any Act of the General Assembly of these Islands, but such division shall be held and construed as solely denoting the division of the Colony into districts for civil purposes only.

Vestries abolished.

VIII. And whereas, in consequence of the vesting of Church Edifices, Parsonages and other buildings in the third section of this Act referred to, in the Commissioners therein particularly named, as provided for by the said section, it is expedient that the regulation of the secular affairs of the United Churches of England and Ireland in this Colony by Vestries as now provided for by law, should cease; be it enacted, that from and after the coming into operation operation of this Act, the following Acts and parts of Acts shall be and the same are hereby repealed:

5th section of 7 William 4, chap. 2.
9 Victoria, chap. 1, with the exception of the 1st section.
10 Victoria chap. 19.
2nd section 11 Victoria, chap. 9.
4th section 12 Victoria, chap. 15.
20 Victoria, chap. 24.
3rd and 4th sections 24 Victoria, chap. 17.
2nd section 26 Victoria, c. 19.
and
29 Victoria, chap. 20.

St. Andrew's Church lot of land vested in Minister and Elders.

IX. That from and after the commencement of this Act, the legal estate in the lot of land upon which the Presbyterian Church of St. Andrew stands erected, shall be by virtue of this Act vested in the Minister and Elders of the said Church for the time being, and his and their successors in office, in trust for the purposes and uses for which the same has been heretofore employed.

Contracts made by Vestries to be valid.

X. That all contracts entered into by any of the Vestries of these Islands under the authority of any Act or Acts of Assembly and not yet executed, shall, notwithstanding the coming into operation of this Act, be good and valid, and the Members of the said Vestries shall be Commissioners for carrying into execution the said Act or Acts, and the said Act or Acts and the contract or contracts so entered into shall be taken and construed as if Commissioners had been appointed under the said Act or Acts instead of the said Vestries.

Acts repealed.

XI. That from and after the commencement of this Act, the following Acts and parts of Acts shall be and the same are hereby repealed, namely,

10 Victoria, chap. 4.
21 Victoria, chap. 19.
And the several Acts and parts of Acts suspended by the 28th section of the 9th Victoria, chap. 1.

Act repealed.

XII. That so much of the fifth section of 8 Victoria, chap. 45, as grants powers to the Churchwardens of the Parish of Saint John, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor General Viscount Monck to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

Government House, Ottawa, Canada,
7 March 1868.
(Received, 23 March 1868.)
(Answered, No. 69, 13 April 1868, page 9.)

My Lord Duke,

I HAVE the honour to transmit for your Grace's information and favourable consideration an approved Minute of the Privy Council of Canada on the subject of certain resolutions adopted at a public meeting of the inhabitants of Victoria, British Columbia, with reference to the desire of that Colony to be incorporated with the Canadian Union.

6 March 1868.

I have &c.
(signed) Monck.

Enclosure in No. 1.

Enclosure in No. 1.

COPY of a REPORT of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by his Excellency the Governor General on the 6th day of March 1868.

THE Committee have had under consideration a memorandum, dated 5th March 1868, from the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, stating that certain resolutions on the subject of union with Canada, adopted at a public meeting of the inhabitants of Victoria, British Columbia, on the 29th of January last, transmitted through the Hon. S. L. Tilley to the Secretary of State for Canada, were, on the the third instant, referred to a Committee of the Hon. the Privy Council, and by the Council referred to him, the Minister of Public Works, for immediate Report.

That he has read and duly considered the purport of these resolutions, the circumstances under which they were passed, and the action which ought to be taken by the Government of Canada thereupon.

That it appears from these resolutions and the memorial of the Committee appointed at the public meeting, which accompanies them, that the Legislative Council of British Columbia on the 18th of March 1867, unanimously adopted a resolution requesting his Excellency Governor Seymour "to take measures without delay to secure the admission of British Columbia into the Canadian Confederacy on fair and equitable terms."

That it appears further that neither the people of British Columbia, nor the Government of Canada have been apprised of any measures that may have been taken by the Government of British Columbia, in pursuance of the resolution of the Legislative Council.

That

DOMINION OF CANADA.

That the resolutions adopted at the public meeting of the 29th January which was called and presided over by the Mayor of Victoria, the chief city of the Colony, and the statements of the memorial signed by the Mayor and by members of the Legislature and others, leave little room to doubt that the people of that Colony are willing and anxious that it should be admitted into union with Canada if the terms of admission can be agreed upon.

The Minister of Public Works calls attention to the 146th section of "The British North America Act" which applies to the case of British Columbia in express terms. That it will be seen the resolution of the Legislative Council was passed before the British North America Act came into force, and that it did not specify the terms of admission which the Council asked the Government to secure. That it is evident, therefore, that further action is necessary by the Legislature of British Columbia before admission can take place under the provisions of the Imperial Act.

That it is suggested in the memorial of the Mayor and other citizens of Victoria that the Legislature of the Colony, being largely composed of officials, is not so zealous for Confederation as the people whose opinions and wishes it ought to represent.

The Minister submits that, considering the peculiar constitution of the Legislature and Government of British Columbia, and that notwithstanding the resolution of the Legislative Council in March of last year, and the resolutions of public meetings and the expression of opinion through the press of the Colony, both before and since the Act of Confederation, in favor of union with Canada, no official communiction on the subject from British Columbia has reached this Government, he would recommend that your Excellency communicate to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham a copy of the memorial and resolutions referred to, and request his Grace to instruct Governor Seymour to take such steps as may be deemed proper to move the Legislative Council of British Columbia to further action in terms of the Imperial Act. He further recommends that his Grace be informed that the Government of Canada will be prepared to submit to Parliament a proposal for the admission of British Columbia into the union in the expectation that the Imperial Government will lose no time in transferring the intervening North Western Territory to the jurisdiction of the Canadian Government.

(Certified)

Wm. H. Lee, Clerk, P. C.

To His Excellency the Governor General and the Honourable the Queen's Privy Council of Canada.

The Memorial of the undersigned, a Committee appointed at a Public Meeting of the Citizens of Victoria, B.C., held on 29th January 1868,

Respectfully sheweth,

1. That on the 18th of March last, a resolution was unanimously passed by the Legislative Council of this Colony, asking his Excellency, Governor Seymour, to take measures without delay, to secure the admission of British Columbia into the Canadian Confederacy on fair and equitable terms.

2. That a public meeting was held at the same time in Victoria, expressing concurrence with the action of the Legislative Council.

3. That the people of Cariboo, the next most populous and influential portion of the Colony, held in December a highly enthusiastic meeting, and unanimously passed resolutions in favour of immediately joining the Dominion of Canada.

4. That the "Daily British Colonist," the leading newspaper of the Colony, has, and does, strenuously support confederation. The "Cariboo Sentinel," a paper of local influence, pursues a similar course. The "British Columbian," a semi-weekly, published at New Westminster, regarded as somewhat subject to Government influence, has expressed itself in favour of confederation, but not very earnestly. The "Columbian" has only a local influence. The "Examiner," a semi-weekly, published also at New Westminster, advocates confederation. The "Morning News," a weekly, published in Victoria, the only other paper in the Colony, is in favour of annexation to the United States, failing that, supports confederation. The only paper that circulates through the whole Colony is the "Colonist," and represents the general feeling of the country on confederation.

5. That public opinion throughout the Colony, so far as we can learn, is overwhelmingly in favour of confederation.

6. That there is a small party in favour of annexation to the United States, and if it were practicable or possible, their number would be largely increased.

7. There is a small party, other than annexationists, who are opposed to confederation.

8. Nearly all the office holders in the Colony are allied to the latter party.

9. The

9. The total number of those opposed to confederation on fair and equitable terms, is numerically small, but supported by the office holders, they may exert a good deal of resistance to the popular will.

10. That from information in a telegram from Ottawa, dated 22nd January 1868, we learn, that Governor Seymour has not made any propositions to the Dominion Government respecting our admission as was expected.

11. That the Legislative Council, the only Legislative body in the Colony, is made up of a majority consisting of heads of departments, gold commissioners, magistrates, and others, subject to Government influence, and cannot be relied upon to urge on confederation as it ought to be at the present juncture.

12. That the only popular institutions in the Colony are the city councils of Victoria and New Westminster.

13. That, therefore, the people of this Colony are really without the means of expressing and carrying out their wishes through the Legislature.

14. We, therefore, representing as we do the views of the people of this the most populous and influential section of the Colony, and acting in unison with the general and expressed wishes of the people throughout the Colony, would respectfully ask the Government of the Dominion to take immediate steps to bring this Colony into the Dominion, by telegraphing or communicating with Her Majesty's Government, to issue instructions, with as little delay as possible, to Governor Seymour, or otherwise to conclude negotiations as to the terms of our admission.

15. We feel that, without the help and support of the Government of the Dominion, the time will be remote when this Colony will be admitted into the Dominion, but with the aid which we solicit, we believe that there is no obstacle to prevent our admission by the 1st of July next.

16. We would further represent for the information of the Government of the Dominion, that the terms of admission which would be acceptable to the people of this Colony would be:—

1. Canada to become liable for the entire public debt of this Colony, estimated at $1,500,000.

2. Canada to provide for federal officers and services.

3. To grant a sufficient fixed subsidy, and per capita subsidy, to insure the support of the local Government, in addition to the powers of taxation reserved to Provincial Governments in "British North America Act."

4. Representation in the Senate and Commons of Canada.

5. The construction of a trans-continental waggon-road, from Lake Superior to the head of navigation on the Lower Fraser, within two years after the time of admission. This is regarded as an essential condition.

6. Popular representative institutions, insuring responsible control over the Government.

17. Hereafter we hope to communicate further information. In the meantime we confidently trust the Government of the Dominion will cheerfully aid the people of this Colony in furthering their wishes for immediate admission into the confederation.

18. Enclosed we send you a copy of requisition to the Mayor to call a public meeting, and also resolutions passed at said meeting, held on the 29th January 1868.

We have, &c.

(signed) James Trimble, Mayor of the City of Victoria, and Chairman of Committee.
A. De Cosmos, Member of Legislative Council.
J. H. Powell, M.D., Member for the City of Victoria, of the late Legislative Assembly of Vancouver Island.

H. E. Seelye, one of the Editors of the "British Colonist," and Secretary to the Committee.

REQUISITION.

To his Worship the Mayor of Victoria,

We, the undersigned citizens of Victoria, would respectfully request your worship to call a public meeting in the theatre, on an early day, for the purpose of inquiring of his Excellency the Governor what progress has been made in the negotiations respecting the admission admission of this Colony into the Dominion of Canada, and to consider the advisability of taking further steps to accomplish that object.

And 55 others.

REPLY.

Victoria, 27 Jan. 1868.

Gentlemen,

IN reply to your numerously signed requisition asking me to call a public meeting for the purpose named therein, I have great pleasure in acceding to your request, and, therefore, appoint Wednesday evening next, at half-past seven o'clock, for said meeting.

I have, &c.
(signed) James Trimble,
Mayor of Victoria.

To Messrs. Geo. J. Findlay.
J. W. Powell.
Lowe Bros.
Robert Wallace.
Lumley Franklin.
J. R Stewart.
J. H. Turner & Co., and others.

Mr. De Cosmos then offered the following Preamble and Resolution:—

WHEREAS we recognise in the successful consolidation of Canada, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, into one great Government, constituting a new Nationality, the hand of destiny pointing unerringly to the speedy consolidation of all British North America: And whereas the recent action of the Canadian Parliament in asking the Imperial Government to transfer the North-West territory to the Dominion, making British Columbia its western boundary, removes all obstacles of a territorial character to our admission into the Confederacy:

And whereas the Legislative Council at its last session unanimously passed an address to the Governor, asking him to apply to the Government of Canada to admit this Colony into the Dominion; and whereas information respecting such admission has not, as yet, been communicated to the public through the Legislative Councillors as was expected:

Resolved, That we deem it expedient that steps should be taken to conclude negotiations with the Government of Canada for the immediate admission of this Colony into the Dominion, on fair and equitable terms; and that an essential condition to such admission should be the construction by the Dominional Government, within two years, of a transcontinental waggon-road, connecting Lake Superior and the head of navigation on the Lower Fraser.

"When put to vote, the resolution in favour of confederation, with the Overland waggon-road as an essential condition, was successful amid the wildest enthusiasm. Only about 20 hands were raised in opposition. A resolution, appointing a committee to wait upon the Governor to ascertain what progress had been made in the matter, and to take steps to further negotiations for the union of this Colony with the Dominion, was unanimously adopted, and the meeting broke up with three cheers for the Mayor."—Colonist.

Mr. Seelye offered the following Resolution, which was seconded and carried unanimously:—

Resolved, That a committee of six, including the Mayor, be appointed by the chair, to wait on his Excellency the Governor, and urge the adoption and carrying out of the views of this meeting, and that such committee be authorised to transact any other business that they may deem expedient to further the cause of confederation.

The Mayor appointed Messrs. Lumley Franklin, A. De Cosmos, Dr. Powell, H. E. Seelye, Robert Wallace, and G. J. Findlay, who, with his Worship added, completes the number called for in the resolutions.

Three cheers were given for the Mayor, and three for confederation, after which the vast assemblage separated, and thus ended the most enthusiastic meeting in favour of confederation ever held here.

The presiding member resumed the chair.

The committee rose, and the chairman handed in the following resolution, which, having been put to the Council, was carried unanimously, and it was—

Resolved, That this Council is of opinion that at this juncture of affairs in British North America, east of the Rocky Mountains, it is very desirable that his Excellency be respectfully requested to take such steps, without delay, as may be deemed by him best adapted to insure the admission of British Columbia into the Confederation on fair and equitable terms, this Council being confident that in advising this step they are expressing the views of the colonists generally.

Victoria, 24 September 1867.

No. 3.
Governor Seymour to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos. 24 Sept. 1867.

My Lord Duke, (Answered No. 87, 19 November 1867, page 28.)

WITH reference to my Despatch, No. 126,* of this date, I have the honour to place in a separate despatch, with less reserve, a few remarks on the desire of the people of this Colony to join the Eastern Confederation.

2. A resolution was passed by the Legislative Council in favour of negotiations being entered into with a view to a union of all the British possessions in North America.

3. Though the motion passed through the Council without opposition, there was but little warmth felt in its favour. The question is obviously at present one of great difficulty. It is hard to know what benefits the Colony or the Eastern Confederacy would derive from a closer connection while the lands intervening between Canada and our frontier belong to a private company. The resolution was the expression of a despondent community longing for change. It was felt that no harm could be done by making public the desire for amalgamation with English communities so much nearer the mother country, and that possibly some assistance might be given either by England or Canada towards the making of a road across the continent.

4. When gold was discovered in British Columbia, and glowing accounts of the wealth of the country filled columns of the leading London journals, a considerable number of immigrants arrived from home, with expectations which even the vast national resources of the Colony could not satisfy. Most of those who sought their fortunes here were men unable to make their way in Europe, unequal to the labour which gold mining entails, without the business habits requisite for the trader or the capital necessary to the farmer. Many of them failed, and have thrown the blame of the failure upon other shoulders than their own. No immigrants from England now resort to this Colony. The only Englishmen who find their way hither filter to us through California, and, as adventurous Americans still visit us, the population is now becoming alien to a large extent.

5. It is thought by many of those who have made this their home that the only chance of its being prosperous while a dependency of a very distant country, which helps more by advice than by the substantial aid which a young and struggling community requires, is a union with the more developed and apparently more prosperous colonies on the Atlantic. My own impression is that the main chance of keeping British Columbia English in sentiment is to furnish from home some pecuniary aid, some military assistance, or help its communications with the Dominion of Canada. Even independent of the great distance from the mother country, natural features seem to indicate its connection with the eastern lands. The Cascade Mountains on the western side of our principal gold mines and finest agricultural districts are more rugged than the Rocky Mountains; and Dr. Rae, the celebrated explorer, informed me that there were greater difficulties already surmounted on the line of road between Yale and Lytton in this Colony than were to be found between Lytton and the Red River settlements. The extraordinary natural difficulty of the access from the Pacific to our best gold mines and agricultural districts seem to point to an eastern connection.

6. I feel that I must necessarily write very vaguely on this subject. It is for me merely to state the wish of the people of this Colony and my own for a fusion or an intimate connection with the Eastern Confederation. It rests with your Grace to see if that wish can be carried out. Merely to join the Confederation on the condition of sending delegates to Ottawa, and receiving a Governor from the Canadian Ministry, would not satisfy the popular desire.

I have the honour to submit the annexed resolution of the Legislative Council of the 24th instant.

Resolved, That this Council, while confirming the vote of last Session in favour of the general principles of the desirability of the union of this Colony with the Dominion of Canada to accomplish the consolidation of British interests and institutions in North America, are still without sufficient information and experience of the practical working of confederation in the North American Provinces to admit of their defining the terms on which such an union would be advantageous to the local interests of British Columbia.

Enclosure 2, in No. 4.

Extract from Governor's Speech at Opening of Legislative Council.

Encl. 2, in No. 4.

During the last Session, your Honourable Council unanimously passed a resolution in favour of negotiations being entered into for the union of this Colony with the confederation which has been formed among the Eastern British Provinces on this continent. Although I could not be blind to difficulties which made me consider the resolution principally as the expression of a disheartened community, longing for change of any kind, yet the possibility alone of something arising out of it to promote an overland communication with Canada, was enough to induce me to support your resolution. I learn, in reply to my communications on the subject, that the consideration of it must, at all events, await the time when the intervening territory now under the control of the Hudson's Bay Company shall have been incorporated with the confederation."

Extract from Governor's Speech at the Closing of the Legislative Council.

"I notice that, while adhering to your vote of last year, in favour of confederation with Canada, you are of opinion that it is not necessary to take any further steps in the matter at present. I think your resolution a wise one. The question is by no means slumbering; but the difficulties of the project are seen clearer by those who have a wider range of vision than we can possess, and without whose material assistance our efforts would be but vain."

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Seymour to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

Victoria, 28 July 1868.
(Received 9 September 1868.)
(Answered, No. 75, 19 September 1868, page 29.)

My Lord Duke,

* Page 13.

REFERRING to my Despatch, No. 45,* of the 14th May, I have the honour to forward to your Grace copy of a motion which was made in the Legislative Council by Mr. De Cosmos in favour of an Address to Her Majesty, on the subject of confederation with the Dominion of Canada. This motion, your Grace will see, was lost.

Printed copy.

2. There is, however, a feeling with many persons in this Colony, that the best hopes of its progress are to be found in an intimate union with Canada. The difficulties, however, appear to me to be, in the present state of things, almost insuperable, and the advantages remote.

Confederation would, however, probably attract greater attention to this Colony than it now receives in England.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 5.

Enclosure in No. 5. PURSUANT to a deferred Order of the day, the Honourable Mr. De Cosmos moved, the Honourable Mr. Stamp seconding, the following Address to Her Majesty, on the subject of Confederation with the Dominion of Canada :—

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Members of the Legislative Council of British Columbia, in Session convened, would most respectfully represent,—

I. That in an Act passed in the thirtieth year of Your Majesty's reign, entitled "The British North America Act, 1867," provision is made for the admission of British Columbia into the Dominion of Canada.

II. That the 146th section of the said Act declares that British Columbia may be admitted into the Dominion of Canada, provided that addresses to Your Majesty, containing the terms and conditions of such admission, shall be passed by the Houses of Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of British Columbia.

III. That Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects the inhabitants of British Columbia most earnestly desire that such admission may take place without delay, on the terms and conditions hereinafter enumerated.

IV. That being fully convinced that such admission would, in a marked degree, strengthen British power and influence, and establish more firmly British institutions in your Majesty's possessions in North-west America; and generally throughout all British North America; and faithfully representing, as we do, the general and expressed wishes of the inhabitants of this Colony, we earnestly desire that such admission may take place without delay, on the terms and conditions hereinafter enumerated.

V. Therefore we, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Members of the Legislative Council of British Columbia, humbly pray that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased to admit without delay the Colony of British Columbia into the Dominion of Canada, in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," and on the terms and conditions following:

1. The limits of British Columbia, on and after admission, to be the same as at present.

2. The Dominion of Canada to become liable for the public debt of British Columbia, and make the same a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund, the said debt not to exceed one million five hundred thousand dollars ($1,500,000).

3. British Columbia to be liable for such portion of her funded and floating debts as may exceed the said 1,500,000 dollars.

4. The

4. The Dominion of Canada to pay annually out of her Consolidated Revenue Fund, in semi-annual advances, to British Columbia for the support of her local Government and Legislature, the sum of 110,000 dollars, and also an annual grant in aid of the local Government of British Columbia, equal to 80 cents per head of the population of British Columbia, the minimum number of said population, including Indians, not to be estimated at less than 40,000 at any time, and the increase of population after admission to be the increase of population other than Indians, and the said increase of population to be determined by census or otherwise, as may from time to time be expedient.

5. All Crown lands, mines, minerals, and royalties situate in British Columbia at the time of admission, and all sums of money then due or payable, or that may afterwards accrue for such Crown lands, mines, minerals, and royalties, to belong to British Columbia, and be under the exclusive control of its Government and Legislature.

6. All stocks, cash, bankers' balances, and securities for money belonging to British Columbia at the time of admission to be the property of British Columbia.

7. All public works and property of British Columbia at the time of admission to belong to the Colony of British Columbia.

8. The Dominion of Canada to construct, within three years after admission of British Columbia, a good overland waggon road extending from Lake Superior, Ontario, to the head of navigation on Lower Fraser River, British Columbia, and to commence the construction of the same through the Rocky Mountains within one year after admission.

9. The Imperial Government to guarantee a loan to construct the said overland road, if deemed expedient.

10. British Columbia to be represented in the Senate by not less than two Members, and in the Commons by not less than three Members, at any time.

11. At the first election of representatives to the Commons, and until otherwise provided by the Parliament of Canada, the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia to proclaim what shall be the qualifications and disqualifications of representatives and electors, the boundaries of electoral districts, and the laws governing such elections.

12. At the time of admission, the revenue laws of the Dominion of Canada to extend and apply to British Columbia, and thereupon the revenue laws of British Columbia thereby affected to be null and void, and all duties and revenues derived in and from British Columbia under the revenue laws of the Dominion of Canada to belong to Canada.

13. The exclusive powers of provincial legislatures enumerated in the 92nd section of "The British North America Act, 1867," and all other provisions of the said Act that extend and apply generally to the provinces of the Dominion of Canada and that may be applicable to British Columbia, except as otherwise in this address provided, to extend and apply to British Columbia, at and from the time of admission.

14. Except as otherwise provided, all laws in force in British Columbia, at the time of admission, and all courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and all legal commissions, powers, and authorities, and all officers, judicial, administrative, and ministerial existing therein at the time of admission to continue in British Columbia as if such admission had not taken place; subject nevertheless to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the Parliament of Canada, or by the Legislature of British Columbia, according to the authority of the said Parliament or of the said Legislature, under "The British North America Act, 1867."

15. Until the Parliament of Canada provides otherwise, all officers of British Columbia, at and from the time of admission, having duties to discharge in relation to matters other than those coming within the classes of subjects assigned by "The British North America Act, 1867," to the provinces, to be officers of Canada.

16. And generally all such unenumerated provisions, acts, and things as may be necessary to the due and proper execution of the terms and conditions hereinbefore enumerated, and to the granting of the prayer of this address.

17. And as in duty bound we will ever pray.

The Hon. Mr. Wood moved, in amendment, the Hon. Mr. Ball seconding:

That this Council, while confirming the vote of last Session in favour of the general principle of the desirability of the union of this Colony with the Dominion of Canada, to accomplish the consolidation of British interests and institutions in North America, are still without sufficient information and experience of the practical working of confederation in the North American Provinces, to admit of their defining the terms on which such an union would be advantageous to the local interests of British Columbia.

Whereupon a debate arose, which having terminated,—

The Hon. Mr. De Cosmos moved that the Standing Orders be suspended, in order to enable him to withdraw his motion.

The question of suspending the Standing Orders having been put and lost, the amendment was put.

Governor Seymour to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos. 30 Nov. 1868.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Seymour to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

Victoria, 30 November 1868.
(Received 16 January 1869.)
(Answered (No. 10) 4 February 1869, page 29.)

My Lord Duke,

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Grace a letter addressed to me by the principal leaders of a large and respectable public meeting, or, as these gentlemen prefer to style it, a Convention held at Yale. I add a copy of my reply.

2. The principal questions upon which the convention agreed appears to have been,—

1. Union or confederation with the Dominion of Canada.

2. Representative Institutions and Responsible Government in the Colony.

3. Retrenchment in the public expenditure, principally in the way of dismissing certain public officers, and reducing the salaries of others.

4. A reciprocal commercial treaty with the United States, whereby the raw productions of the Colony might be introduced into the neighbouring republic, duty free.

3. As regards the first point, I do not suppose that there is an Englishman who would not desire to see one unbroken Dominion under his flag extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. For all present facilities of intercourse we are as near to Japan as to Ottawa. But the matter does not rest with the so-called Convention at Yale, but has already occupied your Grace's attention, and that of the Government of Canada. I must say that this Colony appears to possess so little interest for the people of England, that perhaps any change which would call attention to its really wonderful resources would do good.

4. The second resolution is in favour of Representative Institutions and Responsible Government in the Colony. The Legislative constitution of the Colony is a subject which has occupied my attention much of late; but I have not been able to see a clear path before me. Local politics have their head-quarters in Victoria. If one ascends the Fraser but a few miles one finds less excitement and better tempers at New Westminster, and so it goes on in proceeding up country till, at Clinton, the whole thing is ignored. The miners of Cariboo and Kootenay are in the most profound state of indifference as regards what is passing at head-quarters. I should be glad if we had some mode of allowing the people of Victoria, through their representatives, to relieve themselves of their burden of complaints, and by simply stating what the "miserable misgovernment" (with which cry the streets echo) consists of, enable a respectful explanation to be furnished. I shall anxiously consider this subject, and it is not unlikely that it will be brought up at the next Session of the Legislature.

5. The

5. The Convention then urges retrenchment. We have an enormous amount to pay for interest on loans, nearly a third of our revenue. Were we free from debts, our finances would be in a most flourishing condition. I am not answerable for the debt. It was not incurred by me, yet it devolves upon me to pay, and I believe that the doing so is the principal cause of the outcry of "miserable misgovernment." Reductions in salaries, to the extent of upwards of 80,000 dollars, have been made during my tenure of office. I have never appointed anyone higher than a constable, and have no hope of doing so during my incumbency of office. I think my own salary a little high for the Colony to pay, but certainly not so for the holder of the very important and expensive position I fill to receive. Sir James Douglas, in October 1858 (when the revenue had not amounted to 22,900 l.) reported to the Secretary of State that he could not live under 5,000 l. a year.

6. As regards a treaty of commercial reciprocity, I agree entirely with the Convention. Our nearest markets for lumber now are Australia and France; and at this moment when San Francisco has been half ruined by an earthquake, and it is proposed to rebuild the shaken houses of timber instead of stone, the citizens will have to depend upon the mills of Washington territory for their supplies, instead of being able to make use of the magnificent timber of Burraw Inlet, a few miles from the boundary, but unfortunately for the mill-owners on English soil.

7. It is but right that I should state that the proceedings of the Yale meeting did not meet with universal approval. I enclose two notices, very respectably signed, protesting against the whole affair.

8. I may add that the more prominent advocates for confederation were defeated at the last elections in Victoria for Members to serve in the Legislative Council.

I have, &c.

2. Such measures as may immediately establish Representative Institutions and Responsible Government in the Colony.

3. Such measures as may effect the most thorough retrenchment in the public service compatible with due and proper securities for the preservation of life and property.

4. Such measures as may induce Her Majesty's Government to open negotiations to obtain from the United States of America the privilege of allowing the raw productions of this Colony to be entered free of duty in the ports of the United States under the operation of a reciprocal commercial treaty.

The chairman then appointed Dr. Brouse as chairman of committee, and left the chair.

On the chairman resuming the chair, Dr. Brouse reported the following 15 resolutions:

"Whereas this convention, composed of delegates representing different constituencies, has, at the general popular desire, and after due and ample public notice, been convened at Yale, British Columbia, this 14th September 1868, by the call of the Confederate League, and by the authority of the people of British Columbia in the respective districts declared, to give a full, unprejudiced, and united expression of their views and feelings respecting the desirability of the admission of this Colony into the Dominion of Canada, the necessity for the immediate establishment of Representative Institutions with Responsible Government, and generally as to the state, wants, and wishes of the country:

"And whereas this convention is duly impressed with the high, responsible, and patriotic duties that their fellow-countrymen have called on them to discharge, and cherishes the most ardent and devoted loyalty to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, and attachment to British institutions:

"And whereas it is expedient to resolve and declare what, in its opinion, is right and proper in the premises. This Convention therefore, in virtue of the trust reposed in it, and with an honest and patriotic desire to promote the public welfare, after due deliberation, resolves and declares as follows:

"I. That all governments should exist by the free and just consent of the governed, and that the government that does not exist by the free and just consent of the governed is a despotism. That the Government of British Columbia does not exist by the free and just consent of the governed, and is, therefore, a despotism. That it is unsuited to the free British subjects of this Colony. That it deprives the people of their rightful share in the Government, as no Statute or Order in Council exists which guarantees to the people the right to participate in the Government of the Colony; but in the Legislative and Executive Departments all are nominated, or may be rejected, suspended, or removed by the Governor of this Colony. That the ordinary consequences of such a form of government are manifest in this Colony in the disregard of public opinion, in the neglect of public interests, in the high taxation, in the annual deficits, in the annually-increased public debt, in expending large sums of public money in paying salaries disproportionate to the services rendered, and in maintaining an unnecessarily large number of officials, and in the tendency which the continuance of such political evils have to weaken the attachment of the people to the Crown and British connection. That to such an extent have the evils of misgovernment multiplied that profound, widespread, universal discontent prevails, and is expressed at the form of government, and at the manner in which the affairs of the Colony have been and are mismanaged; and that the people of British Columbia loudly demand a remedy.

"II. That the proper remedy for the present political condition of the Colony, and the one that commends itself as preferable to all others, being in harmony with Imperial policy and the legitimate aspirations and desires of the people of this Colony, is the immediate admission of British Columbia into the Dominion of Canada, on terms equitable, expedient, and beneficial, simultaneously with the establishment of Representative Institutions and Responsible Government; and that, whether admission into the Dominion of Canada shall occur or not, Representative Institutions and Responsible Government should be inaugurated forthwith in British Columbia.

"III. That the terms of admission into the Dominion of Canada that would be equitable, expedient, and beneficial to the Colony, in the opinion of this Convention, are chiefly expressed in the following 15 sections:

"1. The limits of British Columbia, on and after admission, to be the same as at present.

"2. The Dominion of Canada to become liable for the public debt of British Columbia, at the time of admission.

"3. The Dominion of Canada to pay annually out of her Consolidated Revenue Fund, in semi-annual advances to British Columbia, for the support of her local Government and Legislature, the sum of 110,000 dollars, and also an annual grant in aid of the local Government of British Columbia, equal to 80 cents per head of the population of British Columbia, the minimum number of said population, including Indians, not to be estimated at less than 40,000 at any time, and the increase of population after admission, to be the increase of population other than Indians, and the said increase of population to be determined by census or otherwise, as may from time to time be expedient.

"4. All Crown lands, mines, minerals, and royalties situate in British Columbia at the time of admission, and all sums of money then due or payable, or that may afterwards accrue, for such Crown lands, mines, minerals, and royalties to belong to British Columbia, and to be under the exclusive control of its Government and Legislature.

"5. All stocks, cash, bankers' balances, and securities for money belonging to British Columbia, at the time of admission, to be the property of British Columbia.

"6. All public works and property of British Columbia, at the time of admission, to belong to British Columbia, with the exception of such portions of the Grand Trunk road through British Columbia, or other roads then constructed, as may be used as a portion of the trans-continental road, which shall become the property of the Federal Government.

"7. The Dominion of Canada to construct, within three years after the admission of British Columbia, a good overland waggon road, extending from Lake Superior, Ontario, to the head of navigation on the lower Fraser river, British Columbia, and to commence the construction of the same through the Rocky Mountains, within one year after admission.

"8. The Imperial Government to guarantee a loan to construct the said overland road, if deemed expedient.

"9. If, at any time after admission, the Legislature of British Columbia shall pass an address to the Governor General of Canada, declaring that it is expedient to establish a a free port on the Pacific, in order to advance the interests of British commerce in the North Pacific, the Parliament of the Dominion to make provision for the establishment of the same.

"10. British Columbia to be represented in the Senate by not less than two Members, and in the Commons by not less than three Members at any time.

"11. At the first election of representatives to the Commons and until otherwise provided by the Parliament of Canada, the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia to proclaim what shall be the qualifications and disqualifications of representatives and electors, the boundaries of electoral districts and the laws governing such elections.

"12. At the time of admission the revenue laws of the Dominion of Canada to extend and apply to British Columbia, and thereupon the revenue laws of British Columbia thereby affected to be null and void, and all duties and revenues derived in and from British Columbia under the revenue laws of the Dominion of Canada to belong to Canada.

"13. The exclusive powers of provincial legislatures enumerated in the 92nd section of 'The British North America Act, 1867,' and all other provisions of the said Act that extend and apply generally to the provinces of the Dominion of Canada, and that may be applicable to British Columbia, except as otherwise in these terms provided, to extend and apply to British Columbia, at and from the time of admission.

"14. Except as otherwise provided, all laws in force to British Coumbia at the time of admission, admission, and all courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and all legal commissions, powers and authorities, and all officers, judicial, administrative, and ministerial, existing therein at the time of admission, to continue in British Columbia as if such admission had not taken place; subject, nevertheless, to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the Parliament of Canada or by the Legislature of British Columbia, according to the authority of the said Parliament or of the said Legislature, under 'The British North America Act, 1867,' and any subsequent Imperial Act.

"15. Until the Parliament of Canada provides otherwise, all officers of British Columbia, at and from the time of admission, having duties to discharge in relation to matters other than those coming within the classes of subjects assigned by 'The North America Act, 1867,' to the provinces, to be officers of Canada."

The convention adjourned till 10 a.m., 15th September.

Pursuant to adjournment, the Convention met at 10 a.m. on the 15th.

Moved by Mr. Babbitt, seconded by Mr. Smith: That the reading of the minutes of yesterday be deferred.—Carried.

The secretary presented the Report of the Committee on Business, and asked leave to sit again.

Moved by Mr. De Cosmos and seconded by Mr. Robson: That report of Committee be received.—carried.

Moved by Mr. Barnard and seconded by Mr. Nelson: That the Convention go into committee of the whole to consider report of Business Committee.—Carried.

The chairman then appointed Dr. Brouse as chairman of the committee, and left the chair.

On the chairman resuming, Dr. Brouse reported the following resolutions:

"That this Convention further resolves and declares,—

"IV. That the people of British Columbia desire Representative Institutions with Responsible Government, and have the capacity to work those institutions successfully in the interest of the Colony; and that any representations that have been or that may be made to the contrary in England or elsewhere, would neither be in accordance with facts nor the views of the people of this Colony, the people being the best judges of their own affairs.

"V. That the establishment of Representative Institutions, without the simultaneous inauguration of Responsible Government, would be only a partial and very imperfect remedy for the evils produced by the present form of government; and that unless the Governor were required to govern in accordance with the advice and consent of an executive council holding seats in the Legislature, and commanding the confidence and support of a majority of the representatives of the people, there would never be that degree of harmony between the Executive and the representatives of the people that is essential to the successful working of the Government, and the rational contentment of the country.

"VI. That, whether admitted into the Dominion or not, the Legislature should consist of a Governor and one Chamber, called the Legislative Assembly: that the Members of the Assembly should be elected for a period of not more than four years: that the Sessions should be held annually: that members be paid their reasonable expenses for a period not exceeding 40 days in each Session. That the qualification for Members be as follows: Being a male British subject of full age, and possessing real or personal property, or both, of the value of 500 dollars. That the qualification of electors be as follows: 1. A male British subject or alien who has taken the oath of allegiance. 2. Residence in the Colony one year, and in the district in which the vote is cast, three months. 3. Possessed of real or personal property, or both, at the time of registration, to the value of 100 dollars. 4. Registered on the electoral roll of the district. That any male alien, who can read and write or speak the English language, and who has been five years in the Colony, and is possessed of real estate to the value of 100 dollars, and appears on the electoral roll, shall be entitled to vote.

"VII. That the Executive Council, as at present constituted, does not command public confidence nor represent the country in the Government, is irresponsible, or not accountable to the people for the administration of its respective departments, and under the present constitution of the Colony is but an echo of the Governor, and generally antagonistic to the well-being of the Colony, and that the substitution therefore of an executive council which holds office only while it commands the confidence and support of a majority of a representative legislature, would be hailed with delight by the country.

"VIII. That the nominative character and official elements of the Legislative Council render it unsuited to a Colony of free British subjects. That the Council may be composed of 23 members, or merely a quorum, as the Governor may decree. That the people have no right guaranteed to them by Statute or Order in Council by which they may send representatives to participate in the deliberations of the Council as they would have, were the Council a representative assembly, in the British sense of the term "representative," inasmuch as the election of a Member by the people does not insure him a seat in the Council. That the people have no constitutional power to pass good measures, nor to stop the passage of bad measures through the Council. That the Legislative Council violates a fundamental principle of the British constitution by imposing taxes on the people without representation.

representation. That it disregards public opinion, and neglects public interests. That it consents to the maintenance in office of more officials than the country can afford, or the public service requires. That it concurs with the Executive in an extravagant civil list, adding annually to the public debt. That the non-representative character of the Council, the non-existence of a representative assembly, combined with mal-administration, have (by the discontent produced), a tendency to alienate the affections of the people from the Crown, That the officials, the paid servants of the public, rule the people with irresponsible authority, and that it is their interest to resist reform to retain office. That the officials, who form a majority of the Council, vote as the Executive intimates whenever required, and that, consequently, the majority of the Council has no real independence, is a sham legislature, the Governor and Executive Council being virtually the Legislature of the Colony. That the Legislative Council does not represent the people of British Columbia, and, from its nominative and dependent character, can never gain popular confidence and support, and will always be productive of popular discontent. That the people have no confidence in the Council, and will never be satisfied with the constitution of the Legislature till a representative assembly is established.

" IX. That one of the reasons why union between Vancouver Island and British Columbia was sought was that a supreme court of appeal for the whole Colony could be economically created. That the Colonies were united two years ago, and yet no appellate court has been inaugurated. That, as a consequence of the continued separate existence of the Supreme Courts of Vancouver Island and British Columbia, confidence in those courts respectively has been materially impaired. That it is the prevailing opinion that such continued separation of the courts, and non-inauguration of a supreme court of appeal, has been due to more consideration for the personal interests of the judges than for the general interests of justice throughout the Colony.

" X. That by appointing stipendiary magistrates and gold commissioners to seats in the Legislative Council, they are withdrawn from their respective districts for long continuous periods, leaving such districts without any competent authority to aid in the protection of life and property, and thereby virtually declaring that such officers are not required.

" XI. That the salary, allowances, and perquisites of the Governor (exceeding the sum of 20,000 dollars) are unreasonable, and ought to be reduced to a figure proportionate to the ability of the Colony, and the services rendered. That, in addition to the above salary and perquisites, there is an annual interest of six per cent. on 45,000 dollars, making the approximate cost of residence in Victoria, 2,700 dollars. That the salary of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Ontario, Canada, with a population of 1,500,000 is only 8,000 dollars per annum; and that there is no good reason why the salary of the Governor of this Colony should exceed 10,000 dollars per annum, with a residence. That if the Governor's salary be reduced to that amount, and the allowances, perquisites, and extra assistance of 500 dollars be abolished, there would be an annual saving in the Governor's department of about 10,000 dollars.

" XII. That the salary of the Colonial Secretary, 3,880 dollars per year, is too high and ought to be reduced to a sum not exceeding 3,000 dollars per annum, thereby saving 880 dollars. That one clerk in the Colonial Secretary's department, at a salary of 1,800 dollars, is sufficient to meet the requirements of the public service. That an assistant printer, at 600 dollars per annum, is unnecessary. That the total saving by these reductions, without impairing the efficiency of the public service would be 3,540 dollars.

" XIII. That the office of Lands and Works is maintained at a great annual expense, amounting in 1868, for a Chief Commissioner and three clerks, to 8,490 dollars, and in former years to a far larger sum. That the greatest ignorance prevails in the department as to the lands in Vancouver Island and on the mainland, although a land office has been kept open in the former place 17 years, and in the latter for 10 years. That nothing is done by the department to assist in the sale and settlement of the public lands, except recording a few pre-emptions in Vancouver Island, and on the mainland the pre-emptions are recorded by the magistrates. That a few parcels of public lands are leased for the purposes of trade, agriculture, lumbering, and mining, and the rents collected for the same. That instalments on lands sold or pre-empted are collected. That a few maps are made or extended occasionally. That the above includes the total services performed by this department pertaining to land, and could all be transacted by one clerk. That the public works carried on by the department are confined to repairing roads, constructing some small bridges, cutting out or keeping open a trail, or repairing or enlarging a public building, and are either performed by contract or by temporary service. That the entire public works, including map-making, could be well attended to by one competent civil engineer. That two competent clerks or civil engineers to perform all the above services efficiently and satisfactorily, could be had for 1,500 dollars each, and thus a saving could be made in the permanent expenditure of the department, amounting to 5,490 dollars. That by connecting this department with that of the Colonial Secretary, one civil engineer would be sufficient to transact all the business. That, therefore, for purposes of economy, it is expedient to abolish the office of Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works, and to reduce the permanent staff of the department to not more than two civil engineers, under the supervision of the Colonial Secretary.

" XIV. That the duties of the Treasury can be performed, under efficient checks, by two clerks; clerks; that, therefore, one clerk should be discharged, thereby saving 1,200 dollars per annum.

"XV. That the auditor's department is too expensively conducted. That two competent clerks can efficiently audit the public accounts, at a salary not exceeding 1,800 dollars and 1,500 dollars respectively, thereby saving in this department 1,750 dollars.

"XVI. That the office of Registrar General of Titles, at Victoria, is almost a sinecure. That the incumbent draws a salary of 2,440 dollars per year for a service that notoriously does not occupy him more than one hour a day, yet the Government refuses to reduce the salary; on the contrary, has raised it 485 dollars in 1868, and persists in keeping the office separate, instead of amalgamating it with some other, and thereby utilising the services of the incumbent. That reports are industriously published by the Government that the office is self-paying and ought, therefore, to be continued. But that is effected by imposing a high tariff of charges for registering documents, and thereby the office is made self-paying at the expense of those who register. That by affixing a salary to this office proportionate to the labour performed, the tariff of charges for registration could be reduced four-fifths; that the labour employed in the service is not worth more than 500 dollars per annum. That, by an alteration of local Statutes (if necessary at all), so that the office may be amalgamated with that of Registrar of the Supreme Court, Victoria, the whole time of the incumbent might be employed; and, at a salary of 1,800 dollars per annum, there would be saved in this department 700 dollars, and in the Supreme Court 1,500 dollars, making a total saving of 2,200 dollars per annum. That the office of Registrar of Titles might be amalgamated with one of two other offices, yet retain all its efficiency and secure economy in the expenditure. That the continuance of this officer, at the present salary, is a glaring public wrong.

"XVII. That the office of stipendiary magistrate for New Westminster should be abolished, and that the duties should be discharged by the Registrar General of British Columbia, in addition to the duties of postmaster general.

"XVIII. That the office of harbour master should be amalgamated with that of the Customs department; that a saving would thereby be effected of 1,800 dollars, without any public injury.

"XIX. That the salary of the Attorney General should be 1,500 dollars with practice, and that he be allowed a clerk at 1,000 dollars per year.

"XX. That reform in the office of sheriff is essentially necessary, as it is virtually a sinecure, without proper securities being filed by the sheriff, in case of errors or losses in civil suits. That a division of the shrievalty into two or more shrievalties, the incumbents giving bonds in a suitable amount for the faithful performance of their duty, is required both for efficiency and security of the public. That the paying out of public moneys as a bonus to the sheriff, under present circumstances, is a wasteful and wanton expenditure.

"XXI. That the office of chief inspector of police is not required, and therefore ought to be abolished."

Moved by Mr. De Cosmos, and seconded by Mr. Norris: That Report of Business Committee be received.—Carried.

The Convention then adjourned till two p.m.

Pursuant to adjourment, Convention met at two p.m.

Moved by Mr. Barnard, and seconded by Mr. Rose: That the Convention go into Committee of the whole, to consider the Report of the Committee on Business.

The Chairman then nominated Dr. Brouse as Chairman of Committee, and left the chair.

On the chairman resuming, Dr. Brouse reported the following resolutions:—

" XXII. That there is no public necessity for keeping five extra constables in Cariboo, at an annual expense of 3,500 dollars per year. That in the Lillooet-Clinton district a stipendiary magistrate is not required, thereby saving 2,400 dollars per annum. That at Nanaimo, a stipendiary magistrate is not required, and the duty of deputy collector of customs there, with that of postmaster could be performed satisfactorily for 1,000 dollars, saving thereby 1,000 dollars. That in Lillooet Clinton, and Nanaimo, honorary magistrates can discharge the duties of justice of the peace. That the retrenchment that might be made by the Executive under these heads is equal to 10,300 dollars per year.

" XXIII. That the Supreme Court judges should discharge the duties of county court judges, holding court periodically in the different districts of the Colony.

" XXIV. That the vote of 3 000 dollars in the Estimates for expenses of judge and registrar on circuit, on the mainland of the Colony, is exorbitant, and calls for revision.

" XXV. That, including the reductions suggested, and others which might advantageously be adopted, a saving of about 60,000 dollars in the annual expenditure for civil establishments may be made, without impairing in the least degree the public service, or endangering in the least the securities for the preservation of life and property, or the maintenance of order throughout the Colony.

" XXVI. That the people of British Colombia are willing to bear patiently the heavy financial burden imposed upon the country for the construction of public works, amounting to nearly 150,000 dollars annually; but they denounce the extravagant expenditure by which a deficit was created in 1866, amounting to about 170,000 dollars; and, in 1867, 130,000 dollars. That these deficits were effected in violation of the rule laid down by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in a Despatch dated 30th April 1866, viz.: that the expenditure of the year must be reduced to such an amount as may be covered by the actual average receipts of the past two years; that the Estimates of 1868 violate this rule.

" XXVII. That the system of dividing and sub-dividing the public service into departments, and placing such duties respectively in the hands of a single person, may be the proper mode to transact public business in a rich and populous country; but to a Colony such as British Columbia, where the population is very small, the financial resources proportionately limited, and the business to be transacted under each head but trifling, such a system is wholly unsuited, entailing too high an expenditure without increasing efficiency. That it is mainly by attempting to carry out this system, and by keeping too large a staff of officials at salaries disproportionate to the circumstances of the Colony, that the public expenditure is annually unnecessarily increased. That it is therefore to amalgamation of offices, reduction of the civil list, and lowering of salaries, that the people look for a reduction in the current expenditure for the support of establishments.

" XXVIII. That the total population of British Columbia, exclusive of Indians, does not exceed 10,000; and that the number of Indians does not exceed 30,000. That the Indians, living chiefly by hunting and fishing, are not individually on the average large consumers of dutiable or taxable commodities. That the highest estimate that could be placed on the Indians as consumers is, that three Indians consume as much as one white or civilised person, and that, consequently, the total Indian population is only equal to 10,000 white consumers. That a more correct estimate would in all probability be that five Indians are equal to one white person, thereby making the total Indian inhabitants, as consumers, equal to 6,000 whites. That (taking the highest estimate of the Indians as consumers) the total number of consumers of dutiable and taxable commodities is 20,000. That in 1867, the revenue, without loans, was 475,250 dollars, and the average tax per head of the consumers 23 dollars 75 cents. That the expenditure, as reported to the Council as less than the actual expenditure was, in 1867, 560,159 dollars, or 28 dollars to each consumer. That out of the expenditure of 560,159 dollars in 1867, only 52,000 dollars were expended in public works. That the estimated revenue of 1868 is 576,000 dollars, or nearly 29 dollars to each consumer. That the estimated expenditure of 1868 is 572,553 dollars, or 28 dollars 60 cents to each consumer. That the total amount appropriated for public works out of the 572,553 dollars is 55,300 dollars. That out of the latter sum there has been about 12,000 dollars expended in unnecessary additions to the Governor's residence and the Land Office, whilst necessary improvements to roads and bridges, to advance the interests of farmers and settlement generally, are deferred. That the return made to the Legislative Council in 1868, by his Excellency the Governor, comparing the customs' tariffs of England, United States, Canada, and other colonies and countries is fallacious, if intended to show that British Colombia is not taxed higher than other countries. That the fallacy is apparent when it is observed that the average annual tax per head in Canada is only 3 dollars 50 cents, whilst the average tax to each consumer in British Columbia, in 1867, was 23 dollars 75 cents, and that proposed in 1868, is 29 dollars to each consumer. That home productions, other than gold, in this Colony are not so advanced as in the countries enumerated in the return, and that, consequently, there is a larger average consumption here of dutiable commodities, and a correspondingly higher tax paid by each consumer. That, with tariff, internal revenue dues, road tolls, &c., taxation is high and oppressive. That, after paying the interest and sinking fund on the public debt, nearly all the revenue is consumed non-productively. That retrenchment is therefore demanded by the united voice of the people of British Columbia.

" XXIX. That

"XXIX. That it is the duty of the Executive to institute the most thorough retrenchment in the expenditure, and cause to be amended and repealed all statutes or ordinances that interfere with economy in the public service.

"XXX. That miners and capitalists during the last 10 years have been subject to the greatest inconvenience and delays in securing copper and silver bearing quartz veins, under such a tenure and with such facilities as would offer reasonable security for the investment of capital; that the non-existence of a general law on the subject, and the obstacles interposed by the Government, have tended to prevent the investment of capital in the country, and retarded the development of its mineral resources. That the enactment of a law under which a limited extent of any copper or silver-bearing quartz veins, free from royalties, onerous laws, and taxations, may be taken up and held by any one or more persons, under reasonable conditions of working, is absolutely essential to the investment of capital in such enterprises.

"XXXI. That religion, humanity, and public opinion demand that due and proper consideration be paid to the Indian population, with a view to their preservation, and the improvement of their moral, intellectual, and material condition. That beyond making reservations of land, Government has done nothing for them. That in many instances the Indian reserves are large and valuable tracts of agricultural land. That such lands, though situated in districts where they would be cultivated by settlers, remain unimproved by the Indians, except the occasional cultivation of a small patch. That settlers are prohibited occupying them. That such reserves are consequently neither properly utilised by the Indians nor by settlers. That it is incumbent, therefore, on the Government to establish such regulations as would utilise the Indian reserves, and appropriate the proceeds to the benefit of the Indians.

"XXXII. That the people of British Columbia, recognising the principle that it is the imperative duty of the State to provide for education, earnestly desire the immediate establishment of a national system of popular education, based upon broad non-sectarian principles, and that the non-existence of any recognised system of education applicable to the whole Colony, is discreditable to the Government.

"XXXIII. That while it is apparent to any disinterested person that retrenchment in the public service could be made by which about 60,000 dollars of the annual expenditure could be saved without impairing the efficiency of the public service, yet the Government persists in imposing road tolls on merchandise passing between Yale and Cariboo that amount to 60,000 dollars per annum. That the continuance of the road tolls, and the resistance offered to retrenchment by the Executive, are grave acts of misgovernment.

"XXXIV. That a reciprocal commercial treaty between the United States and England, by which the lumber, coal, fish, and other raw productions of British Columbia and the United States may be entered duty free for home consumption in the ports of the last-named countries respectively, would be a powerful stimulant to industry in this Colony. That it is, therefore, expedient to urge upon the attention of the local and Imperial Governments the desirability of taking immediate steps to secure such a commercial privilege, whilst the Reciprocity Treaty between Canada and the United States is under consideration.

"XXXV. That though there has always been a large staff of officials connected with the office of Lands and Works, and notwithstanding there are vast areas of good unoccupied agricultural and grazing lands in the Colony, the country but sparsely populated, the imports of agricultural produce and stock large, and the prices of agricultural productions highly remunerative, yet the Executive has never made any systematic and continuous effort to invite immigration, or induce people to engage in agriculture. That the apathy and indolence of the Government respecting the settlement of the public lands is therefore totally indefensible.

"XXXVI. That free grants of at least 320 acres of land ought to be offered to actual settlers upon the public lands, and that the Executive should spare no effort in inviting immigration and facilitating the settlement of the country.

"XXXVII. That the vote of the Legislative Council, refusing to pass an address to Her Majesty the Queen respecting the Confederation of this Colony with Canada, is not indorsed by the country; but is opposed to the well-understood wishes of the people of British Columbia.

"The Convention further resolved:

"1. That an address be prepared and sent to Her Majesty the Queen, praying for the reforms enumerated in these resolutions.

"2. That an address to the Governor General of Canada be prepared and transmitted, urging confederation on the terms proposed.

"3. That an address be transmitted to his Excellency the Governor, accompanied by a copy of these resolutions, praying that the reforms therein contained may be initiated and perfected.

"4. That a petition to the Imperial Parliament be prepared and circulated for signature throughout throughout the Colony, and transmitted to some prominent Member of Parliament for presentation, accompanied by the resolutions of this Convention.

"5. That an Executive Committee be appointed, with full authority to call conventions, communicate with the Imperial, Canadian, and local Governments, to prepare and transmit the addresses and petitions above alluded to, and to take any measures they may deem expedient to secure the reforms enumerated in the resolutions of the Convention."

The following Committee was appointed to carry out the objects of the Convention:—Messrs. De Cosmos, McMillan, Wallace, and Norris, of Victoria; Havelock, of Yale; John Robson, of New Westminster; and F. J. Barnard.

Moved by Mr. Norris, and seconded by Mr. Robson: That the Report be received.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Norris, and seconded by Mr. Robson: That the Report of Business Committee be adopted.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Barnard, and seconded by Mr. Smith: That the following gentlemen be an Executive Committee in accordance with the 5th Resolution: Messrs. A. De Cosmos, R. Wallace, J. E. McMillan, J. G. Norris, John Robson, H. Havelock, and F. J. Barnard.

Moved by Mr. Norris, and seconded by Mr. Armstrong: That the thanks of the Convention be tendered to the steamboat owners and stage proprietor, and that the secretary be instructed to communicate the same.—Carried.

Three cheers were then proposed and given for the Queen.

Three cheers were then proposed and given for the Dominion.

Moved by Mr. Robson, and seconded by Mr. Barnard: That this Convention adjourn.—Carried.

Sir, Downing-street, 19 November 1867.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your two Despatches, No. 126,* and Separate,† of the 24th September, the first inclosing copy of a resolution passed by the Legislative Council in favour of negotiations being entered into for the union of British Columbia with the Eastern Provinces of North America; the second containing your remarks upon the subject.

Whatever might be the advantages which in course of time might result from the union of British North America under one government, it appears to me that the consideration of that question must at all events await the time when the intervening territory now under the control of the Hudson Bay Company shall have been incorporated with the Confederation.

Your Despatch also incloses what appear to be certain advertisements signed by persons in Victoria, who declare that those delegates have not in any way received authority to represent their opinions or desires.

Earl Granville, K.G., to Governor Musgrave.
14 August 1869.

(No. 84.)

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Earl Granville, K.G., to Governor Musgrave.

Sir, Downing-street, 14 August 1869.

In my Despatch of the 17th June, in which I communicated to you your appointment to the government of British Columbia, I informed you that I should probably have occasion to address you on the question, then in agitation, of the incorporation of that Colony with the Dominion of Canada.

You are aware that Her Majesty's Government have hitherto declined to entertain this question, mainly because it could not arise practically till the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company was annexed to the Dominion, but also, perhaps, in the expectation that the public opinion of British Columbia might have opportunity to form and declare itself.

I have now to inform you that the terms on which Rupert's Land and the North West Territory are to be united to Canada, have been agreed to by the parties concerned, and that the Queen will probably be advised before long to issue an Order in Council which will incorporate, in the Dominion of Canada, the whole of the British Possessions on the North American Continent, except the then contern.inous Colony of British Columbia.

The question, therefore, presents itself whether this single Colony should be excluded from the great body politic which is thus forming itself. On this question the Colony itself does not appear to be unanimous. But as far as I can judge from the Despatches which have reached me, I should conjecture that the prevailing opinion was in favour of union. I have no hesitation in stating that such is also the opinion of Her Majesty's Government.

They believe that a Legislature selected from an extended area, and representing a diversity of interests, is likely to deal more comprehensively with large questions, more impartially with small questions, and more conclusively with both, than is possible when controversies are carried on and decided upon in the comparatively narrow circle in which they arise—questions of purely local interest will be more carefully and dispassionately considered when disengaged from the larger politics of the country, and at the same time will be more sagaciously considered by persons who have had this larger political education. Finally, they anticipate that the interest of every Province of British North America will be more advanced by enabling the wealth, credit, and intelligence of the whole to be brought to bear on every part, than by encouraging each in the contracted policy of taking care of itself, possibly at the expense of its neighbour. Most especially is this true in the case of internal transit. It is evident that the establishment of a British line of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans is far more feasible by the operations of a single Government responsible for the progress of both shores of the Continent, than by a bargain negotiated between separate—perhaps in some respects rival—Governments and Legislatures. The San Francisco of British North America would, under these circumstances, hold a greater commercial and political position than would be attainable by the capital of the isolated Colony of British Columbia. Her Majesty's Government are aware that the distance between Ottawa and Victoria presents a real difficulty in the way of immediate union. But that very difficulty will not be without its advantage if it renders easy communication indispensable, and forces onwards the operations which are to complete it. In any case it is an understood inconvenience, and a diminishing one, and it appears far better to accept it as a temporary drawback on the advantages of union, than to wait for those obstacles, often more intractable, which are sure to spring up after a neglected opportunity.

The constitutional connexion of Her Majesty's Government with the Colony of British Columbia is, as yet, closer than with any other part of North America; and and they are bound, on an occasion like the present, to give, for the consideration of the community and the guidance of Her Majesty's servants, a more unreserved expression of their wishes and judgment than might be elsewhere fitting.

You will, therefore, give publicity to this Despatch, a copy of which I have communicated to the Governor General of Canada; and you will hold yourself authorised, either in communication with Sir John Young, or otherwise, to take such steps as you properly and constitutionally can for promoting the favourable consideration of this question.

It will not escape you, that in acquainting you with the general views of the Government, I have avoided all matters of detail, on which the wishes of the people and the Legislature will of course be declared in due time. I think it necessary, however, to observe that the constitution of British Columbia will oblige the Governor to enter personally upon many questions—as the condition of Indian tribes and the future position of Government servants, with which, in the case of a negotiation between two Responsible Governments, he would not be bound to concern himself.

I have, &c.

(Further answered, No. 76, 23rd April 1868, page 12.)

My Lord Duke,

I HAVE the honour to transmit a joint Address to Her Majesty the Queen, from the Senate and House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada, praying that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to direct that an Order in Council may be passed in conformity with the provisions of the 146th section of the British North America Act, 1867, for annexing to the Dominion of Canada the Territory of Rupert's Land and the Red River Settlement

I have the honour to request that your Grace will lay this Address at the foot of the Throne.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 1.

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

Enclosure in No. 1.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate and Commons of the Dominion of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly approach your Majesty, for the purpose of representing:

That it would promote the prosperity of the Canadian people, and conduce to the advantage of the whole Empire if the Dominion of Canada, constituted under the provisions of the British North America Act of 1867, were extended westward to the shores of the Pacific Ocean;

That the colonization of the fertile lands of the Saskatchewan, the Assiniboine, and the Red River districts, the development of the mineral wealth which abounds in the regions of the North West, and the extension of commercial intercourse through the British possessions in America from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are alike dependent upon the establishment of a stable Government for the maintenance of law and order in the North Western Territories;

That the welfare of a sparse and widely-scattered population of British subjects of European origin, already inhabiting these remote and unorganised territories, would be materially enhanced by the formation therein of political institutions bearing analogy, as far as circumstances will admit, to those which exist in the several Provinces of this Dominion;

That the 146th section of the British North American Act of 1867 provides for the admission of Rupert's Land and the North Western Territory, or either of them, into union with Canada, upon the terms and conditions to be expressed in Addresses from the Houses of Parliament of this Dominion to your Majesty, and which shall be approved of by your Majesty in Council;

That we do therefore most humbly pray that your Majesty will be graciously pleased, by and with the advice of your Most Honourable Privy Council, to unite Rupert's Land and the North Western Territory with this Dominion, and to grant to the Parliament of Canada authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government; and we most humbly beg to express to your Majesty that we are willing to assume the duties and obligations of Government and legislation as regards those territories;

That in the event of your Majesty's Government agreeing to transfer to Canada the jurisdiction and control over the said region, the Government and Parliament of Canada will be ready to provide that the legal rights of any corporation, company, or individual within the same shall be respected, and placed under the protection of courts of competent jurisdiction;

And furthermore, that upon the transference of the territories in question to the Canadian Government, the claims of the Indian tribes to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement, will be considered and settled in conformity with the equitable principles which have uniformly governed the British Crown in its dealings with the aborigines.

All which we humbly pray your Majesty to take into your Majesty's most gracious and favourable consideration.

My Lord Duke, (Received 16 January 1868.)

* Page 1.

REFERRING to my Despatch, No. 107,* of 21st December 1867, I have the honour to transmit to your Grace an approved Minute of the Privy Council of Canada, together with the Resolutions of both Houses, and the proceedings upon them respecting the proposed annexation of Prince Rupert's Land and the North West Territory to the Dominion of Canada.

I desire especially to call your Grace's attention to the eighth Resolution, adopted by both Houses, and which was not incorporated in the Address to Her Majesty.

If Her Majesty's Government should approve of the proposed incorporation with Canada of this territory on the terms contained in the Address to the Queen, and these Resolutions, it would be of great advantage to my Government if I could be informed of the decision, by telegraph, in order that all necessary steps may be taken for carrying the arrangement into effect.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 2.

Encl. 1, in No. 2. COPY of a REPORT of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, dated 28th December 1867, approved by His Excellency the Governor General.

THE Committee have had under consideration the annexed Memorandum from the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, submitting for your Excellency in Council certain recommendations on the subject of the negotiation with the Imperial Government for for the transfer of Rupert's Land and the North West Territory to Canada, and they respectfully advise that a copy of the same, when approved by your Excellency, be forwarded to his Grace the Secretary of State for the Colonies, as embodying the views of the Canadian Government on that important question.

Certified.

(signed) Wm. H. Lee, Clerk to the Privy Council.

The undersigned has the honour to submit for the consideration of your Excellency in Council the following recommendations on the subject of the negotiation with the Imperial Government for the transfer of Rupert's Land and the North West Territory to Canada:—

1. That in addition to the joint Address of both Houses on the subject, your Excellency will be pleased to transmit to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Resolutions as they were finally adopted by the House of Commons and the Senate, with the votes and proceedings of both Houses thereon.

2. That the attention of his Grace the Duke of Buckingham be specially called to the eighth Resolution, which was not embodied in the Address, and was not intended by the Canadian Parliament to express a term or condition of the Order in Council authorised by the 146th section of the British North America Act.

3. That your Excellency will be pleased to express to his Grace, as the opinion of the Canadian Government, that it is highly expedient that the transfer which the Imperial Parliament has authorised, and the Canadian Parliament approved, should not be delayed by negotiations or correspondence with private or third parties, whose position, opinions, and claims have heretofore embarrassed both Governments in dealing with this question.

4. That in the opinion of the Canadian Government the terms of the Address cannot be materially altered or extended without causing injurious delay, and greatly embarrassing the people and Government of Canada in their efforts to open communication with the Territory, to encourage emigration and settlement, to establish law and order, and to provide for the speedy organisation of municipal and local governments therein.

5. That recent proposals in the Congress of the United States in reference to British America, the rapid advance of mining and agricultural settlements westward, and the avowed policy of the Washington Government to acquire territory from other Powers, by purchase or otherwise, admonish us that not a day is to be lost in determining and publishing to the world our policy in regard to these territories.

6. That your Excellency will be pleased to request his Grace to inform your Excellency by Atlantic cable (if the information can be so communicated) whether the Imperial Cabinet will at once advise Her Majesty to approve of the transfer on the terms of the Address, in order that the Canadian Government may be prepared to submit appropriate measures on the subject on the reassembling of Parliament in March next.

Respectfully submitted,

28 December 1867. (signed) Wm. M^c Dougall.

The Honourable Mr. Fergusson Blair, seconded by the Honourable Mr. Campbell.

That the welfare of a sparse and widely-scattered population of British subjects of European origin already inhabiting these remote and unorganised territories, would be materially enhanced, by the formation therein of political institutions bearing analogy, so far as circumstances would admit, to those which exist in the several Provinces of this Dominion.

5. That it is accordingly expedient to address Her Majesty that she would be graciously pleased, by and with the advice of Her Most Honourable Privy Council, to unite Rupert's Land and the North Western Territory with the Dominion of Canada, and to grant to the Parliament of Canada authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government, and expressing the willingness of Canada to assume the duties and obligations of government and legislation.

6. That in the event of the Imperial Government agreeing to transfer to Canada the jurisdiction and control over this region, it would be expedient to provide that the legal rights of any corporation, company, or individual shall be respected and placed under the protection of courts of competent jurisdiction.

7. Than upon the transference of the territories in question to the Canadian Government the claims of the Indian tribes to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement, would be considered and settled in conformity with the equitable principles which have uniformly governed the Crown in its dealings with the aborigines.

8. Resolved also, That in case any negotiation between the Canadian Government and the Hudson's Bay Company, for the termination of the rights of the latter entered into in accordance with the Despatch of the 17th June 1865, from the then Secretary of State for the Colonies to his Excellency the Governor General, should result in an agreement between them, it is hereby declared that such agreement must be submitted to, and sanctioned by the Parliament of Canada before the same shall have any force or effect whatever.

Enclosure 1, in No. 7.

COPY of a REPORT of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by his Excellency the Governor General on the 1st October 1868.

Encl. 1, in No. 7.

THE Committee have had under consideration a Memorandum, dated 30th September inst., from the Honourable Sir George E. Cartier, Bart., and the Honourable William M'Dougall, stating that they have received communication of the Minute in Council appointing them a delegation to England to arrange with the Imperial Government the terms upon which Canada may acquire Rupert's Land, and expressing their readiness to accept that mission.

They, however, bring under the notice of the Government the terms of the recent Act of the Imperial Parliament to enable Her Majesty "to accept a surrender upon terms of the lands, privileges, and rights" of the Hudson's Bay Company, which declares that "Rupert's Land," for the purposes of that Act, "shall include the whole of the lands and territories held or claimed to be held" by the Company.

They also call your Excellency's attention to the terms of the British North America Act, which provides for the admission of Rupert's Land and the North West Territory, or either of them, into the union; and they recommended that they be authorised to arrange with the Imperial Government for the admission of the North West Territory into union with Canada, either with or without Rupert's Land, as may be found practicable and expedient.

The Committee advise that the authority requested by the delegates be granted, and that a copy of this Minute, if approved by your Excellency, be transmitted to his Grace the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Enclosure in No. 8.

(Translation.)

Enclosure in No. 8.

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate and Commons of the Dominion of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly approach your Majesty for the purpose of representing,

That during the first Session of the first Parliament of this Dominion, we adopted an address to your Majesty, praying that your Majesty would be graciously pleased, by and with the advice of your Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, under the provisions of he 146th section of "The British North America Act, 1867," and on the terms specified in that Address, to unite Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory with this Dominion, and to grant to the Parliament of Canada authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government, and assuring your Majesty of the willingness of the Parliament of Canada to assume the duties and obligations of government and legislation as regards those territories.

That our joint Address was duly laid at the foot of the Throne; and that your Majesty, by Despatch from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General of Canada, under date of 23rd April 1868, signified your Majesty's willingness to comply with the prayer of the said Address, but that your Majesty was advised that the requisite powers of government and legislation could not consistently, with the existing Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, be transferred to Canada, without an Act of Parliament, which Act was subsequently passed by the Imperial Parliament, and received your Majesty's Assent on the 31st July 1868.

That by a Despatch, dated 8th August 1868, from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Governor General was informed, that in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Act for the surrender of the Hudson's Bay Territories to your Majesty, he proposed proposed to enter into negotiations with the Company as to the terms of such surrender; whereupon, under authority of an order of the Governor General in Council of the 1st October 1868, the Honourable Sir George E. Cartier, Baronet, and the Honourable William M'Dougall, C.B., were appointed a delegation to England, to arrange the terms for the acquisition by Canada of Rupert's Land; and by another Order in Council of the same date, were authorised to arrange for the admission of the North West Territory into union with Canada, either with or without Rupert's Land, as might be found practicable and expedient.

That the delegates proceeded on their mission to England, and entered into negotiations with his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, then Secretary of State for the Colonies; and afterwards with the Right Honourable Earl Granville, his successor in office, for the acquisition by Canada of the territorial and other rights claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company in Rupert's Land, and in any other part of British North America not comprised in Rupert's Land, Canada, or British Columbia. That terms of agreement were conditionally assented to by the delegates on behalf of the Dominion, and on their return to Canada were submitted, with a report, dated 8th May 1869, which was approved by his Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the 14th day of the same month.

That we humbly deem it expedient to accept the transfer of the territorial and other rights of the Hudson's Bay Company in Rupert's Land, and in any other part of British North America not comprised in Rupert's Land, Canada, or British Columbia, on the terms conditionally agreed to on behalf of the Government of Canada by the Honourable Sir George E. Cartier, Baronet, and the Honourable William M'Dougall, C.B.; and on behalf of the Hudson's Bay Company, by Sir Stafford H. Northcote, Governor of that Company, and approved by his Excellency in Council as aforesaid, which terms are set forth in a letter from Sir Frederic Rogers, under Secretary of State for the Colonies, of the 9th March 1869, communicated to the delegates by direction of Earl Granville; and in two subsequent Memorandums, dated respectively 22nd and 29th March 1869, containing a modification of such terms, and are in the words and figures following:

TERMS as stated in the LETTER from Sir Frederic Rogers, of 9th March 1869.

REPORT.

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir John Young, Bart., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., Governor General of Canada.

May it please your Excellency,

WE have the honour to submit for your Excellency's consideration the following report of our negotiations with Her Majesty's Imperial Government for the transfer to the Dominion of Canada of Rupert's Land and the North Western Territory.

Under the authority of an Order in Council of the 1st October 1868, we were appointed a delegation to England to arrange the "terms for the acquisition by Canada of Rupert's Land," and by another Order in Council of the same date, we were authorised to arrange "for the admission of the North West Territory into union with Canada, either with or without Rupert's Land, as may be found practicable and expedient." We proceeded at once to execute the important mission confided to us, and on presenting ourselves at the Colonial Office, were invited by his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, to visit him at Stowe, for the purpose of discussing freely and fully the numerous and difficult questions which were involved in the transfer of these these great territories to Canada. We found that his Grace had already made some progress in the preliminaries of a negotiation (under the Act 31 & 32 Vict. c. 105) with the Hudson's Bay Company for the surrender to Her Majesty of the territorial and political rights which they claimed in Rupert's Land. We objected very earnestly to some of the demands of the Company which were communicated to us by his Grace; but after much consideration and important modifications of the Company's demands, we agreed that if they would surrender the territory on the conditions which his Grace proposed, we would recommend the acceptance of these conditions by the Canadian Government.

The Duke of Buckingham's proposals will be found in the letter of Mr. Adderley, of the 1st December 1868, addressed to the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Considerable delay in the negotiations was occasioned by the retirement from office of the Duke of Buckingham and his colleagues, and also by the resignation of Lord Kimberley, the then Governor of the Company.

On the 18th January 1869, Earl Granville, who had acceded to office as Secretary of State for the Colonies, transmitted to us the reply of the Company, declining the proposals of the Duke of Buckingham. His Lordship subsequently requested us to communicate to him any observations which we might desire to offer upon this reply of the Company, and upon certain counter proposals which it contained. We felt reluctant, as representatives of Canada, to engage in a controversy with the Company concerning matters of fact, as well as questions of law and policy, while the negotiations with them was being carried on by the Imperial Government in its own name and of its own authority. But we did not feel at liberty to decline Lord Granville's request, and on the 8th of February, stated at length our views upon the various points raised in the letter of Sir Stafford Northcote, the new Governor of the Company, in answer to the proposals of the Duke of Buckingham. We beg to refer your Excellency to the correspondence, for full information as to the positions taken and the opinions expressed by us at this stage of the negotiation.

Lord Granville, being of opinion that the rejection by the Company of the proposals of his predecessor had terminated the negotiations instituted by him, submitted for our consideration proposals of his own, based on a different principle from that which had been laid down by the Duke of Buckingham.

We felt it our duty to state to his Lordship, that these proposals would not be acceptable to the Canadian Government. They were subsequently modified, and in the form in which they appear in the letter of Sir Frederic Rogers of the 9th March, were conditionally accepted by us, subject to the approval of your Excellency in Council.

Certain details were left by Lord Granville to be settled between the representatives of the Company and ourselves, which led to interviews and discussions with them, and to a correspondence which is also submitted herewith.

During the progress of the negotiations, a formal complaint was made to the Colonial Secretary by the representatives of the Company against the Canadian Government for undertaking the construction of a road between Lake of the Woods and the Red River Settlement, without having first obtained the consent of the Company. The letter conveying this complaint was referred to us by Earl Granville for such explanations as we were able to offer. The correspondence on this subject is also respectfully submitted.

Your Excellency is aware that since our return to Canada, the Hudson's Bay Company have signified to Lord Granville their acceptance of the terms proposed by him for the surrender to Her Majesty of their territorial rights in Rupert's Land. We have, therefore, the honour to submit the same, with a memorandum of the "details" agreed to by us on behalf of the Canadian Government, for the approval of your Excellency, and for such action thereupon as your Excellency may be advised to take.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

My Lord, Downing-street, 23 April 1868.

I HAVE already acknowledged, on the 18th of January, your Lordship's Despatch, No. 107,‡ of the 21st of December, transmitting a joint Address from the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, to Her Majesty, praying the annexation to Canada of Rupert's Land and the North West Territory. Your Lordship will have the goodness to inform the Senate and House of Commons that their Address has been duly laid before the Queen.

Her Majesty's Government will be willing to recommend a compliance with the prayer of the Address so soon as they shall be empowered to do so with a just regard to the rights and interests of Her Majesty's subjects interested in those territories. They are advised, however, that the requisite powers of Government and legislation cannot, consistently with the existing Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, be transferred to Canada without an Act of Parliament. Before such an Act can be obtained, it is necessary to consider the position of the Hudson's Bay Company.

The Company have held their Charter, and exercised privileges conferred by it, for 200 years, including rights of government and legislation, together with the property of all the lands and precious metals; and various eminent law officers, consulted in succession, have all declared that the validity of this Charter cannot justly be disputed by the Crown.

I have, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, called upon the Company to state the terms on which they would be prepared to surrender to the Crown whatever rights they have over the lands and precious metals, including the rights of government, with the intimation that no present payment in money will be made to them, but that in the transference of their rights to Canada they might have a reservation made to them of defined portions of land, and of a share a share of the future proceeds of the lands and precious metals of the territory, up to a certain fixed amount.

I enclose copies of the letters which have passed, up to the present time, between the Company and this Department, upon this subject.

Colonial Office, 23 April 1868, page 22.

I purpose to introduce a Bill into the Imperial Parliament, with the view of authorising any arrangement which may be effected on the basis thus indicated; of defining the territory over which it extends, and authorising the subsequent transfer to the Canadian Government of the rights and powers to be acquired by the Crown in respect to Government and property, in accordance with the prayer of the Address.

With respect to the North West Territory, the same obstacles do not exist to the transfer of the greater part by the Crown to Canada at the present time, subject to proper reservations of the rights and property of Her Majesty's subjects now settled therein, and for the protection of Her Majesty's Native subjects; but I apprehend that while it remains separated from Canada by the Hudson's Bay Company's territory, still under the Company's government, it will not be the desire of Canada to undertake the government of this more remote country. A portion of the North West Territory immediately adjacent to British Columbia, I am of opinion that it will be necessary for the public advantage to retain in the possession of the Crown, with a view to its incorporation with British Columbia.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Earl Granville, K.G., to the Right Honourable Sir John Young, Bart., G.C.M.G.

Sir, Downing-street, 10 April 1869.

The proprietors of the Hudson's Bay Company have considered, at a special meeting, the terms on which they have been invited to transfer their territorial rights to the Dominion of Canada, and I enclose the copy of a letter addressed to me by Sir S. Northcote, from which you will perceive that these terms have been acceded to.

Hudson's Bay Company, 10 April 1869, page 47.

You will observe that the Governor and Committee of the Company are authorised to concur in all such measures as may be found necessary for effecting this transfer, and for securing to the Company all the rights and reservations to which they will be entitled, provided that the acceptance of the terms by the Government and Parliament of Canada is duly signified to them within six months.

I trust that this acceptance may be confidently anticipated, and that by it an opening will be made for extending the benefits of a regular Government to those British subjects who at present occupy the Company's territory, for settling the tracts of fertile land which lie in the centre of the Continent, and for the consolidation of British North America under one Central Government.

On one point, which has not been hitherto touched upon, I am anxious to express to you the expectations of Her Majesty's Government. They believe that whatever may have been the policy of the Company, and the effect of their chartered right upon the progress of settlement, the Indian tribes, who form the existing population of this part of America, have profited by the Company's rule. They have been protected from some of the vices of civilisation; they have been taught, to some appreciable extent, to respect the laws and rely on the justice of the white man, and they do not appear to have suffered from any causes of extinction beyond those which are inseparable from their habits and their climate. I am sure that your Government will not forget the care which is due to those who must soon be exposed to new dangers, and, in the course of settlement, be dispossessed of the lands which they are used to enjoy as their own, or be confined within unwontedly narrow limits.

This question had not escaped my notice while framing the proposals which I laid before the Canadian Delegates and the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company. I did not, however, then allude to it, because I felt the difficulty of insisting on any definite conditions without the possibility of foreseeing the circumstances under which these conditions would be applied, and because it appeared to me wiser and more expedient to rely on the sense of duty and responsibility belonging to the Government and people of such a country as Canada. That Government, I believe, has never sought to evade its obligations to those whose uncertain rights and rude means of living are contracted by the advance of civilised man. I am sure that they will not do so in the present case, but that the old inhabitants of the country will be treated with such forethought and consideration as may preserve them from the dangers of the approaching change, and satisfy them of the friendly interest which their new governors feel in their welfare.

With the expression of this hope, I will close my Despatch, merely repeating my sincere desire that the annexation of this great territory may be speedily accomplished, and may bring to the Dominion all the advantages which the statesmen of Canada not unreasonably anticipate.

COPY of a LETTER from the Right Hon. Sir E. Head, Bart., K.C.B., to His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

Hudson's Bay House, London,
15 January 1868.

My Lord Duke,

IN addressing this letter to your Grace on behalf of the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company, I think that some apology is necessary for anticipating the official communication from the Colonial Office, of the resolutions passed in the Parliament of Canada, as well as the Address to be founded upon them; but as from the tone of the debate in the Canadian Parliament, and from the terms of the resolutions passed there, it is manifestly the object of that Parliament to have the power to establish in the Dominion of Canada, including the territory of Rupert's Land, courts which shall have jurisdiction in all matters arising in any part of British North America, and thus to give power to the tribunals so constituted, to determine upon the rights claimed by this Company under their Charter, a course of proceeding which this Committee consider to be so injurious to the interests of the Hudson's Bay Company, they are desirous to bring the matter before your Grace, and to submit their views upon the subject to Her Majesty's Government, before any assent is given, or determination come to, in reference to Her Majesty's approval of the proposed admission of Rupert's Land into the Union of British North America.

I beg to remind your Grace that the rights of this Company under their Charter have at various times been brought under the consideration of the Government, and that the result of those discussions has been a clear and distinct recognition, on the part of the Crown, that the general validity of the Charter cannot now be called in question, and in particular that the territorial ownership of the lands granted by the Charter, and the rights necessarily incidental thereto, must now be considered as valid.

It is true that questions have from time to time been raised in Canada as to the extent of the territory claimed by this Company under their Charter, and in some respects as to other rights which the Charter confers; but while Her Majesty's Government have at all times declined to be any party to proceedings on the subject, the opportunity has always been afforded to the authorities of Canada to bring any questions for adjudication before Her Majesty in Council—a course to which this Company have always been prepared to accede, and which appears to be the only legitimate mode of deciding their rights, if they are to be called in question.

The Canadians have altogether abstained from availing themselves of the opportunity thus afforded them, but it is now obviously the object of the Canadian Legislature to secure to tribunals of their own nomination the decision of those rights.

I may here state that, so far as the mere political powers granted by the Charter are concerned, such as the rights of government, taxation, or exclusive administration of justice, the Company have long since expressed their willingness that these powers should be vested in officers deriving their authority directly from the Crown; but before any such powers can with justice be transferred to the Colonial Government, I submit that the extent of the territorial rights of the Company should either be fully recognised, or that if the Canadian Government are desirous of procuring those rights for the benefit of Canada in general, they should, in the first instance, arrange with the Hudson's Bay Company the terms upon which they should be so acquired.

But should the Canadian Legislature still desire that any judicial investigation into the territorial rights of the Company should take place, such inquiry should be

be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in accordance with the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, given so long ago as July 1857, as the only tribunal to which ought to be delegated the construction of a Charter emanating from the Sovereign of Great Britain. This opinion your Grace will find at page 404 of the Report from the Select Committee on the Hudson's Bay Company, ordered, by the House of Commons, to be printed the 31st July and 11th August 1857.

25 January 1868.

COPY of a LETTER from the Right Honourable Sir E. Head, Bart., K.C.B., to His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

Hudson's Bay House, London,
My Lord Duke, 25 January 1868.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge Mr. Elliot's Letter, of the 18th instant, enclosing a copy of Address to the Queen, forwarded by the Governor General of Canada, and to thank your Grace for communicating these papers to the Hudson's Bay Company.

On this Address I beg to request your Grace's attention to the following observations on behalf of myself as Governor, and the Committee of the Company.

1. It seems necessary, in the first place, to distinguish the two classes of rights conferred on the Company by the Charter. Some of these are, no doubt, of a public or political character, such as belong to a proprietary Government; but others are practically of a private nature, such as might have been vested in any individual subject, or any private corporation, clothed with no public functions of any kind. Of these latter, it is only necessary at present to refer to the right of private property in the soil, and in the mines and minerals.

Report of 1857, Appendix, p. 404, paragraph 2.

2. It may be that the public or political rights of the Company, are, in the Charter, ill-defined, and of doubtful expediency at any time. It may be, too, as the Law Officers in their letter of 1857 appear to hint, that for any effectual exercise they require the aid of the right of private property, as vested in the Company by the same instrument.

3. The Committee need scarcely remind your Grace that so far from opposing a resumption by the Crown of the political powers of the Company, almost the first important step taken by them in 1863, was the adoption of the following resolution:—

Sir E. Head to Sir F. Rogers, 28 Aug. 1863.

"Resolved, that the time has come when, in the opinion of this Committee, it is expedient that the authority, executive and judicial, over the Red River Settlement, and the south-western portion of Rupert's Land, should be vested in officers deriving such authority directly from the Crown, and exercising it in the name of Her Majesty.

"That the Governor be empowered to communicate this Resolution to his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, and to discuss the subject with him, or with the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies; reporting from time to time to this Committee thereon."

Mr. C. Fortescue to Sir E. Head, 11 March 1864.

4. In the correspondence which ensued with the Colonial Office, it appears to be implied on the part of his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, that the fact of the right of private property in the soil being no longer possessed by the Crown, was one of the chief obstacles to a compliance with the suggestion made in the above Resolution. If this be so, the very fact of making this objection involves an admission in favour of the Company. Most assuredly, if the Crown had alienated its right of property in the soil and minerals of the Hudson's Bay Territory, it had granted it to no other party than the Hudson's Bay Company, and by no instrument other than the Charter of Charles II.

Page 68 of this Paper.

5. In Mr. Fortescue's letter of 11th March 1864, an offer of a contingent money payment, as the consideration for the cession of the territorial rights of the Company, was distinctly made by the Secretary of State. The proviso inserted in the postscript to that letter will be adverted to afterwards, and had reference only to the supposed rights of Canada.

See post, paragraph 9.

6. It is unnecessary for the Committee to refer to the undisputed enjoyment of these rights, at any rate since the time of the Treaty of Utrecht.

Letter of the Law Officers to Mr. Merivale, Appendix to Report, 1857, p. 404, last paragraph.

7. In addition to all this, it remains to quote the express words of the Law Officers, in their letter of 1857, already referred to. They say, "In our opinion the Crown could not now, with justice, raise the question of the general validity of the Charter; but that on every legal principle the Company's territorial ownership of the lands granted, and the rights necessarily incidental thereto, ought to be deemed to be valid."

Moreover, in a passage alluded to above, the Law Officers imply indirectly their belief in the validity of this right of private property, when they say that "rights of Government, taxation, exclusive administration of justice, or exclusive trade, otherwise than as a consequence of the right of ownership of the land, could not legally be insisted on by the Company." What other opinions of the Law Officers of the Crown may be found in the records of the Colonial Office it is not for us to say, but the evidence given by the Right Honourable Edward Ellice before the Committee of 1857, as to the opinions taken by him both for and against the Company, is well worth referring to.

Answers to Questions 5823.

8. One other point is a mere technicality, no doubt, but it may be worth observing that the title of the Company to their land is an English title, since it is granted "to be holden as of the manor of East Greenwich, in our county of Kent, in free and common soccage."

9. The Committee do not intend to impute to the Parliament or the Ministry of of Canada, any deliberate intention of violating such rights of the Hudson's Bay Company as they admit to exist, but it must be remembered that a theory has been started, and is referred to in the debate on this Address, by which the admissions of the English Government, and the opinion of the English Law Officers, as to the right of ownership in the soil, are directly negatived. It has been supposed, we believe, that France was in possession of these territories, or a large portion of them, when the Charter was granted; that they were therefore within the exception which that Charter contains with regard to territories belonging to any other Christian prince; and that this French title remained good, and was transferred to the English Crown, with Canada, at the final cession of that Province by France.

See postscript to letter, Mr. Fortescue to Sir E. Head, 11 March 1864, and letter, 5 April 1864.

10. This is not the place for entering on a discussion of the facts and law involved in this argument—an argument, as we have said, inconsistent with the continued recognition of the Company's rights in various ways by the English Government, and their legal advisers, for a long series of years; but if this objection to the Company's title shall be presented in a tangible form before a proper tribunal, the Hudson's Bay Company will be quite ready to meet it, and demonstrate its futility.

Pages 68 and 72 of this Paper.

11. The very existence, however, of such a theory in the minds of the Canadian Ministers, or the Canadian people, is a sufficient reason why, in justice to the Company, it should be set aside, or its truth or falsehood should be conclusively tested, before their rights of property, under the Great Seal of England, and, in fact, their future existence, are placed under the legislation and the absolute control of Canada.

12. The Committee cannot but feel that the Company has already had great reason to complain of the course pursued during the last few years. In 1865 the Canadian delegates sent to this country to promote the scheme of confederation solemnly "undertoook" with Mr. Cardwell to negotiate with the Hudson's Bay Company. The answer given by the Committee was, that they would be ready to consider any proposal. The fact of this undertaking was recited again in a subsequent letter as a reason why no other step should be taken. No negotiation, however, was opened, and in 1866 the Canadian Council resolved that such negotiation must devolve on the Government of the confederation when constituted, rather than on the Government of Canada. This was confirmed by the resolutions of the delegates in England of 3rd April 1867. After all, when the Confederation is formed, and its Parliament has met, resolutions are passed, and an Address to the Queen is adopted, praying that the powers of legislation and Government over the Hudson's Bay Territory, and the North Western Territory, may be conveyed to Canada first, and that the judicial decisions or negotiations as to the Company's rights should take place afterwards.

Despatch of Mr. Cardwell to Lord Monck, 17 June 1865.
Letter of Mr. Forster to Sir E. Head, 20 February 1866.
Minute, 22 June 1866.
Letter from Sir F. Rogers to Sir E. Head, 31 July 1866.
Mr. Elliot to Sir E. Head, 15 April 1867.

13. We desire in the first place to remark, that this inversion of the order of proceeding is entirely contrary to the expectation raised by the acts of the delegates, and by the communications from the Colonial Office to us. We may have erred in thinking so, but certainly we conceived that the negotiations, which the delegates in 1865 undertook to initiate, were intended under the Act of last Session to form the preliminary step for transferring the supreme control to Canada—not to follow after such transfer, with all the disadvantages to the Company which must thus ensue from the change of the relative position of the parties. It would appear, too, from a passage in a speech of the Honourable Mr. Holton in the Canadian Parliament, as reported in the "Canadian News," as per extract herewith, that the Committee were not the only parties who supposed this to be the intention of Government.

Extract, No. 1, enclosed.

The Committee moreover thought that it was expressly in anticipation of this original undertaking to negotiate being thus carried out, that the Secretary of State for the Colonies intimated his wish in the following terms, that the Company should abstain from any other arrangements likely to interfere with the views then entertained.

"It is of course for the Hudson's Bay Company to consider for themselves what course is most proper and conducive to their own interests. But it appears to Lord Carnarvon that any effective negotiation being for the moment impossible, it is for the interest of both parties that the question should remain open for arrangement so soon as an authority exists capable of dealing with it on the part of the Colony or Colonies interested. He would therefore regret to learn that the Company contemplate any immediate action which was calculated to embarrass the negotiations, which would then become possible, and which in the opinion of the executive council it would be the duty of the Confederate Government to open.

30 & 31 Vict. c. 3, s. 146.

14. The Committee felt no anxiety respecting the wide powers of transfer conferred on the Crown by the Act of last Session, because they did not believe that their rights of ownership in the soil and mineraals could be affected by it; and because after the undertaking to negotiate formally communicated to them, and the correspondence relating to it, they relied, as they continue to rely, on the honour and good faith of the English Government.

15. But the case assumes a very different aspect, if the plan of giving to the Canadian Parliament and Government legislative and administrative control over these territories, without defining and providing for the rights and interests of the Company as a condition precedent, should be carried out. So far as we now see, no security of any kind would exist against such a use of this control in taxation and other matters as might be thought best fitted for compelling the Company to accept any terms, however disadvantageous. No specific guarantee, it seems, is proposed to be given as to the legislation which might take place before these claims were finally disposed of, or as to the impartiality and competency of the courts before which the Company, if aggrieved, would have to seek redress. At any rate the relative position of the two parties to any such suit or discussion respecting these rights would, after the transfer of the legislative and administrative control, be one which must leave the Company, as defendant, more or less at the mercy of the plaintiff, and would, to say the least, taint the voluntary character of any agreement to be subsequently arrived at. The only reliance of the Company would be on the honesty and the considerate disinterestedness of the Canadian Parliament and people.

Extract from "Canadian News" enclosed), 2.

The Committee, moreover, venture to think that their apprehensions on this score are reasonably increased, rather than diminished, by all that is reported to have passed in the debates, and especially by the extract of the accompanying report of the speech of Sir John A. Macdonald, K.C.B., the Canadian Premier. The report is taken from the "Canadian News." It is probably condensed, and as a matter of course it may be more or less inaccurate.

30 & 31 Vict. c. 3, s. 146.

16. The Act of last Session provides that the incorporation of Rupert's Land and the North Western Territory with Canada may be made by the Queen "on such terms and conditions in each case as are in the Addresses expressed, and as the Queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of this Act; and the provisions of any Order in Council in that behalf shall have effect as if they had been enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland."

Now, looking to the previous correspondence between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Colonial Office, it is not unreasonable to suppose that so far as regards the territory of the Company, the Act contemplated the insertion of certain terms and conditions in any Address relating to the transfer of such territory.

But the Address, a copy of which your Grace has had the goodness to transmit to us, contains no "terms and conditions" whatever, except a vague assurance "that the Parliament of Canada will be ready to provide that the legal rights of any corporation, company, or individual within the same shall be respected, and placed under the protection of courts of competent jurisdiction."

Such an assurance is of little value when the party making it disputes the very existence of the rights in question, and at any rate it amounts to no more that a statement, that British subjects on British soil shall be entitled to the protection of a court of law of some kind, hereafter to be established by the act of one of the parties.

It might be presumed that redress before a competent tribunal would be the right of any one who was wronged; and such an assurance can hardly be deemed a "term" or "condition" of the kind, which the Statute intended to be set out specifically in the Address from the Legislature.

17. The Committee trust it may not for one moment be supposed that they arrogate to themselves any right, or entertain the smallest desire to impede, or

or even comment on the general policy of transferring the government of the North Western Territory, and of the Hudson's Bay territory, to the Confederate Government of Canada. In this, as in everything else, they would bow with submission to the authority of the Crown, and rejoice in any measure which was really calculated to strengthen loyalty, and promote union in British North America.

18. What is asked for as a matter of justice to a proprietary, consisting of upwards of 1,700 shareholders, who have paid a very large sum on the faith of our Charter, and of the protection of their rights of property in the soil by English law, is the adoption by Her Majesty's Government of one of the following alternatives:—

1st. That some conclusive agreement as to the extent, value, and compensation to be made for the claims of the Company, as owners of the soil and minerals of the Hudson's Bay Territory, and some arrangement by which burthens assumed by them in their political capacity, such as the endowment of the bishopric, may, when that capacity ceases, be transferred to others, should be completed before, not after, the transfer of the government of the North Western Territory, or Hudson's Bay Territory to Canada.

2nd. That before any incorporation of Rupert's Land, or the North Western Territory with Canada, the rights of private property vested in the Company, and the exact limits of such rights, should be ascertained, acknowledged, and efficiently protected by law, in a manner binding on any Colonial Government, so that they should not be at any time hereafter impeached or violated without proper compensation.

"IT struck him, too, that what was in contemplation in the Union Act was, that the Address to Her Majesty should follow the negotiations, and that the Address should set forth, clearly and distinctly, the terms on which we were prepared to unite that territory with Canada."

Enclosure 2, in No. 4.

EXTRACT from a SPEECH of Sir John A. Macdonald, K.C.B., in the Canadian Parliament, reported as above. Encl. 2, in No. 4.

"IT had been said, by the Member for West Durham, that this was a worse proposition than the proposition of 1865. It was precisely the same; it was simply that we wished to take possession of this territory, and would undertake to legislate for it and to govern it, leaving the Hudson's Bay Company no right except the right of asserting their title in the best way they could in courts of competent jurisdiction. And what would their title be worth the moment it was known that the country belonged to Canada, and that the Canadian Government and Canadian Courts had jurisdiction there, and that the chief protection of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the value of their property, namely, their exclusive right of trading in those regions, were gone for ever? The Company would only be too glad that the country should be handed over to Canada, and would be ready to enter into any reasonable arrangement.

"The value of the Company's interest would be determined by the value of their stock; and what would that be worth when the whole country belonged to Canada?"

Sir, Downing-street, 23 April 1868.

I AM directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to acquaint you that he has had under his consideration the Address from the Parliament of Canada to Her Majesty, praying that Rupert's Land and the North West Territory may be united with the Dominion of Canada, and placed under the authority of the Canadian Parliament, and the letter from the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, dated the 25th January,* on that subject.

Her Majesty's Government think that it will be right to comply, under proper conditions, with the wish expressed by the Parliament of Canada, and they propose to introduce a Bill for the purpose into the Imperial Parliament. They desire, however, to pay due regard to the interests of Her Majesty's subjects already concerned in the territory; and with that view they will be prepared to make provision for any reasonable terms which may be agreed upon with the Hudson's Bay Company.

I am desired to call your attention to the negotiations which took place in 1864, between the Secretary of State and the Company, as recorded in the correspondence referred to in the margin, and I am to request that you will state what are the terms which the Company would be prepared to accept, proceeding on the principles then adopted, namely, that the compensation should be derived from the future proceeds of the lands, and of any gold which may be discovered in Rupert's Land, coupled with reservations of defined portions of land to the Company.

Sir, 24 April 1868.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd instant, addressed to the Deputy Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, and to inform you that the subject-matter of this communication will be taken into consideration by the Committee, and a reply made thereto at an early date.

I take this opportunity to inform you, that I have this day been elected Governor of the Company, in the room of the late Sir Edmund Head, Bart.

COPY of a LETTER from the Earl of Kimberley to the Right Honourable C. B. Adderley, M.P.

Sir, Hudson's Bay House, London,
13 May 1868.

Your letter of the 23rd ultimo, which I have already had the honour to acknowledge, has been carefully considered by the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company, and I am authorised by the Committee to make the following reply.

The

The Committee wish in the first place to express the satisfaction with which they have learnt that Her Majesty's Government, whilst thinking it right to comply, under proper provisions, with the prayer of the Address to the Queen from the Parliament of Canada, that Rupert's Land and the North West Territory may be united with the Dominion of Canada, desire to pay due regard to the interests of Her Majesty's subjects already concerned in the territory, and with that view will be prepared to make provision for any reasonable terms which may be agreed upon with the Hudson's Bay Company.

Before proceeding to state the conditions which they would undertake to recommend the proprietors to accept, the Committee think it necessary to point out the important difference in the basis of the negotiations between the Secretary of State for the Colonies in 1864, to which you refer in your letter, from that of the negotiations into which his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos now invites the Company to enter.

In the letter of Mr. Fortescue of 11th March 1864, the first condition proposed by the Duke of Newcastle was —

"That within certain geographical limits (coinciding more or less with those laid down in your letter), the territorial rights of the Company should be surrendered to the Crown."

These geographical limits are defined in the letter of Sir Edmund Head of 13th* November 1863, as follows:— Printed as Appendix III. p. 66.

"With regard to the extent of the proposed Colony, of which the seat of Government would be Red River or Fort Garry, the Committee presume that his Grace would wish it to include the whole country from the frontier of the United States to the north branch of the Saskatchewan, and to extend eastward towards Lake Superior, as far as the frontier of Canada, wherever the precise line of that frontier may be found. Perhaps the most convenient limit for the northern boundary would be either the Saskatchewan itself, or a line running from the Rocky Mountains eastward through Edmonton House and Fort Cumberland, and from the latter following the Saskatchewan down to Lake Winnipeg. Nothing would be gained by going further to the northward, nor by including the eastern side of Lake Winnipeg; but from the mouth of the Winnipeg river, where it enters the lake, the line of demarcation might be run eastward until it cut the Canadian frontier somewhere north of Lake Superior or Lake Huron." * Query 11th.

From this quotation his Grace will see that the terms to which Sir Edmund Head stated in his letter of 13th April 1864, that the Committee were willing to agree, referred only to a portion of the territory held by the Company, being that portion which it is supposed may be capable of settlement.

Now, on the other hand, it is proposed, as the Committee understand your letter, to extinguish the Company's territorial rights in the whole of Rupert's Land, and to place the whole of Rupert's Land, together with the North Western Territory, under the Government of Canada.

The Committee have invariably expressed their anxiety to offer no obstacle to any arrangements for facilitating the colonisation of all such parts of Rupert's Land as can possibly be settled; they have only asked that reasonable compensation be secured to the Company for its territorial rights; and in the letter of Sir E. Head of the 25th of January last,* they disclaimed all desire to impede the general policy of transferring the Government of the North West Territory and of the Hudson's Bay Territory to the Government of Canada; but his Grace will not fail to perceive that there is a wide difference between the terms assented to by the Committee in their correspondence with the Duke of Newcastle, under which the Company would have retained the exclusive control over that part of the territory where their fur trade is principally carried on, and the surrender of the whole of their territorial rights; and it becomes, therefore, of the utmost consequence to the Company that such provisions shall be made as will enable hem to carry on their fur trade without interruption. * Page 17.

Bearing these considerations in mind, the Committee are prepared to recommend the proprietors to accept the following terms, which, as his Grace will perceive, are based upon the terms proposed in Sir Edmund Head's letter of 13th April

April 1864, with such additions as the altered state of the case seems to them to require.

1. That the Company shall surrender all the territory which they hold under their Charter, with the reservation of all their posts and stations, with an area of 6,000 acres round each such post or station; this reservation of 6,000 acres, however, not to apply to the Red River Settlement.

2. That the Company shall be entitled to receive one shilling for every acre of the land surrendered, which shall be disposed of by the Government, whether by sale, lease, or free grant, or parted with in any other manner.

3. That one quarter of the sum received by the Government as an export duty for gold and silver, or on leases of gold and silver mines, or for licenses for gold and silver mining, shall be paid to the Company; the amount to be received under this and the preceding Article being limited to a total sum conjointly of one million sterling.

4. That the Canadian Government shall confirm all titles to land that has been alienated by the Company at Red River or elsewhere.

5. That whenever the Government shall have sold, leased, granted, or otherwise parted with 50,000 acres, the Company shall be entitled, for every such 50,000 acres, to a free grant of 5,000 acres of wild land, to be selected by them.

6. That no tax shall be imposed upon any land belonging to the Company not under cultivation, and no exceptional tax shall be imposed upon the Company's other lands or property, or upon the Company's servants.

7. That the disputed matter of the Company's lands in Canada be settled by issuing grants on the footing formerly agreed upon by Mr. Vankoughnet and Mr. Hopkins.

8. That the Canadian Government shall take over from the Company all the materials for the construction of the telegraph now in Rupert's Land and the North West Territory, on payment of the cost price and the expenses already incurred, with interest.

9. That full liberty to carry on their trade shall be secured to the Company free from any special or exceptional taxation.

10. That until the million sterling stipulated by Articles 2 and 3 shall be paid to the Company, no export duties shall be levied by Canada upon furs exported by the Company; and no import duties shall be levied upon articles imported by the Company into the North Western Territory, and into that part of Rupert's Land which is not included within the geographical limits laid down in Sir E. Head's letter of 13th November 1863; the Company to be further entitled to import goods in bond, free of duty, through any part of the surrendered territory into the North Western Territory and the aforesaid part of Rupert's Land.

Lastly, that in order to afford to the Company a guarantee for the due fulfilment of these provisions by the Canadian Government, power shall be given to the Company to bring before the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council for decision any matters connected with the carrying into effect the foregoing provisions, in respect of which they may consider themselves aggrieved.

The Committee assume that all charges of a public character which now fall on the Company will be transferred to the Canadian Government, and that in order to prevent any dispute with Canada hereafter as to the limits of the territory to which the conditions to be agreed upon shall apply, the boundary line between the territory surrendered by the Company and the present Dominion of Canada, will be precisely defined before the cession is completed.

The Committee desire me, in conclusion, to refer to the letter of Sir E. Head of the 25th of January last, and especially to the last paragraph of that letter. They feel confident that they will not be deemed unreasonable in asking that, in transferring the North West Territory to Canada, such provisions shall be made as may secure to the Company full liberty to trade as at present, as well as the unmolested possession of their posts, stations, and other property, free from any exceptional duties on their property or servants.

Copy of a LETTER from Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart., to the Earl of Kimberley.

My Lord, Downing-street, 7 August 1868.

A Bill having now passed through both Houses of Parliament, conferring the necessary power for the surrender to Her Majesty by the Hudson's Bay Company of their territories and privileges, on such terms as may be agreed upon, I am directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to transmit to you a copy of the Act.

31 & 32 Vict. c. 105. Printed as Appendix II. p. 65.

In your Lordship's letter, dated the 13th of May last,* there are certain points in the terms set forth which the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos would not feel at liberty to agree in their present shape. His Grace believes that the best prospect of arriving at an agreement satisfactory to both parties will probably be afforded by personal consultation. He would propose, therefore, to meet your Lordship, at such time as may be convenient for the purpose to your Lordship, and to any members of the Company whose assistance you would desire. Some time in the ensuing month will, probably, be suitable.

I beg leave to acknowledge and thank you for your letter of the 7th instant.

I request you will have the goodness to inform his Grace the Duke of Buckingham that I shall gladly avail myself of his suggestion that I should have an interview with him next month to discuss the terms proposed in my letter of the 13th of May last;† and I will, when the time approaches, take an opportunity of communicating with his Grace as to the day and hour when it will be convenient to him to receive me and such other members of the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company as may accompany me.

The Earl of Kimberley to the Right Hon. C. B. Adderley, M.P.
27 Oct. 1868.

Copy of a LETTER from the Earl of Kimberley to the Right Honourable C. B. Adderley, M.P.

Hudson's Bay House, London,
Sir, 27 October 1868.

The Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company have received from Sir C. Lampson and myself reports of the interviews which we have had the honour to have with his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, on the subject of the proposed cession to Canada of the Company's territorial rights; and they have anxiously considered how far they would be justified in altering the terms proposed in my letter of May 13th, with a view to meet the objections which have been raised to them.

They understand his Grace to suggest that, instead of the Company being entitled to a free grant of 5,000 acres, to be selected by them, for every 50,000 acres which shall be alienated by the Government, the whole territory should be at once divided into sections on the map, and that a certain portion of each section should be allotted to the Company, by a fixed geographical rule, the Company taking its chance as to the value of the land which might fall to its share; and further, that, in order to meet the evils which might arise from the existence of so many blocks of wild land free from taxation, the exemption of the Company's wild land from taxes should continue only for a limited period, say, for example, 20 years.

The Committee regret that they are unable to agree to this mode of allotment. One of the chief inducements to their shareholders to accept the proposed arrangements would be, that according to the plan of the Committee, if, as it is hoped, the colonisation of the country proceeded rapidly under the new Government, the Company would receive blocks of land of moderate size, in the vicinity of the new settlements, which would possess an actual value in the market. But if the plan suggested by the Duke of Buckingham were adopted, instead of the grants to the Company proceeding equally with the progress of colonisation, the whole country would be dotted over with isolated tracts of wild land belonging to the Company, many of which, even if ultimately available for settlement, must necessarily remain entirely valueless until long after the expiration of the 20 years, and, if taxed, would be a heavy burden instead of a source of profit to the Company.

The Committee are willing, however, to agree that the exemption from taxes on the Company's wild land shall only apply to each block of 5,000 acres, which they may be entitled from time to time to select, for a period of 20 years from the date of selection. This would give the Company a reasonable time within which to turn each block to profitable account, and at the same time the ultimate liability to taxation would prevent these lands from becoming an obstruction to the free progress of settlement. The Committee think it right to add that they do not propose that land purchased by the Company should be reckoned in the 50,000 acres, and that the selection of the land by the Company naturally implies that the Company shall bear the cost of such a survey as may be necessary to define the land selected, it being understood that the Company shall have the option of making the survey by means of their own officers.

The Committee are also quite willing that land granted for such purposes as roads, churches, or schools, shall not be liable to the payment of 1 s. per acre to the Company, provided that the exemption is restricted to the land actually used in the construction of the work, and that the exceptions are specified in the agreement with the Government for the cession of the Company's rights.

They also admit that it is proper that a similar exemption should apply to land set apart as Indian reserves, on the understanding that these reserves will be made by Her Majesty's Government, as they are informed it is his Grace's intention they shall be, before the Company's territory is transferred to Canada; and that if, at any time before the million sterling is paid to the Company, such land shall be used or granted for other purposes, it shall become liable to the payment of 1*s.* an acre, in common with other land.

With respect to the land which the Committee have asked that the Company may retain as private property round their posts and stations, if 6,000 acres are thought to be too much in that part of Rupert's Land which is suited for settlement, the Committee will consent that the 6,000 acres shall only apply to posts which do not lie within the limits referred to under Article 10, in my letter of 13th May, as laid down in Sir E. Head's letter of 13th November 1863, and that within those limits the extent of land to be retained round each post shall not exceed 3,000 acres; all the lands retained to be free from taxation, except when reclaimed from a wild state. Lastly, the Committee cannot deny that the stipulation that the Company shall have power to bring before the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council matters in dispute, is open to the objection that the Privy Council acts only as a court of appeal; and as they presume that the Company would be entitled to appeal from the local courts to the Privy Council, they do not think it indispensable to insist on this demand.

The

The Committee, in declaring their willingness to make these alterations in the terms which they proposed, are actuated by a sincere desire to arrive at an agreement with Her Majesty's Government; but they are conscious that they would be wanting in their duty if they did not add, that at the half-yearly meeting of their shareholders, held since my letter of 13th May was written, opinions were expressed strongly adverse to any arrangement for the cession of the Company's territorial rights, which did not secure the payment, as compensation, of a sum of hard money.

Sir E. Head, in the concluding paragraphs of his letter of 13th April 1864,* in which terms were proposed similar to those now under discussion, but involving the cession of a part only of the Company's territory, avowed to the Duke of Newcastle the apprehensions of the Committee that it might be difficult to convince the shareholders that the offers then made were to their advantage; and although the Committee have felt bound not to recede from the terms contained in my letter of 13th May,† which were based on their former offers, they cannot conceal from his Grace that they anticipate a very serious opposition on the part of their shareholders to any such arrangement as that which they have put forward.

* Vide Appendix III., page 72.

His Grace will recollect that, at our first interview, before the Canadian delegates had started for England, Sir C. Lampson and I strongly insisted upon this point, and that we suggested that if Canada would agree to pay to the Company one million sterling, in bonds, such a settlement might be acceptable to our proprietors.

The Committee entirely share this view. The more they consider the very complicated arrangements which have been devised as a substitute for the payment of a sum of money at once, the more they are convinced that it is as much for the interest of Canada as of the Company that the claims of the Company should be provided for by a direct compensation, and not by contingent payments extending over a long series of years, and by grants of land under stipulations which, although indispensable to protect the Company from spoliation, would be invidious in the eyes of the future settlers, and embarrassing to the Colonial Government.

At the same time the Committee desire me to assure his Grace that if their terms, as now modified, are agreed to by Her Majesty's Government, the Committee will use all their influence to induce the proprietors to confirm them.

The Right Hon. C. B. Adderley, M.P., to the Earl of Kimberley.
1 Dec. 1868.

COPY of a LETTER from the Right Hon. C. B. Adderley, M.P., to the Earl of Kimberley.

My Lord, Downing-street, 1 December 1868.

I AM directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's letter of the 27th October,‡ and to express his Grace's regret that the serious illness of Mr. McDougall, one of the two delegates sent from Canada, which prevented his Grace from communicating with him, should have caused so long a delay in the answer.

His Grace regrets to perceive that the letter under reply does not afford much prospect of an arrangement being come to.

Her Majesty's Government, in the letter of Mr. Adderley of 23rd April§ to Sir Curtis Lampson, referring to the negotiations which took place in 1864, requested to be informed "what terms the Company would be prepared to accept, proceeding on the principles then adopted, namely, that the compensation should be derived from the future proceeds of the lands, and of any gold which may be discovered in Rupert's Land, coupled with reservations of defined portions of land to the Company."

§ Page 22.

To this your Lordship replied that the Committee were prepared to recommend—

1. That the Company shall surrender all the territory which they hold under their Charter, with the reservation of all their posts and stations, with an an area of 6,000 acres round each such post or station; this reservation of 6,000 acres, however, not to apply to the Red River Settlement.

2. That the Company shall be entitled to receive 1*s.* for every acre of the land surrendered, which shall be disposed of by the Government, whether by sale, lease, or free grant, or parted with in any other manner.

3. That one quarter of the sum received by the Government as an export duty for gold and silver, or on leases of gold and silver mines, or for licenses for gold and silver mining, shall be paid to the Company; the amount to be received under this and the preceding article being limited to a total sum conjointly of 1,000,000*l.* sterling.

4. That the Canadian Government shall confirm all titles to land that have been alienated by the Company at Red River or elsewhere.

5. That whenever the Government shall have sold, leased, granted, or otherwise parted with 50,000 acres, the Company shall be entitled for every such 50,000 acres to a free grant of 5,000 acres of wild land, to be selected by them.

6. That no tax shall be imposed upon any land belonging to the Company not under cultivation, and no exceptional tax shall be imposed upon the Company's other lands or property, or upon the Company's servants.

7. That the disputed matter of the Company's lands in Canada be settled by issuing grants on the footing formerly agreed upon by Mr. Vankoughnet and Mr. Hopkins.

8. That the Canadian Government shall take over from the Company all the materials for the construction of the telegraph now in Rupert's Land, and the North West Territory, on payment of the cost price, and the expenses already incurred with interest.

9. That full liberty to carry on their trade shall be secured to the Company free from any special or exceptional taxation.

10. That until 1,000,000*l.* sterling, stipulated by Articles 2 and 3, shall be paid to the Company, no export duties shall be levied by Canada upon furs exported by the Company, and no import duties shall be levied upon articles imported by the Company into the North Western Territory, and into that part of Rupert's Land which is not included within the geographical limits laid down in Sir E. Head's letter of 13th November 1863; the Company to be further entitled to import goods in bond, free of duty, through any part of the surrendered territory into the North Western Territory, and the aforesaid part of Rupert's Land.

Lastly. That in order to afford to the Company a guarantee for the due fulfilment of these provisions by the Canadian Government, power shall be given to the Company to bring before the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council for decision any matters connected with the carrying into effect the foregoing provisions, in respect of which they may consider themselves aggrieved.

His Grace intimated in reply that there were "certain points in the terms set forth to which he would not feel at liberty to agree in their present shape"; and at the meetings which ensued, his Grace expressed his strong objections to the principle of the proposals of the Company respecting reserves of land to be selected from time to time at the discretion of the Company, and to the principle of special exemption from taxation in their favour, and expressed his opinion that there were many points in the other proposals requiring material modification.

Your Lordship's present letter intimates that the Company are unable to agree to certain modifications which suggested themselves during the discussions as modes of avoiding the objections entertained by his Grace, and proceeds to state the changes which the Company are willing to agree to, and which his Grace understands to be as follows:—

1st. That the exemption from taxes on the Company's wild lands shall only last for a period of 20 years from the date of selection.

2ndly. That

2ndly. That any lands purchased by the Company shall not reckon in the quantities of 50,000 acres in respect of which the Company should be entitled to select 5,000 acres.

3rdly. That the Company shall bear the expense of surveying their blocks of 5,000 acres.

4thly. That lands granted for such purposes as roads, churches, or schools shall not be liable to the payment of one shilling per acre to the Company.

5thly. That the same exception shall apply to lands set apart by Her Majesty's Government as Indian reserves, before the Company's territory is transferred to Canada.

6thly. That with regard to land around posts beyond what is designated the Fertile Belt, 6,000 acres shall be granted, and that only 3,000 acres shall be the quantity within that belt.

7thly. That the proposed recourse to the Privy Council as a Court of First Instance shall be abandoned.

His Grace is unable to recommend the adoption by Her Majesty's Government of such terms for the surrender of the territorial rights of the Company. Whatever be the future government of the territory, whether by the Hudson's Bay Company or by Canada, or by any other authority, very considerable annual outlay will have, as in all other unsettled countries, to be incurred in clearing roads, maintenance and opening of navigation, &c., and surveying.

For these charges the produce of the early sales of land is the natural resource. But by the Company's proposals they would deprive the future Government of any prospect, for a long time at least, of receiving any income.

1st. They first stipulate, not for a share of the receipts from land, but for a definite sum per acre, a sum in all probability far in excess of what is likely in practice to be obtained for the greater portion.

2ndly. They stipulate that they shall retain certain reserves around their posts, amounting, therefore, according to the lists of posts handed in by Sir C. Lampson, to upwards of 500,000 acres of the land most likely to be made available for settlement and sale, as being the land surrounding the established posts of the Company, which they have after long experience retained as the most advantageous positions for trade and occupation, and of which nearly 100,000 acres surround the posts in what is called the Fertile Belt of the territory.

3rdly. And that they shall also receive a share of mineral rights and confirmation of all titles.

4thly. They proceed to stipulate for a further reserve of one-tenth of the whole territory, and that the Company shall have this tenth in blocks of 5,000 acres, to be selected as each successive 50,000 is alienated, and not merely to select in the same locality, but anywhere; so that, for instance, if land is alienated in the higher parts of the Rocky Mountains, at Jasper House, for example, in consequence of the mining operations in that district; or for fishing stations or mining purposes on the coast of Hudson's Bay or Labrador, the Company should be entitled to select the proportionate reserve in such part of the most fertile region as they may consider will realize the utmost profit to them, whether by its cultivation or development, or by its power of obstruction to others.

These lands, moreover, are to be exempt from taxation for a period of 20 years from selection, and the lands retained round the posts to be entirely free from taxation unless reclaimed.

These conditions his Grace cannot accede to; his Grace would, however, recommend Her Majesty's Government to agree to a surrender on the following conditions:—

1st. That the land to be retained by the Company in the neighbourhood of their posts shall vary according to the importance of the post, in no case whatever exceeding 6,000 acres in all for any one post, including the cultivated or reclaimed land now occupied; and in no case exceeding 3,000 acres within the Fertile Belt for principal posts, and 500 acres for minor posts; the additional land retained to be set out, so as not to include frontage to rivers, or tracks, roads, or portages.

2nd. The Company to receive one-fourth share of all receipt from land. If any free grants of land be made for other than public purposes, such land shall be deemed to have been sold at 1*s.* per acre.

3rd. That one quarter of the sum received by the Government as an export duty for gold and silver, or on leases of gold and silver mines, or for licenses for gold and silver mining, shall be paid to the Company; the amount to be received under this and the preceding article being limited to a total sum conjointly of 1,000,000 l. sterling.

4th. That the Imperial Government shall confirm all titles to land that has been alienated by the Company at Red River or elsewhere.

5th. That the Company shall have the option of selecting five lots of not less than 200 acres each in each township, whenever it is set out, on payment of rateable cost of survey.

6th. That no exceptional tax shall be imposed upon the Company's lands, trade, or servants.

7th. That full liberty to carry on their trade shall be secured to the Company.

8th. The Company to have similar reserves granted them in connection with their posts in the North West Territory.

9th. The boundary lines between Hudson's Bay and Canada to be defined, and between Hudson's Bay and North West Territory to be defined, by a natural or geographical boundary, agreed on.

10th. No wild lands to be taxable until surveyed and marked.

11th. That whenever the payment of 1,000,000 l. sterling, under Article 3, shall have been made as therein provided, in cash, or otherwise extinguished, by any payment or commutation, by Canada, to the satisfaction of the Company, the rights of the Company to further selections of lots, to royalties and share of land receipts, shall cease.

12th. Such lands as Her Majesty's Government shall deem necessary to be set aside for the use of the native Indian population shall be reserved altogether from this arrangement, and the Company shall not be entitled to the payment of any share of receipts, or any royalty therefrom, or right of selection in respect thereof, under previous articles, unless for such part, if any, of these lands as may be appropriated, with the consent of the Crown, to any other purpose than that of the benefit of the Indian natives.

If these terms are approved, Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to conclude an arrangement, and to submit it to the Canadian Government for their favourable consideration; but if the Company shall not assent to these conditions, Her Majesty's Government will consider themselves unpledged by any of the offers that have been made.

Hudson's Bay House, London,
Sir, 22 December 1868.

I HAVE the honour to enclose, for the information of the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, extracts of letters recently received from Governor Mactavish, dated Fort Garry, Red River Settlement, 10th October and 11th November, from which it will be seen that the Canadian Government have intimated, through an agent sent to Red River by the direction of the Canadian Commissioner for Public Works, their intention to construct a road from Fort Garry to the Lake of the Woods, through the territory of the Company. A trespass upon the freehold territory of the Company must be committed in order to carry out this intention.

The Committee cannot but look upon this proceeding as a most unusual and improper one, especially as negotiations are at present pending for the transfer of the territory of the Company to Canada. This trespass will be an actual encroachment on the soil of the Company, and that too by a Government which has constantly, up to this time, and still disputes the right of this Company over that soil.

The Committee therefore ask for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government, but at the same time they beg leave to say that any application by Her Majesty's Government, or the Canadian Government, for permission to make this road will be favourably entertained.

EXTRACTS of Letters from Governor Mactavish to W. G. Smith, Esq., Secretary, dated, respectively, Fort Garry, Red River Settlement, the 10th October and 11th November 1868.

10th October.—"I AM informed that the Canadian Government have forwarded, in charge of a Mr. Snow, a quantity of provisions, which Mr. Snow has written to one of the merchants here to provide freight for from Georgetown, and appointed the 15th instant as the date on which the supplies will be at Georgetown. Mr. Snow himself says nothing on the subject, but it is rumoured here that he comes up for the purpose of superintending the making of a cart-road from this place to the Lake of the Woods, and that the provisions he is bringing are to be used in payment of labour on the above road."

11th November.—"Mr. Snow, who I before advised you was expected here to superintend in making a road from this settlement to the Lake of the Woods, with a view to opening direct communication with Canada, arrived some time ago, and is now on the eve of commencing operations. He has brought in with him some provisions, with which he purposes paying for labour on the road. On his arrival here, he called on me to show his instructions from the Commissioner of Public Works. These contained nothing of any consequence beyond the expression of a hope on the part of the Commissioner that the Company's agent here would offer no opposition to Mr. Snow's operations, but would leave the matter entirely in the hands of the Imperial Government, which, as generally people here regard Mr. Snow's arrival as opportune, on account of the scarcity of provisions, I agreed to do; and without instructions to protest against Mr. Snow's action, I did not think it politic to do so.

Sir, Downing-street, 4 January 1869.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 22nd ultimo,* stating that the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company propose to postpone sending in their answer to Mr. Adderley's letter of 1st December, until after the election of a new Governor, in the room of the Right Hon. the Earl of Kimberley, for which purpose a General Court of the Proprietors has been summoned for Tuesday, the 5th inst.

I am to express Lord Granville's hope that the Committee will not allow any unnecessary delay to take place in coming to a decision upon the proposals contained in Mr. Adderley's letter.

COPY of a LETTER from the Right Hon. Sir Stafford H. Northcote, Bart., to Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart.

Hudson's Bay House, London,
Sir, 13 January 1869.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you, for the information of Earl Granville, that I was elected by the shareholders of this Company, on Tuesday the 5th instant, to the office of Governor, vacant by the resignation of the Earl of Kimberley.

† Page 27.

It now becomes my duty to address you in reply to Mr. Adderley's letter, dated the 1st December 1868,† which was received by my predecessor on the eve of his resignation, and to which, in consequence of that event, the Committee have not been able to send an earlier answer.

Before making any observations upon the particular topics discussed in Mr. Adderley's letter, I am desired by the Committee to assure Lord Granville that they continue sincerely anxious to promote the object, with a view to which this Company was reconstructed five-and-a-half years ago, viz., the gradual settlement of such portions of their territory as admit of colonisation; that they adhere to the opinion expressed in their resolution of the 28th August 1863, viz.: that the time has come when it is expedient that the authority, executive and judicial, over the Red River Settlement, and the south-western portion of Rupert's Land should be vested in officers deriving such authority directly from the Crown; and that they cheerfully accept the decision of Her Majesty's Government, communicated to them in Mr. Adderley's letter of the 23rd April 1868,‡ viz., that the whole of the Company's territory should, under proper conditions, be united with the Dominion of Canada, and placed under the authority of the Canadian Parliament.

‡ Page 22.

Acting

Acting in accordance with the wish of Her Majesty's Government, as conveyed to them in Mr. Elliot's letter of the 23rd January 1867,* the Committee have declined to encourage overtures which have been made to them by private persons for the purchase of portions of the Company's territory, with a view to their colonisation, and have kept the whole question in abeyance during the time that the negotiations, which have led to the Confederation of the British Provinces constituting the Dominion of Canada, were proceeding. In the whole of that time they have taken no step which could give rise to fresh complications, or could place any new difficulty in the way of the admission of their territory into the Confederation when the proper moment should arrive; and when they were informed by Mr. Adderley's letter of the 23rd of April that the Parliament of Canada had addressed Her Majesty upon the subject, and were requested to state the terms which the Company would be prepared to accept, proceeding on the principle adopted in the interrupted negotiation of 1864, they unhesitatingly complied with the desire of the Government.

* Printed in Appendix III., page 76.

It is therefore with surprise, as well as with regret, that they have learnt from the letter now under reply, that the terms proposed by them, even when most strictly in conformity with the principles adopted in 1864, are considered by Her Majesty's Government to be inadmissible, and not to afford much prospect of an arrangement being come to. They find, for instance, that the stipulation that the Company should receive one shilling per acre on lands hereafter sold, which was originally suggested to the Committee by his Grace the late Duke of Newcastle, in Mr. Fortescue's letter of 11th March 1864,† and which has never hitherto been called in question, is the first point to which exception is now taken. Objections are also raised against several other proposals which have been long before the Government, while no notice at all is taken of some which have been made for the first time with a view to the protection of the Company's trade, and with regard to which the Committee are left in ignorance whether they are considered admissible or not.

† Ibid, page 68.

The Committee, although somewhat embarrassed by this apparent change in the spirit of the correspondence, desire me, however, to make the following observations upon some of the remarks contained in Mr. Adderley's letter, in order that there may be no misapprehension as to the bearing of their proposals.

The Committee are aware that, as is stated in Mr. Adderley's letter, in order to prepare the country for settlement, very considerable annual outlay will have to be incurred, and that for this charge the produce of the early sales of land is the natural resource; but they are at a loss to understand upon what ground it is alleged that their proposals would deprive the future Government of the ceded territory of "any prospect, for a long time at least, of receiving any income." The only part of the territory in which it is probable that any early or extensive settlement will take place is the part known as the Fertile Belt. It has been confidently asserted by independent persons who have travelled through the country that a great part of this land is not inferior in quality, or in advantages of climate, to the adjoining United States territory, now forming the State of Minnesota; and it has been justly pointed out that, being prairie land, it does not require much labour to render it fit for cultivation. But the price of land in Minnesota ranges, as the Committee are informed, from 5 s. to 1 l. per acre. The Committee think, therefore, that the fixed payment of 1 s. per acre, proposed by the Duke of Newcastle, and accepted by them as a basis of compensation, cannot be deemed to be unreasonable in so far as relates to land sold within the limits set forth in Sir Edmund Head's letter of the 11th November 1863.‡

As regards any portions of land lying outside those limits which may possibly be sold, the Committee think it very improbable that such sales will take place except for mining purposes, in which case the payment of 1 s. an acre could hardly be deemed excessive. In order to save trouble and to obviate disputes, therefore, the Committee proposed the fixed payment of 1 s. per acre in respect of all sales, wherever they may take place; and they believe that the arrangement would have been, on the whole, more favourable to Canada than that suggested by Mr. Adderley.

Mr. Adderley proceeds to remark, with reference to Lord Kimberley's proposal, that the Company should retain certain reserves around their posts, that the reservations would amount to upwards of 500,000 acres. It was, however, stated by Lord Kimberley and the Deputy Governor, at an interview with the Duke of Buckingham upon this subject, that the Committee were willing to confine their claim for reserves to the limits defined by Sir Edmund Head's letter of the 11th November 1863; that they were prepared to agree that such reservations should be measured by the importance of the posts to which they were to be attached, and should in no case exceed 3,000 acres. The total quantity of land to be retained by the Company under this arrangement would not exceed 50,000 acres. The Committee cannot agree to the absolute exclusion of these reserves from all frontage "to rivers or tracks, roads, or porterages," which would render them entirely valueless, though they would have been ready to consider any reasonable limitation of these special advantages.

* Appendix III., page 66.

As regards the right of selecting lands for the Company in proportion to the quantities sold from time to time by the Government, the Committee desire to call Lord Granville's attention to the reasons given in Sir E. Head's letter of the 13th April 1864 for adopting this mode of reservation in preference to that of "setting apart beforehand a number of isolated tracts of wild land dotted over the surface of the Colony, and calculated to impede the free flow of settlement in the territory."

Their proposal was framed with reference to sales in the Fertile Belt only, and it never entered into their minds to contemplate such contingencies as those suggested in Mr. Adderley's letter. In order, however, to obviate all cavil upon this point, they would have been quite willing to limit the Company's right of selection to the case of lands sold or alienated within Sir E. Head's limits, provided that it were agreed that no alienations should take place beyond those limits, except either for distinctly public purposes, or for the bonâ fide carrying on of agricultural or mining operations. As regards Mr. Adderley's proposal, that the right of selection should be confined to five lots of 200 acres each, in each township as it is set out, the Committee can only remark that the character of this proposal must depend upon the size of the township, of which no indication has been given.

The Committee still adhere to the opinion, that under the peculiar circumstances of the proposed transfer of their territory, it would be reasonable that their wild lands should, for a limited time, be exempt from taxation, in order to allow them a fair opportunity of bringing them into profitable cultivation.

They observe that Mr. Adderley makes no reference to the 10th stipulation contained in Lord Kimberley's letter of the 13th May;† viz., that until the stipulated sum of 1,000,000 l. sterling has been paid to the Company, no export duties shall be levied by Canada upon furs exported by the Company, nor any import duties on articles imported by them into the North Western Territory, and into that part of Rupert's Land which is not included within the geographical limits laid down in Sir Edmund Head's letter of 11th November 1863. This is a point to which the Committee attached very great importance. If it had been proposed by the Canadian Government to make a direct purchase of the Company's territory, and to pay the price for it at once, the Company would of course have accepted their fair share of the burdens which annexation might be expected to involve. But if the purchase-money is to be withheld until the Canadian Government have sold off 20,000,000 acres of the land, or have realised a considerable sum by the produce of mining operations, it is reasonable that the pressure of the fiscal burdens, which would fall almost exclusively upon the Company's trade should be suspended also. Otherwise it might happen that, in consequence of the neglect or the inability of the Canadian Government to proceed with the settlement of the territory, the Company would be subjected to very heavy contributions to the Colonial Treasury without receiving the smallest benefit in return. As an illustration of the extent to which they might thus be injured, were no limitation placed upon the Colonial power of taxation, I may observe that, according to the present Canadian tariff, the duty upon the value of the Company's imports alone would amount to about 20,000 l. a-year; while any export duty that might be laid upon their furs would operate still further to their disadvantage. The Committee feel confident that Lord Granville will acknowledge the reasonableness of their taking precautions against such a contingency.

The Committee have desired me to offer to Lord Granville these explanations of their proposals, in order to show that they have done their best to comply with the desire of Her Majesty's Government, that they should submit a scheme founded on the principles of the negotiations of 1864. They have not, however, failed to perceive, from an early period of the lengthened correspondence which has has taken place between them and the Government, that those principles necessarily gave rise to many difficulties; and they have felt this the more strongly since the negotiations, originally commenced between the Company and Her Majesty's Government, have virtually become negotiations between the Company and the Government of Canada. They cannot disguise from themselves the danger which exists that arrangements so complicated, and involving so many topics for future discussion, are likely to lead to the Company's being placed in a position of antagonism to the Government of Canada, and to the creation of a state of things injurious not only to their own interests but to the welfare of the country itself.

They are sincerely anxious to co-operate with the Canadian Government in the settlement, development, and improvement of the territories with which they have been so long connected, and they believe that if the arrangements between them can be placed on a satisfactory footing, it will be in their power to render material assistance to the Colonial authorities in this respect. They believe that if a simpler arrangement than that which has recently been under discussion could be adopted, and if the Canadian Government were prepared to complete the purchase of the territory at once, by the payment of a sum of money or by the delivery of bonds, it would conduce to a more satisfactory result than the prolongation of a controversy as to the minute points of such a scheme as has been under consideration.

Should Lord Granville be of this opinion, and should his Lordship think it desirable to recommend any proposal of the kind to the Canadian delegates, this Committee will gladly place themselves in fuller communication with him on the subject.

I LAID before Earl Granville your letter of the 22nd* ultimo, relating to an invasion of the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, apprehended by them from certain steps taken under the authority of the Canadian Government.

A copy of your letter was, by his Lordship's direction, forwarded to Sir G. Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall, with a request that they would furnish any explanation it might be in their power to afford respecting the proceedings of the Canadian Government that were referred to; and I am desired to transmit to you, for the information of the Hudson's Bay Company, a copy of the letter which has been received from those gentlemen in reply.

No. 18.
Right Hon. Sir Stafford H. Northcote, Bart., M.P., to Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart.

Hudson's Bay House, London,
Sir, 2 February 1869.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 28th January, addressed to the Deputy Governor of this Company, enclosing a communication from Sir G. Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall on the subject of the recent proceedings of the Canadian Government in the matter of the construction of a road through the Company's territory, between Fort Garry and the Lake of the Woods.

After the distinct statement contained in Sir Curtis Lampson's letter of the 22nd December, that the Company, while protesting against a trespass on their land, were prepared favourably to entertain any application for permission to make such a road, either on the part of the Imperial, or of the Canadian Government, the Committee think it unnecessary to discuss the greater portion of the letter of the Canadian Ministers. Their objection is not to the road being made, but to its being undertaken by the Canadian Government as a matter of right, as though the territory through which it is to pass were Canadian. Such a step, taken at a moment when negotiations are in progress for the transfer of the Company's possessions to Canada, and taken by a Government which openly disputes their title to this portion of them, could not have been allowed to pass unchallenged without derogating from the Company's rights. The Canadian Government themselves seem to have been alive to this. Mr. Mactavish states that the agent of that Government (Mr. Snow), on arriving at the Red River, communicated to him his instructions from the Commissioner of Public Works in Canada, containing the expression of "a hope on the part of the Commissioner that the Company's agent here would offer no opposition to Mr. Snow's operations, but would leave the matter entirely in the hands of the Imperial Government." Governor Mactavish, upon this, very properly allowed Mr. Snow to commence his operations; and so far as this Company is concerned, no impediment has been, or will be, offered to the prosecution of the work.

If it were worth while to discuss that part of the letter of the Canadian Ministers which refers to the circumstances under which the construction of the road was ordered, the Committee would be able to show that the Company had in no way failed in their duty to the Colony, but that they had promptly taken measures for the relief of its inhabitants, and had supplied large sums, both by direct grants and by subscriptions raised under their auspices for that purpose, at a period anterior to the appropriation of the Canadian Road Grant. They would also be able to point out how the delay which has occurred in opening up communications, and otherwise developing the resources of the Red River Settlement, is due to the restraint which has been imposed upon them by Her Majesty's Government at the request of Canada, and not to any negligence or indifference of their own.

But the Committee desire to avoid the raising of a false issue, and they accordingly instruct me to re-state to Earl Granville the precise complaint which they have to make. It is this: That while negotiations are going on for the acquisition of their territory by Canada, the Canadian Government are endeavouring to exercise rights of ownership over a portion of that territory to the exclusion of the Company, and to the prejudice of their title. This they are doing by virtue of an old claim which they have repeatedly advanced, which the Company have invariably disputed and have declared themselves ready to contest before a court of law, and which Her Majesty's Government, acting under the advice of various Law Officers of the Crown, have declined to endorse. The Canadian Government have hitherto shown no inclination to bring their claim to the test of a judicial decision, and in the absence of any such decision, the Committee consider it not unreasonable to ask that due respect should be paid to the Company's uninterrupted possession of the territory for two centuries, and to the numerous and weighty legal opinions which have from time to time been given in their favour.

In appealing to Earl Granville for support in this matter, instead of entering into a controversy with Canada, or taking legal steps to enforce the Company's rights, the Committee have been actuated by a desire to proceed as far as possible in accordance with the views and wishes of Her Majesty's Government, as they have endeavoured to do throughout the pending negotiations for the establishment of a settled form of government at the Red River. They desire now respectfully but confidently to claim the support and protection of the Colonial Minister against any invasion of the Company's rights which may have been prompted or facilitated by the policy which they have adopted in order to meet the wishes of the Colonial Office.

I have, &c.

Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart., to the Right Hon. Sir Stafford Northcote, M.P. 22 February 1869.

Copy of a LETTER from Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart., to the Right Honourable Sir Stafford H. Northcote, Bart., M.P.

Sir, Downing-street, 22 February 1869.

I am directed by Earl Granville to enclose, for the information of the Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company, the copy of a letter which his Lordship has received from Sir G. Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall. As the greater part of that letter relates to matters on which the Company and the Colony cannot be expected to agree, and on which Her Majesty's Government has no authority to decide their differences, Lord Granville has felt some doubt whether the settlement of the question would be advanced by forwarding this letter. He considers it, however, necessary to do so, and in doing so to explain clearly the position which he considers himself to occupy. 9 February 1869, page 52.

It appears that his Lordship's predecessor entertained the hope that he would be able to arrange the terms of a compromise, under which, with consent of both parties, the sovereignty of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territory would be transferred to the Dominion of Canada.

With this view his Grace made to the Company a proposal, respecting which Sir G. Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall write as follows:—

"The proposals submitted to the Company by the late Government in the letter of Mr. Adderley of the 1st December last,* were not made at our suggestion, although we were disposed to think (and so informed his Grace) that if the Company accepted them, the Canadian Parliament might be persuaded to undertake the duties of legislation and government in the territories, on the conditions specified."

* Page 27.

Your letter of the 13th ultimo† may be considered as a rejection of those proposals, and as thus terminating the negotiations instituted by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos. But in your letter you propose that the matter should be settled by the immediate payment of a fixed sum of money, or by the delivery of bonds, and you express yourself prepared to enter into fuller communication with Lord Granville on this subject.

† Page 32.

It is, of course, obvious that this negotiation for the purchase of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territory is really between the seller and the buyer, the Company and the Colony; and Lord Granville is of opinion that if the negotiation is revived on this or any other basis, Her Majesty's Government can at present do no good by assuming to frame or suggest terms of accommodation, but can merely offer to act as a channel of communication between these two real parties to the transaction, using its best endeavours to remove any difficulties not inherent in the nature of the case.

Acting on this view, Lord Granville communicated to Sir G. Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall a copy of your letter of the 13th. The enclosure to this letter is the answer which he has received.‡

The material sentences, for the present purpose, are those with which the letter concludes.

You will observe that the representatives of the Colony state the principles on which they consider the cost of the territory should be calculated, indicating the opinion that the sum of 106,431 l. is the highest which could on any hypothesis properly be demanded by the Company, and express their strong conviction that no money offer which either the Imperial or Canadian Government would deem reasonable would be accepted by the Company. Assuming this to be the case, they ask, on the part of the Dominion Government, either the immediate transfer of the sovereignty of the whole territory, subject to the rights of the Company, or a transfer of the sovereignty and property of all the territory not heretofore validly granted to, and now held by, the Company under its charter.

Under these circumstances, Earl Granville directs me to communicate to you the enclosed letter, which, taken in connection with previous correspondence, appears to him to leave little present hope of bringing matters to a settlement by way of compensation. If the Directors of the Company should still think any such arrangement possible, his Lordship will, of course, be prepared to transmit to the Canadian representatives any modified proposal on the part of the Company.

pany. Failing this, he thinks it proper to invite from the Directors, not any argument respecting the true nature and extent of the Company's claims, from which, as not being before a court of law, he could anticipate no result, but a statement of any objections they may have, whether of principle or detail, to the two counter-proposals now made by Sir G. Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall on behalf of the Canadian Dominion.

And it might not be immaterial to add what course the Company would propose to take for securing that life and property are adequately protected and international obligations duly performed in their territory, so long as they remain responsible for its government.

I am, &c.

COPY of a LETTER from the Right Honourable Sir Stafford H. Northcote, M.P., to Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart.

Hudson's Bay House, London,
26 February 1869.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 22nd instant,* transmitting by Earl Granville's direction, a copy of a letter addressed to his Lordship by Sir George Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall, on the subject of my letter to yourself, dated the 13th ultimo.†

* Page 37.

The Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company, understand from your letter, that it is not Earl Granville's wish that they should enter into a discussion of the communication from the Canadian delegates, and they therefore refrain from making any comments upon its tone, or criticising and correcting its assertions. If there are any of those assertions to which Earl Granville, himself, attaches weight, the committee will gladly, on their being pointed out to them, offer such observations upon them as may appear to be necessary.

As regards the manner in which the Canadian delegates treat the suggestion contained in my letter of the 13th ultimo, that the Canadian Government should complete the purchase of the Company's territory at once, by the payment of a sum of money, or by the delivery of bonds, the Committee desire me to observe, that they might have had some difficulty in gathering from the terms in which the delegates express themselves, whether they were or were not prepared to entertain that suggestion, and to open a negotiation with this Company. But as Earl Granville, who has had personal communication with the delegates, is of opinion that their letter, taken in connection with previous correspondence, leaves little present hope of bringing matters to a settlement by way of compensation, the Committee are forced to adopt the conclusion, that it is intended as a virtual refusal on the part of the delegates to entertain the question in a serious spirit.

Should Earl Granville come to the conclusion, that it is desirable that the Committee should renew the offer of communicating fully with him on the subject of a money sale, which they made in my letter of January 13th, they will hold themselves prepared to do so. For the present, and in accordance with what they gather to be his Lordship's views, they consider this matter at an end.

It becomes my duty, then, to answer Earl Granville's question (1), whether the Committee have any objections, either of principle or of detail, to make to the "counter-proposals" of Sir G. Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall, and (2), what course the Company would propose to take for securing that life and property are adequately protected, and international obligations duly performed in their territory, so long as they remain responsible for its government.

With regard to the first of the two counter-proposals, viz., that the sovereignty of the whole of the territory in question should be immediately transferred to the Dominion Government, "subject to the rights of the Company," the committee desire to ask whether it is intended that the rights of the Company should be ascertained and defined before the transfer takes place, or after it. If the former former be Earl Granville's intention, the Committee have no kind of objection to offer to the proposal; but if it be meant that the transfer should take place first, and that the rights of the Company should then be made the subject of litigation in Canada, with a right of appeal to the courts of this country; I must remark that such a course is likely to lead to much inconvenience, expense, and annoyance to all parties concerned, as well as to prove detrimental to the interests of the settlement itself, by the prolongation of an irritating and disturbing controversy. As regards the injustice to this Company involved in such a proposal, I beg leave to refer Earl Granville to Sir E. Head's letter of the 25th January 1868,* to the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, in which a similar proposal is very ably discussed, and to which, and to the extracts from speeches delivered in the Canadian Parliament, which it encloses, the Committee desire to invite Earl Granville's particular attention.

* Page 17.

The second counter-proposal is, for a transfer to the Dominion Government of both the sovereignty and the property of "all the territory not heretofore validly granted to, and now properly held by the Company under its Charter." Upon this proposal also, the Committee desire respectfully to ask whether the limits of the territory so to be transferred, are to be distinctly set out in the instrument of transfer, so that there may be no room for disputes as to the limits of the respective jurisdictions. Even with the utmost care in this respect, the Committee cannot but feel apprehensive that difficulties will arise in dealings with the Indians, and with the various classes of hunters and traders frequenting those distant regions, if two different systems of administration are introduced into those portions of the extreme North Western Territory, which would be affected by the proposed transfer; especially as the great distance of that territory from Canada, and the difficulty of the communications, will render its administration by the Dominion Government very troublesome. Should, however, Her Majesty's Government decide on this measure, the Committee will do all in their power to arrive at a good understanding with the Dominion Government as to the details of the arrangements which should be made in the two portions of the now united territory, and to facilitate the establishment of a strong administrative system in both.

As regards any transfer of the sovereignty without a distinct definition of the limits to be assigned to it, and by virtue merely of vague general words, the Committee feel that they need not point out to Earl Granville that such a step would not only be open to the objections which I have already mentioned in the case of the former counter-proposal, but to the further and very serious one that it must lead to constant conflicts of authority, and to frequent political embarrassments.

The Company can hardly be expected to provide for the security of life and property, and the due performance of international obligations, if their boundary is left unsettled, and their title to important parts of their territory unrecognised. It is, probably, unnecessary for me to pursue this argument at any length.

I have now to advert to the last question put by Earl Granville—that relating to the course which the Company would propose to take for the government of their territory so long as they remain responsible for it. The Committee desire me in the first place to remind his Lordship that they have no authority to give a pledge on the part of the shareholders of the Company, and that they can only undertake to submit certain proposals to them, and to use their own influence to secure their adoption.

Subject to this reservation, the Committee are prepared to enter at once into free communication with Earl Granville as to the measures which should be adopted for the purpose to which he adverts. As his Lordship is aware, a resolution was agreed to by this Committee, as long ago as in August 1863, to the effect that, in the opinion of the directors, it was expedient that the authority, executive and judicial, over the Red River Settlement and the south-western portion of Rupert's Land should be vested in officers deriving such authority directly from the Crown, and exercising it in the name of Her Majesty.

In adopting this resolution, the Committee intended to indicate their desire for the establishment of a Crown Colony in this portion of their territory. They still believe that this would be the most satisfactory plan that could be pursued, and they are prepared to discuss it with Her Majesty's Government if they are encouraged to do so.

I am to state that the Committee would be willing either to advise the surrender of such proportion of the Company's proprietary rights as might be found to be a fair equivalent for the charge which the establishment of a Crown Colony would throw upon the Imperial Exchequer, or to recommend the Company, retaining its proprietary rights, to take upon itself the whole of the pecuniary burden. The Committee are satisfied that a territory which, in the present undeveloped state of its communications, supports a trade of the annual value of more than 400,000 l., and which possesses a large amount of highly fertile soil, requiring no great expenditure for its clearance and cultivation, is perfectly capable of supporting the expense of any government that it may be required to maintain; and they have little doubt that, if the state of the case were fairly laid before the shareholders, and if the moral support of the Imperial Government were distinctly assured to them, the necessary funds would readily be forthcoming.

Of course if Her Majesty's Government should be of opinion that the great objects in view could be equally well attained by the exercise of the powers actually possessed by, or which might be granted to, the Company, and should consider that it would be preferable to adopt this method of government rather than to erect the territory into a Crown Colony, the Committee would at once fall in with such a suggestion, and would request Earl Granville to state to them what establishments would, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, be sufficient to meet the necessities of the case.

It can hardly be necessary for me to add that in the event of such an arrangement being made, the Company would rely upon the cordial co-operation of the Government in submitting any needful measure to Parliament, and in protecting the Settlement from any trespass or interference on the part of Canada.

In conclusion, I am to observe that it is on many accounts important that the directors of this Company should soon communicate to the shareholders the progress of this negotiation, and should lay the correspondence before them. They trust that Earl Granville will have no objection to their doing so.

Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart., to the Right Hon. Sir Stafford Northcote, M.P. 9 March 1869.

COPY of a LETTER from Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart., to the Right Hon. Sir Stafford H. Northcote, M.P.

Sir, Downing-street, 9 March 1869.

EARL GRANVILLE has had under review the correspondence which has passed respecting the proposed transfer to Canada of the jurisdiction and territorial rights of the Hudson's Bay Company in North America.

It is, in Lord Granville's opinion, of very great importance that this question should be settled on a permanent footing, and with little delay. He does not disguise the interest which Her Majesty's Government have in this Settlement. It is not creditable to this country that any inhabited part of Her Majesty's dominions should be without a recognised government, capable of enforcing the law, and responsible to neighbouring countries for the performance of international obligations. The toleration of such a state of things in parts of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territory, is unjust to the inhabitants of that territory, and is not without danger to the peaceful relations between this country and the United States, and this danger and injustice are likely to increase in proportion as the mining and agricultural capabilities of what is called the "Fertile Belt," begin to attract settlers from the east and south.

To Canada the settlement of the question is not less important, as removing a cause of irritation between it and its neighbours, and even with the mother country itself, as destroying an obstacle to that which has been looked upon as the natural growth of the Dominion, as likely to open an indefinite prospect of employment to Canadian labour and enterprise, and lastly as enlarging the inducements which Canada is able to offer to the British immigrant. It is no small matter that it would enable Her Majesty's Government at once to annex to the Dominion, the whole of British North America proper, except the colony of British Columbia.

To the Hudson's Bay Company, it may almost be said to be necessary. At present the very foundations of the Company's title are not undisputed. The boundaries of its territory are open to questions of which it is impossible to ignore the importance. Its legal rights, whatever those may be, are liable to be invaded without law, by a mass of Canadian and American settlers, whose occupation of the country on any terms they will be little able to resist, while it can hardly be alleged that either the terms of the Charter, or their internal constitution are such as to qualify them under all these disadvantages, for maintaining order, and performing the internal and external duties of government.

The prejudicial effect that all these uncertainties must have on the value of the Company's property is but too evident.

The interest of all parties thus evidently pointed towards an immediate and definite adjustment, Lord Granville has been most unwilling to abandon the hope of bringing it about, by way of amicable compromise. He is fully alive to the difficulties of such a compromise. He does not conceal from himself that the estimate which the Company form of the nature and value of their rights, is widely different from that which is formed by the gentlemen who represent Canada. Nor can he undertake to express any opinion whatever, as to the relative correctness of those estimates. Indeed it would be impossible to do so without knowing to what extent the claims of the Company would be supported by the judgment of a court of law.

But after repeated communications with both parties his Lordship is convinced that he will be serving the interests of the Dominion, of the Company, and of this country, by laying before the Canadian representatives and the directors of the Company a distinct proposal which, as it appears to be, it is for the interest of both parties to accept, and in support of which Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to use all the influence which they could legitimately exercise.

If the proposal is really an impartial one, Lord Granville cannot expect that it will be otherwise than unacceptable to both of the parties concerned. But he is not without hope that both may find, on consideration, that if it does not give them all that they conceive to be their due, it secures to them what is politically or commercially necessary, and places them at once in a position of greater advantage with reference to their peculiar objects than that which they at present occupy.

The terms which his Lordship now proposes, are as follows:—

1. The Hudson's Bay Company to surrender to Her Majesty all the rights of government, property, &c., in Rupert's Land, which are specified in 31 & 32 Vict. c. 105, s. 4, and also all similar rights in any other part of British North America, not comprised in Rupert's Land, Canada, or British Columbia.

2. Canada is to pay to the Company 300,000 l. when Rupert's Land is transferred to the Dominion of Canada.

3. The Company may, within 12 months of the surrender, select a block of land adjoining each of its stations, within the limits specified in Article 1.

4. The size of the blocks is not to exceed acres in the Red River Territory, nor 3,000 acres beyond that territory, and the aggregate extent of the blocks is not to exceed 50,000 acres.

5. So far as the configuration of the country admits, the blocks are to be in the shape of parallelograms, of which the length is not more than double the breadth.

6. The Hudson's Bay Company may, for 50 years after the surrender, claim in any township or district within the Fertile Belt, in which land is set out for settlement, grants of land not exceeding one-twentieth part of the land so set out. The blocks so granted, to be determined by lot, and the Hudson's Bay Company to pay a rateable share of the survey expenses not exceeding an acre.

7. For the purpose of the present agreement, the Fertile Belt is to be bounded as as follows:—On the south by the United States boundary, on the west by the Rocky Mountains, on the north by the northern branch of the Saskatchewan, on the east by Lake Winnipeg, the Lake of Woods, and the waters connecting them.

8. All titles to land, up to the 8th March 1869, conferred by the Company, are to be confirmed.

9. The Company is to be at liberty to carry on its trade without hindrance in its corporate capacity, and no exceptional tax is to be placed on the Company's land, trade, or servants, nor any impost duty on goods introduced by them previous to the surrender.

10. Canada is to take over the materials of the electric telegraph at cost price; such price including transport, but not including interest for money, and subject to a deduction for ascertained deterioration.

11. The Company's claim to land under agreement of Messrs. Vankoughnet & Hopkins to be withdrawn.

12. The details of this arrangement, including the filling up the blanks in Articles 4 and 6, to be settled at once by mutual agreement.

It is due both to the representatives of Canada and to the Company to add, that these terms are not intended by Lord Granville as the basis of further negotiation, but a final effort to effect that amicable accommodation, of which he has almost despaired, but which he believes will be for the ultimate interest of all parties.

If this be rejected, either on behalf of the Company or on behalf of the Dominion, his Lordship considers that his next step must be to procure an authoritative decision as to the rights of the Crown and the Company, and with this object he will recommend Her Majesty to refer their rights for examination to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, whose decision will form a basis for any future legislative or executive action which Her Majesty's Government may find necessary.

Whatever may be the result of this proposal, his Lordship desires to express his sense of the openness and courtesy which he has experienced throughout these negotiations, both from the representatives of Canada and from the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Company, and the patience with which they have entertained proposals which, from their point of view, must no doubt have appeared inadequate.

Lord Granville is aware that a proposal of this kind will require consideration, but he hopes that you will lose no time beyond what is necessary in acquainting him with your decision.

I am, &c.

Sir, 22 March 1869.

IN reply to your letter of the 9th instant,* transmitting the terms of a proposal which Earl Granville recommends for the adoption of this Company, and of the Canadian representatives, I have the honour to inform you that the Committee have given their most careful consideration to that proposal, and that they have been in communication with the Canadian Ministers on some points connected with it, and I am to transmit to you a copy of the correspondence which has taken place with them.

The Committee have summoned a special general court of the proprietors on Wednesday next to consider the proposed terms, and they have come to a resolution that they will recommend the court to adopt the proposal.

I am

* Page 40.

I am desired by the Committee to invite Earl Granville's attention to the 6th of the resolutions adopted at their meeting on the 12th instant, relating to the salary of the Bishop of Rupert's Land, and to the observations of the Canadian representatives thereon.

The Committee, while acknowledging the force of the objections urged by the Canadian Ministers to the endowment, out of the public revenues of Canada, of an Anglican Bishopric of Rupert's Land, desire to point out to Earl Granville that the Hudson's Bay Company have entered into a legal contract, in their capacity of owners of the territory which is now to be transferred to Canada, by which they are bound to continue this endowment in perpetuity. It is manifestly reasonable that on ceding the territory they should be relieved of this obligation; and the Committee desire me to suggest for Earl Granville's consideration, that the object might be attained in the simplest manner, by Canada consenting to pay to the Company a fixed sum, as a compensation for vested interests, or under any other name that might be preferred, which sum the Company would invest for the support of the bishopric.

Enclosure in No. 22.

My dear Sir George Cartier, 86, Harley-street, 11 March 1869.

THE directors of the Hudson's Bay Company have held a meeting to-day to consider Lord Granville's letter. Before, however, they can form a judgment on his proposals, they are anxious to have some explanation on points which do not appear very clear to them. Encl. in No. 22.

Without entering into the question of the value of their territory for purposes of colonisation, they feel that its possession is of very great value to the Company as a basis for the promotion of their trade, and they are anxious to satisfy themselves that, if it is surrendered, some adequate security will be afforded for their trading interests.

The two points upon which we are anxious for information are these: first, what will be the position of the Company with reference to the territory lying outside the Fertile Belt; and, secondly, what will be the nature and probable limit of the burdens which will be laid upon our property within that district.

Regarding the country lying outside the Fertile Belt as a hunting ground alone, we presume: 1st. That we shall be at liberty to hunt over it freely, and without being subjected to any license, tax, or other similar impost; 2nd. That we shall be granted a title to our posts, and to such adjoining land as may be necessary for their maintenance, and for supplying pasture and wood; 3rd. That we shall be allowed to cut such wood as we may require in any part of the territory.

In addition to these rights, we should much like to suggest that it would be for the interest of the Company, and still more for that of Canada, that Canada should give us for a limited period some special control over the importations into the hunting country, so as to enable us to keep spirits from the Indians.

With regard to the taxes which may be laid on our lands within the Fertile Belt, we presume that with respect to their wild and unsold lands, the Company will stand on the same footing as the Canadian Government, that is to say, on the footing of a proprietor and not of an alienee, and will therefore not be subject to taxation until the land is sold or brought into cultivation.

Can you let me have an answer to this letter before 12 o'clock to-morrow, as we are to hold a meeting at two to consider the question further?

I remain, &c.

Dear Sir George Cartier, Hudson's Bay House, 12 March 1869.

I AM desired by the Committee of this Company to forward to you a copy of the inclosed resolutions, which have been adopted at our meeting to-day, and to request that you will favour me with an answer, which I may lay before the Committee at their meeting on Tuesday next.

At a Special Committee held on the 12th of March 1869, at the Hudson's Bay House, to reconsider Letter from Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart., dated Downing-street, 9th March 1869:

The Governor reported that Sir G. Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall had explained to him the system of municipal taxation to which the Company would be subject in respect of their lands.

Resolved,—That this Committee will recommend the shareholders to accept the proposal of Lord Granville, if the Canadian Ministers will agree to the following modifications:

1. That Canada will lay no export duty on furs.

2. That the 6th Article be modified so as to allow the Company to defer exercising their right of claiming their proportion of each township for not more than 10 years after it is set up.

3. That no charge be made upon the Company for the expenses of survey.

4. That the proportion of land which they are allowed to claim be increased from one-twentieth to one-tenth.

5. That York and Moose factories be retained as ports of entry.

6. That Canada undertakes to pay the 300 l. a year now paid to the Bishop of Rupert's Land, and other charges of a public character now borne by the Company.

7. That some provision be made for referring to arbitration any question which may arise out of the agreement.

To Sir Stafford Northcote, M.P., Governor.

Westminster Palace Hotel, London,
15 March 1869.

Sir,

We have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of certain resolutions adopted by the Governor and Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company on the 12th instant, suggesting important modifications of the proposal of Lord Granville for the transfer of Rupert's Land to Canada.

We beg you will inform the Committee that in our opinion the proposal of Lord Granville is much more favourable to the Hudson's Bay Company than any previous proposal of the Imperial Government, and much more onerous to Canada than its Government and people have been led to expect. With great reluctance, we have consented to recommend Lord Granville's proposal, if accepted by the Company pure et simple, but not otherwise, to the favourable consideration of the Canadian Government. The modifications and additions proposed by the Committee are not, in our judgment, "details" within the purview of the 12th Article of Lord Granville's proposal, but substantive and material changes, affecting the very basis of the arrangement. We cannot, therefore, assent to them, or undertake to recommend their acceptance by the Canadian Government.

We have further to observe that, in making these demands upon us, the Committee assume that the changes they propose will be accepted or approved by the Imperial Government. If we are correctly advised, the Committee are not warranted to make that assumption. In the letter of Sir Frederic Rogers, communicating to us a copy of Lord Granville's proposal, we are assured that it conveys "the views of Her Majesty's Government," and in the letter conveying these views to the Company, it is stated that "these terms are not intended by Lord Granville as the basis of further negotiations." It follows, we think, that Lord Granville's proposal is to be regarded as the ultimatum of the Imperial Government, and must be accepted or rejected in its entirety. The Act 31 & 32 Vict. c. 105 (which was not introduced at the instance, or passed in the interest of the Canadian Government), placed the negotiation of the terms of surrender by the Company to the Crown in the hands of Her Majesty's Imperial Government, where, until the Act is repealed or the negotiation fails, we are of opinion it must remain.

We shall be glad to confer with you upon all questions of "detail" which, by the terms of Lord Granville's proposal, are left to be adjusted between the Canadian Government and the Hudson's Bay Company.

We have, &c.

To Sir G. E. Cartier, Bart., and the Hon. William M'Dougall, C.B.

Hudson's Bay House, London,
16 March 1869.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, in reply to my letter to Sir G. Cartier, in which I enclosed to you a copy of the resolutions adopted at the meeting of the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company on the 12th inst.

It is unnecessary for me to enter into the question you raise as to whether Earl Granville would or would not accept any modifications of the terms set forth in his Lordship's recent communication to this Committee, if they should be agreed to by this Committee on the one hand, and by yourselves on the other. While stating that he regarded those terms as not being intended as the basis of further negotiations, Lord Granville added that he left the details of the arrangement to be settled by mutual consent. The greater part of the resolutions transmitted to you in my letter of the 12th, were resolutions intended to lead to a settlement of certain details, on which it will be necessary for the Committee to offer full explanation to the shareholders of the Company, if they decide on submitting Earl Granville's proposals to a general meeting.

If, in your opinion, any of them go further than this, the Committee will be ready to reconsider them, and to confer with you upon them.

As regards the resolution, by which the Committee proposed that the amount of land to be left to the Company should be one-tenth instead of one-twentieth, I am to state that the Committee have rescinded that resolution.

They will await a communication from you with regard to the other resolutions, before coming to a conclusion as to the course they should adopt.

I am, &c.
(signed) Stafford H. Northcote.

To the Right Honourable Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart.

Westminster Palace Hotel, 18 March 1869.

Sir,

WE have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 16th inst., in which you inform us that the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company have rescinded the resolution adopted on the 12th inst., asking for one-tenth instead of one-twentieth, as proposed by Lord Granville, of the land which may be surveyed for settlement in the surrendered territory. You further state that if the other resolutions go further than the "details of the arrangement" left by Lord Granville to be "settled by mutual consent," the Committee are ready to reconsider them.

1. With reference to the first resolution, "That Canada will lay no export duty on furs," we beg you will inform the Committee that it is not the policy or the practice of the Canadian Government to resort to export duties as a source of revenue. We feel no hesitation in stating our firm belief that no such duties as the Committee wish to prohibit will be levied, but it would obviously be improper for us to consent to any arrangement that would fetter the free action of the Canadian Parliament in respect to modifications of the tariff which the future exigencies of the country may render necessary.

2. The proposal to modify the 6th Article, so as to permit the Company to defer the exercise of the right of claiming their proportion of lands in any township for a period of 10 years after survey, might, we think, be agreed to, on condition that they limit their claim to allotment from the lands which may be unsold at the time they declare their intention to take their proportion in that township.

3. The demand to be relieved from the expenses of survey, which Lord Granville proposed the Company should bear, is not, we think, a "detail" within the meaning of the 12th Article. But if it will remove the apprehension that charges under this stipulation may become excessive, we see no objection to a proviso that the expense to the Company for the survey of the lands allotted to them shall in no case exceed 10 cents. per acre.

4. We have no doubt that York and Moose factories will be retained as ports of entry, if goods continue to be imported there. But if, by the opening of interior communications, the trade should be diverted to other ports, it would not seem reasonable that the Government should be bound to maintain customs establishments at Hudson's Bay. The practice of the Canadian Government is to establish ports of entry wherever the interests of trade and commerce require them, and we do not therefore think it either necessary or expedient to make any stipulation on the subject.

5. The demand that the salary of the Anglican Bishop of Rupert's Land should hereafter be charged upon the Canadian Treasury, cannot be regarded as a "detail" within the 12th Article of Lord Granville's proposal. The surrender of the rights and powers of government by the Company will necessarily involve the assumption of "all charges of a public character" in the new government. But an agreement to continue the charges "now borne by the Company," eo nomine, would so far perpetuate a system, which the transfer of the territory to Canada is intended to supersede.

6. The last proposal of the Committee is open to very serious objections. The surrender of the powers of government and of territorial jurisdiction by the Company to the Crown, and the transfer of these powers to the Canadian Government, are acts of State, authorised by Imperial Statute, and will have all the force and permanence of fundamental law. The proposal to refer all questions which may arise under this law to some extra-constitutional tribunal is not warranted by the British North America Act, and would, we fear, if adopted, create confusion and embarrassment, and postpone indefinitely the establishment of a satisfactory government in Rupert's Land.

We must decline to admit, even by implication, that the judicial tribunals, and the general and local authorities of the Dominion, will fail to understand, or hesitate to respect and carry out in good faith, all the terms and conditions of the proposed arrangement

Enclosure in No. 28.

24, Oakley Square, Chelsea, S.W.,
8 July 1869.

Encl. in No. 28.

My Lord,

The Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company having informed me that a surrender of the Company's territory is about to be made, I have forwarded to them a protest and notice (copy of which I enclose), and in order that Her Majesty's Government may be aware of the facts, and may have notice that the sale and surrender is objected to, and cannot legally be made, I beg to state as follows:—

I object to the sale, except at the price of 500,000 l., which is half the amount the territories were valued at.

That the Committee had no authority to negotiate a sale except upon such terms, or better, and that as they acted without the sanction of the proprietors, any agreement made by them is not binding.

That no sale of the territories of the Company can be made without the sanction of each and every proprietor, and that the Act of Parliament enabling a surrender does not avoid this necessity.

That if the Committe have stated that the majority of proprietors have agreed to the terms proposed, they have stated that which is incorrect.

1st. Because no legal meeting has been held.

2nd. Because the chairman neglected to put an amendment of mine to his own motion.

3rd. Because the vote was taken by a show of hands, though a ballot was duly demanded.

4th. Because the vote was not by persons who had held their stock six months, as required by the 7 Geo. 3, c. 48.

A protest setting forth all these objections was entered with the chairman at the meeting.

I also submit that no valid surrender can be made, because Earl Kimberley is the Governor, and not Sir Stafford Northcote, the former having been elected for the year 1869, and there being no power of resignation or re-election contained in the Charter.

I should have forwarded this letter sooner, but awaited the reply of the Canadian Parliament.

I have, &c.
(signed) Wm. H. Stewart,
A proprietor of stock in the Hudson's Bay Company.

The Right Hon. Earl Granville, K.G.,
Secretary for the Colonies.

To the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Gentlemen,

As the chairman informed the proprietors on the second instant that the Canadian Parliament had addressed Her Majesty on the subject of the acquisition of the Hudson's Bay Territories, I beg to give the Committee notice, that as a proprietor of stock in the said Company, I protest against the sale of the territorial rights of the Company, and against the Committee affixing, or causing to be affixed, the seal of the Corporation to any surrender, or other conveyance or document purporting to surrender the said territories, and that I shall hold the Committee, and each and every of them, responsible for any attempted surrender of the said territories, and for all loss, costs, damages, and expenses which may accrue, or to which I may be put, by reason of such surrender.

The grounds of my objection to such sale and surrender are as follows:—

1. Because the price is wholly inadquate.

2. Because

2. Because the then Governor and Committee, who were trustees for the proprietors, had to authority to negotiate for the sale of the said territory, and were guilty of a breach of trust in asking a sum of money much smaller in amount than the proprietors required, and in keeping this fact from the knowledge of the proprietors.

3. Because the proprietors of stock in a chartered company such as the Hudson's Bay, even if unanimous, have no power to dispose of their territories except by authority of Parliament.

4. Because the Act of Parliament enabling Her Majesty to accept a surrender of the territories in question, is merely permissive, and not obligatory on the Company, and expressly requires the assent, not of a majority, or of a portion of the proprietors, but of the whole body, "upon such terms and conditions as shall be agreed upon by the Governor and Company," are the words of the Act.

5. Because the Act of Parliament has not been complied with, inasmuch as the whole body of proprietors have not agreed to the terms, but, on the contrary, it is believed a large majority dissented therefrom.

6. Because, even supposing the majority could bind the minority, such majority of duly qualified voters has never been legally, or in fact obtained, inasmuch as the meeting at which the vote was taken was illegally convened and held; the pretended vote was by a show of hands, notwithstanding a ballot was demanded, as required under the Charter, nor was there any evidence that the parties holding up their hands were proprietors of stock, or, if proprietors, that they had held such stock for six calendar months prior to such vote, as required by the Act in such case made and provided, thus rendering the vote so taken void.

7. Because Sir Stafford Northcote is not the duly qualified Governor of the said Company, and any act done or performed by him, and the said Committee, on behalf of the said Company, is null and void, inasmuch as Earl Kimberley (if any) is the duly qualified Governor of the said Company for the present year 1869.

COPY of a LETTER from Sir G. E. Cartier, Bart., and W. McDougall, Esq., C.B., to Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart.

Westminster Palace Hotel, London,
Sir, 16 January 1869.

WE have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo (with its enclosure), stating that you were directed by Earl Granville to transmit to us a copy of a letter, which his Lordship had received from the Deputy Chairman of the Hudson Bay Company, relating to some steps which have been taken under the authority of the Canadian Government, and from which the Company apprehend some invasion of their territorial rights.

You inform us that his Lordship will be glad to receive from us any explanation which we may be able to furnish him of the steps taken by the Canadian Government.

We have read the letter of the deputy chairman, and extracts from the letters of Governor McTavish, and have much pleasure in being able to furnish his Lordship with what we hope will prove satisfactory information, on the subject of the Hudson Bay Company's complaint.

1. In the month of September last, very precise information reached the Canadian Government, that in consequence of the complete destruction of their crops by locusts, the people of the Red River Settlement, numbering probably from 12,000 to 15,000 souls, were in imminent danger of starvation during the winter about to set in.

2. Numerous and earnest appeals for aid had already been made to the Canadian public by writers in the newspapers, and by clergymen and others acquainted with the country. The Right Rev. Robert Machray, Lord Bishop of Rupert's Land, a member of the Council of Assinaboia, and so far a representative of the Company, visited Ottawa, and urged upon members of the Canadian Government the duty of prompt assistance to avert the threatened calamity.

3. No steps had then been taken (so far as the Government could learn) by the Hudson Bay Company to provide supplies, and aware that a few days delay at that season might render it impossible to get provisions to Red River in time to afford relief, the Canadian Government appropriated the sum of twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) towards the construction of a road from Lake of the Woods to Fort Garry. The Minister of Public Works (one of the undersigned) was directed to expend the principal part of this sum in the purchase of provisions, which were to be forwarded with all possible dispatch to the Red River Settlement, and offered to the settlers, not as alms, but in exchange for their labour on a public work in their own vicinity, and of the highest utility to their Settlement.

4. A confidential and experienced agent proceeded at once to Saint Paul's, Minnesota, and succeeded in forwarding a considerable supply of provisions before the close of navigation; a further quantity has reached Fort Abercrombie, an American post in Dakota Territory, from which point it can be sent to the Settlement early in the spring.

5. Information has reached the undersigned since their arrival in England, that the Government agent had, in accordance with his instructions, conferred with the local authorities on his arrival at Fort Garry, that he had received their approval and promise of assistance, that his timely aid was a cause of much joy and thankfulness in the Settlement, and that he had proceeded with a large force of labourers to the limit of the prairie country, some 30 miles from Fort Garry towards Lake of the Woods, and there commenced the construction of the road.

6. The immediate object of the Canadian Government in taking the steps complained of, was to supply food to a starving community, about to be imprisoned for six months in the heart of a great wilderness, without roads or means of communication with their fellow subjects, and to supply it in the way most acceptable to a high spirited people, viz., in exchange for their labour. It was thought that even the Hudson Bay Company might look with favour upon a public work, which, when completed, will prove a valuable protection to those under their government, against similar dangers in the future. On behalf of the Canadian Government, we deny that a "trespass" has been committed, or that our action in this matter was intended to forestal or embarrass negotiations which the Imperial Parliament had directed to be undertaken for the transfer of the North Western Territory and Rupert's Land to the Dominion of Canada.

The foregoing explanation may, perhaps, be deemed sufficient to enable Earl Granville to answer the complaint of the Hudson Bay Company against the Canadian Government, but the undersigned beg leave to add one or two observations, which, in their opinion, this extraordinary demand for "the intervention of Her Majesty's Government," both invites and justifies. If the Hudson Bay Company, who claim the right to hold and govern the territory in which the alleged "trespass" has taken place, had performed the first duty of a Government towards its people, by providing them with easy means of communication with the outer world; or, if they had shown themselves either able, or willing, to meet the threatened calamity by a prompt effort to forward sufficient supplies to the Settlement before the close of navigation, the Canadian Government would have rested happy in the belief that neither humanity, nor public policy, required or justified their interference.

The assertion of the Deputy Governor of the Hudson Bay Company, that the country between Lake of the Woods and Red River is "the freehold territory of the Company," and that the so-called "trespass" of the Canadian Government in sending provisions to the starving settlers and assisting them to make a road for their own convenience and safety hereafter, is "an actual encroachment on the soil of the Company," might, if unnoticed by us, be claimed as another proof or admission of the rights of the Company in that part of the continent; we, therefore, beg to remind his Lordship that the boundaries of Upper Canada, on the north and west, were declared, under the authority of the Constitutional Act of 1791, to include "all the territory to the westward and southward" of the "boundary line of Hudson's Bay," "to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." Whatever doubt may exist as to the "utmost extent" of Old or French Canada, no impartial investigator of the evidence in the case can doubt that it extended to, and included, the country between Lake of the Woods and Red River.

The Government of Canada, therefore, does not admit, but on the contrary denies, and has always denied, the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company to any right of soil, beyond that of squatters, in the territory through which the road complained of is being constructed.

We have, &c.

COPY of a LETTER from Sir G. E. Cartier, Bart., and W. M'Dougall, Esq., C.B., to Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart.

Sir, Westminster Palace Hotel, 9 February 1869.

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th ultimo, enclosing a copy of Sir Stafford Northcote's letter of the 13th ultimo, in reply to proposals made to the Hudson's Bay Company for the cession to the Crown of their territorial rights in British America, by his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, in the letter of Mr. Adderley of the 1st December last.

You state that Earl Granville directed you to transmit this document to us for any observations which we may wish to offer upon it. His Lordship's courtesy and consideration in sending us a copy of Sir Stafford Northcote's letter, and inviting us to express our views upon it, are gratefully acknowledged, but upon reflection, we thought it would be expedient to refrain from any formal expression of our opinion on new and indefinite propositions, until we had received some intimation of the view which his Lordship was likely himself to take of them, or of the policy in respect to the general question, which Her Majesty's present advisers intend to adopt.

At an interview with which we were favoured by Earl Granville on the 26th ultimo, he expressed his preference for a less complicated mode of dealing with the Hudson's Bay question than that proposed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, and requested us to communicate to him our observations on the reply of Sir Stafford Northcote, and especially on the proposition with which his letter concludes, viz., that the Canadian Government should "complete the purchase "of the territory at once, by the payment of a sum of money, or by the delivery "of bonds."

As we have had but few opportunities to confer with his Lordship since his accession to office, it may be proper, before considering Sir Stafford Northcote's letter, to state the position of the Canadian Government, as we apprehend it, in this negotiation.

The British North America Act, 1867, affirmed the policy of uniting under one Government, all the Colonies, Provinces, and Territories of British North America. Three Provinces were united at once, and provision was made by the 146th section, for the admission into the union of the remaining colonies, on Address to Her Majesty by their respective Legislatures, and the Parliament of Canada. The North West Territories and Rupert's Land, or either of them, are to be admitted on the Address of the Parliament of Canada alone, and on such terms and conditions as the Canadian Parliament may in its Address express, and Her Majesty approve.

In pursuance of the policy of the Imperial Parliament thus distinctly affirmed, the Canadian Parliament at its first Session, under the new constitution, adopted an Address to Her Majesty for the incorporation of the North West Territory and Rupert's Land with the Dominion of Canada. The terms and conditions expressed in the Address were,—

1st. That Canada should undertake the duties and obligations of Government and Legislation in respect of those territories.

2nd. That the legal rights of any corporation, company, or individual within the territories should be respected, and that provision should be made for that purpose by placing those rights under the protection of Courts of competent jurisdiction.

3rd. That the claims of the Indian tribes to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement, should be considered and settled in conformity with the equitable principles which have uniformly governed the British Crown in its dealings with the Aborigines.

The above were the only terms and conditions which, in the opinion of the Canadian Parliament, it was expedient to insert in the Order in Council, authorised by the 146th section.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, on receiving the Address of the Canadian Parliament, consulted the Law Officers of the Crown, who advised, among other things, that "there would be much difficulty created by the existence "of the Charter" of the Hudson's Bay Company "to putting into execution "the powers of the 140th (146th) section of the British America Act, 1867, "assuming that the Hudson's Bay Company were adverse to the union."

A Bill was thereupon carried through the Imperial Parliament apparently to remove the "difficulties" which the Law Officers had discovered. It reverses the order of procedure contemplated by the Act of 1867, and observed by the Canadian Parliament in its Address, and makes the assent of the Company a condition precedent to the transfer.

The Canadian Government were not consulted as to the terms of this Act; they could not understand why it was necessary, and greatly doubted the expediency of passing it.

The Duke of Buckingham and Chandos having opened negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company under the authority of the Act last mentioned, invited a delegation from the Canadian Government to confer with him in this country.

The undersigned, duly commissioned for that purpose, repaired to London in October last, and had frequent interviews with his Grace before his retirement from office.

The proposals submitted to the Company by the late Government in the letter of Mr. Adderley of the 1st December last,* were not made at our suggestion, although we were disposed to think (and so informed his Grace), that if the Company accepted them, the Canadian Parliament might be persuaded to undertake the duties of legislation and government in the territories, on the conditions specified.

* Page 27.

The Company, through Sir Stafford Northcote, have declined to accept either the principle or the mode of settlement proposed by the late Government, but suggest a new and summary method of closing the negotiations, by demanding that the Canadian Government should, by a payment in cash or bonds, "complete "the purchase of the territory at once." No sum is mentioned, and no date given from which it can be inferred.

Under these circumstances we are asked, as representatives of the Canadian Government, to communicate to Earl Granville any observations we may wish to offer on this reply and proposition of the Company.

His Lordship will readily perceive from the foregoing recital, that as representatives of the Canadian Government, we are in the position of spectators of a negotiation, begun and carried on upon principles and under conditions to which we we are strangers, rather than that of assenting principals, responsible for its initiation, and bound by its results.

Without undertaking, therefore, that our views on every point will be approved by the Canadian Government, we proceed most respectfully to offer a few observations on Sir Stafford Northcote's reply to the recent proposals of the Imperial Government.

It will be observed that two things are assumed in these proposals to the Company, which the Canadian Government has always disputed :—

1st. That the Charter of Charles II. is still valid, and grants the right of soil or freehold of Rupert's Land to the Company.

2nd. That Rupert's Land includes the so-called "Fertile Belt," extending from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains.

The Law Officers of the Crown in England have, on two or three occasions, given their opinion in favour of the first assumption, but never, so far as we are aware, in favour of the second. The report of the Law Officers in 1857, admits that the geographical extent of the territory granted must be determined by excluding the country that "could have been rightfully claimed by the French "as falling within the boundaries of Canada" (which the Charter itself excludes by express words) and states that "the assertion of ownership on important public "occasions, as at the Treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht" should be considered, and also "the effect of the Acts of 1774 and 1791." The most recent opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, which we have seen (6th January 1868), as to the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, does not even by implication, support their present claim to the fee-simple of nearly one-third of the American continent. On the contrary, Sir John Karslake and his colleagues, conclude their report with the emphatic statement, that it is "very necessary before any union "of Rupert's Land with Canada is effected, that the true limits of the territory "and possessions held under the Charter should be accurately defined." An assumption, therefore, which covers so much ground, and is unsupported by any competent legal authority, which ignores the repeated protests and claims of Canada, and seeks to supply a basis upon which a surrender for valuable consideration may be made, is, to say the least, a most favourable assumption for the Company. We notice these points in Mr. Adderley's letter before remarking on Sir Stafford Northcote's reply to prevent the possible inference that we have acquiesced in them.

Sir Stafford Northcote assures Lord Granville that the Company "continue "sincerely anxious to promote the object, with a view to which the Company "was re-constructed five-and-a-half years ago, viz., the gradual settlement of such "portions of their territory as admit of colonisation." It would be tedious to quote the numerous and positive averments by members and governors of the Hudson's Bay Company in the course of official enquiries during the last 50 years, that their territories (in which they include the Red River and the Saskatchawan districts) are totally unfit for colonisation. The evidence of Sir George Simpson before the House of Common's Committee of 1857, is a fair sample of the views heretofore entertained and avowed by the representatives of the Company (see Commons' Report 1857, questions 716, 718, 719, &c.). Mr. Ellice, for many years the ruling spirit of the Company, declared before the same Committee, that the Red River Settlement was an "unwise speculation," and "had failed;" that "the climate is not favourable;" that the Saskatchawan is a country capable of settlement only when "the population of America becomes so "dense that they are forced into situations less fit for settlement than those they "occupy now;" that the winters are "rigorous," and the country badly off for "fuel," &c.

With such views of the unfitness of the country for settlement, and avowing their belief that colonisation and the fur trade could not exist together, it is not surprising that the Company have always cherished the latter, which was profitable, and discouraged, and as far as possible prevented the former, which had proved an "unwise speculation." It is true that the Company was "recon- "structed" in 1863, with loud promises of a new policy. A great road across the Continent was to be made; a telegraph line was to be put up, and emigration and colonisation developed on a large scale. The Duke of Newcastle, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, was so much impressed by the zeal and public public spirit of the gentlemen who effected the re-construction, that he wrote Despatches to the Canadian Government on their behalf, and evidently believed that a new era was about to open in the North West, and the wild animals and fur traders retreat before the march of "European" settlers. The stock of the old Company, worth in the market about 1,000,000 l., was bought up, and by some process which we are unable to describe, became 2,000,000 l. A show of anxiety to open postal and telegraphic communication was made, and "Heads "of proposals" were submitted to the Governments of Canada and British Columbia, which, on examination, were found to embrace a line of telegraph only, with the modest suggestion that the two Governments should guarantee the Company a profit of not less than four per cent. on their expenditure; a proposal so absurd could only have been made to be rejected, and it was rejected accordingly. The surplus capital of the re-constructed Company which was called up for the avowed purpose of opening their territories to "European "colonisation under a liberal and systematic scheme of land settlement," has never been applied to that purpose. Five and a half years have passed since the grand scheme was announced to the world, but no European emigrants have been sent out, no attempts to colonise have been made. Sir Stafford Northcote was not probably aware, when he vouched for the bona fides of the Hudson's Bay Company as promoters of colonisation, that a solemn vote of the shareholders was taken in the month of November 1866, which condemned and rejected the policy of colonisation absolutely and definitively.

While unable, for the reasons stated, to concur in Sir Stafford Northcote's assurance that the Hudson's Bay Company are anxious to promote colonisation, we are gratified to learn that they "adhere" to the resolution of 28th August 1863, that the time has come when it is expedient that "the authority, executive "and judicial, over the Red River Settlement, and the south-western portion of "Rupert's Land should be vested in officers deriving such authority directly "from the Crown."

The first remark we have to make upon this reference to the resolution of 1863 is, that it admits the continued incapacity of the Company as a governing power; the second, that if this was true in 1863, if at that time it had become expedient to substitute the authority of the Crown for that of the Company, it is much more expedient, if not absolutely necessary now; the third, that if the Company are to be relieved of the duty and cost of government which their Charter imposes, and which they admit they do not and cannot properly discharge, "compensation" should be made, not to the Company, as is claimed, but by the Company to those who take the burden off their shoulders.

We confess we have failed to discover any evidence, and therefore cannot believe, that the Company has "cheerfully" accepted the decision of Her Majesty's Government, "that the whole of the Company's territory should, "under proper conditions, be united with Canada." A brief notice of the acts in contrast with the professions of the Company will, we think, account for the ill-success of our researches, and justify our incredulity.

The representatives of the Company, while declaring before the House of Commons' Committee in 1857 (as we have already shown), that their territories were "unfit for settlement," professed their readiness to surrender any portion of them that might be desired by the Imperial or Canadian Government for that purpose. Mr. Ellice declared, in the most unqualified terms, not only that the Company was willing to surrender, but that it was the duty of Government to see that no mere trading corporation obstructed "for one moment," nor to the extent of "one acre of land fit for settlement," the "dominion of the "actual settlers." (Commons' Report, 1857, questions 5859, 5860, and 5933.)

The Governor of the Company informed the Colonial Secretary (18th July 1857) that an inquiry into the "geographical extent of the territory granted by "their Charter," which the Law Officers had recommended, was of little importance, because, if the object of the inquiry was "to obtain from Canada land "fit for cultivation and the establishment of agricultural settlers, the Directors "are already prepared to recommend to the shareholders of the Company to cede "any lands which may be required for that purpose." "The terms of such "cession," he assured Mr. Labouchere, "would be a matter of no difficuly be-"tween Her Majesty's Government and the Company."

Mr. Ellice had previously told the House of Commons' Committee that the question of boundary was "of no importance at all," because if the "Province

" of Canada requires any part of the territory, or the whole of it, for purposes of " settlement, it ought not to be permitted for one moment to remain in the hands " of the Hudson's Bay Company." He added that " less money than would be " spent in a litigation upon the subject would be sufficient to indemnify the Hud- " son's Bay Company for any claim which they could have on giving up any " disputed part of their territory."

These assurances induced the Committee to negative propositions for ascertaining, by a judicial inquiry, the validity of the Charter or the position of boundaries, and to report in favour of annexing to Canada " such portion of the land " in her neighbourhood as may be available to her for the purposes of settlement, " with which she is willing to open and maintain communication, and for which " she will provide the means of local administration." The Committee " trusted " that there would be " no difficulty in effecting arrangements as between Her " Majesty's Government and the Hudson's Bay Company " for ceding the territory on " equitable principles."

It may be proper to remind Earl Granville that leading members of the Committee of 1857, taking the offers of the Company on the subject of colonisation to mean what the language of their representatives imported, strongly opposed the recommendation to leave the question open for " amicable adjustment," upon " equitable principles," with the certainty of protracted negotiation and a chance of ultimate disagreement; Mr. Gladstone accordingly submitted a resolution for a prompt and definitive settlement of the whole question. He proposed—

1st. " That the country capable of colonisation should be withdrawn " from the jurisdiction of the Hudson's Bay Company."

2nd. " That the country incapable of colonisation should remain within " their jurisdiction."

He proposed that in the country remaining within their jurisdiction power should be reserved to Her Majesty's Government to make grants " for the pur- " poses of mines and fisheries, but with due regard to the immunities and trade " of the Company." No " immunities " were even suggested, with respect to the country which was to be withdrawn for colonisation. He proposed to ignore the Charter by declaring that the jurisdiction of the Company " should rest, " henceforth, upon the basis of statute." He quoted the Governor's letter above referred to " as an expression of the willingness of the Company to accept, in " principle, the arrangement " he proposed, and ended with the suggestion that, " as the Company had tendered concessions which may prove sufficient to meet " the case," no decision seemed necessary as to the question of raising " a judicial " issue, with the view of ascertaining the legal rights of the Company." The propositions of Mr. Gladstone were only lost in the Committee by the casting vote of the Chairman.

Twelve years have passed since these offers were made by the Company, and accepted by a Committee of Parliament. Every Colonial Secretary from 1858 to the present moment has attempted to carry out the recommendation of the Committee, with the assent of the Company, but without success. Two Acts of the Imperial Parliament have been passed, with provisions to facilitate the arrangement, but are yet without fruit. Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer characterised the offers of the Company during his administration as " illusory," and declared that they " by no means met the exigencies of the case." He expressed his regret at a determination on their part which " retains the very difficulty in " the way of speedy and amicable settlement, which he had sought to remove," and stated that if Canada declined to resort to " legal proceedings " (which he had recommended), " it would be his duty " to consider " whether negotiations " with the Company can be resumed, or whether, in the last resort, Her Majesty's " Government must take the matter into their own hands, and proceed on their " own account " (Mr. Merivale's letter to H. H. Berens, 9th March 1859). Sir Edward remained in office long enough to put an end to the Company's license of exclusive trade in British Columbia and the Indian territories, but not long enough to carry out his policy of " connecting the two sides of British North " America, without the obstacle interposed by a proprietary jurisdiction between " them."

The Duke of Newcastle opened negotiations with the Company in 1863–4 with much vigour; but after various proposals and counter-proposals, including the the "reconstruction" of the Company, he was obliged to treat their propositions as "inadmissible."

Mr. Cardwell, during his administration, could not accept their proposals "without considerable modifications."

The Duke of Buckingham, after many discussions with the representatives of the Company, regretted to perceive that their proposals "did not afford much "prospect of an arrangement being come to," and in the communication, to which the letter of Sir Stafford Northcote is a reply, declared himself "unable "to recommend the adoption" of the terms demanded by the Company.

Our notice of what, in Sir Stafford Northcote's opinion, constitutes a "cheerful" acceptance of the decision of Her Majesty's Government, would be incomplete, if we did not remind Earl Granville that the Company's "proper conditions" for the surrender of that portion of the North Western Territories, for which they can show no title, but such as may be derived from the possession of a few trading posts, established there within the last 50 years, rose from a question of "no importance at all" in 1857, or at most, to "less money than would be "spent in a litigation on the subject" (House of Commons' Report, question 5834), to the retention, in 1863, in fee-simple of half the lands proposed to be surrendered, with various other conditions, including a guarantee by the Governments of Canada and British Columbia, of an annual profit on their own expenditures, for improvements on their own property. In 1864 these conditions took the form of a demand, first, to be paid 1,000,000 l. sterling from sales of lands and mines, with large reservations "to be selected by them," &c., and secondly, to be paid 1,000,000 l. sterling in cash, with other terms and reservations favourable to the Company. In 1868, these conditions for the surrender of territorial and governing rights over the whole territory remained at 1,000,000 l. as in the first proposition of 1864, with large reservations of land, at "selected" points, exempted from taxation, and with full liberty to carry on their trade, free from the export and import duties, to which all other subjects of Her Majesty in that country would be exposed.

In 1869, these various proposals, which no Secretary of State could possibly entertain, have all been apparently merged in one grand proposition to sell out "the territory at once for a sum of money" in cash, or bonds, the amount of which is not stated.

We content ourselves, under this head, with the observation, that whatever others may be able to see in all these transactions, we are utterly unable to discover, either a cheerful acceptance of the decision of any Government, or an honest disposition to fulfil the solemn pledges made to Parliament in 1857, on the faith of which the Company was unquestionably saved from judicial or legislative extinction.

Sir Stafford Northcote claims credit for the Company, because they have "declined to encourage overtures which have been made to them by private "persons for the purchase of portions of the Company's territory with a view to "their colonisation." Our information is (and we can give Earl Granville names and dates, if the point is deemed of any importance), that the only "overtures" of the kind mentioned, which the Company have received, were not merely "encouraged," but suggested and concocted, by prominent members of the Company, for the purpose of producing an impression on the Government, and with a view, not to colonisation, but to negotiation and the stock market.

We are not sure that we understand the statement of Sir Stafford Northcote, that the Company "have taken no step which could give rise to fresh complica-"tions, or place any new difficulty in the way of the admission of their territory "into the confederation."

The sale of land to private parties for colonisation (assuming that bonâ fide offers have been received from such parties) could not give rise to much complication, except in the affairs of the Company. If Sir Stafford hints at the negotiations which were lately reported to be going on with certain American speculators in London, for denationalising and Americanising the Company, with a view to the "admission of their territory" into the United States instead of the Confederation, we respectfully submit that while such a difficulty might indeed be "new," the proper person to solve it would be Her Majesty's Attorney General, with the aid of a court and jury of competent jurisdiction. We do not understand that Earl Granville expects us to defend in detail the Duke of Buckingham's proposals, or to answer all the objections made to them by Sir Stafford Northcote.

The Government of Canada, as we have already reminded his Lordship, neither suggested the Act of Parliament, nor the terms of the negotiation which the late Secretary of State for the Colonies attempted to carry out under its authority. The Canadian plan of dealing with the question of the North Western Territory and Rupert's Land is set forth in the Address of the Canadian Parliament to Her Most Gracious Majesty, and we do not feel at liberty, as representatives, to suggest any other mode until we are informed by Her Majesty's Government that the one proposed is deemed impracticable.

Sir Stafford Northcote's suggestion, that "the payment of a sum of money" for the purchase of the territory would conduce to a more satisfactory result, is, we believe, the point upon which Earl Granville specially desires to have our views. Assuming that by "territory" he means the whole territory to which the Company lay claim, and that they are to continue as a trading corporation, retaining their posts, and allotments of land in their neighbourhood, as he states was agreed upon between the Duke of Buckingham and Lord Kimberley, we have to observe—

1. This proposition involves an abandonment of the principle, which two Secretaries of State (and it must be presumed two successive administrations) declared, after much consideration, and in view of the transactions of 1857, was properly and justly applicable to this case, viz., that the compensation should be derived from the future revenue of the territory itself, and payable only as it came into the hands of Government. This principle was also accepted by the Company in their communication of 13th April 1864.

2. On the other hand, the principle of ascertaining and fixing a money value upon the territorial rights of the Company "in the British territory east of the "Rocky Mountains and north of the American and Canadian lines," and of extinguishing those rights by a payment "at once," was suggested in 1865, by a delegation from the Canadian Government of that day, and assented to by Mr. Cardwell, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, and his colleagues.

If the latter principle or mode of settlement is now to be adopted, it is obvious that the first question is—What is the nature of these "rights," and what territories do they affect? and the second—What are the rights separated from the duties and burdens attached to them by the Charter fairly worth?

We shall not attempt to answer these questions fully in the present communication, but we venture to submit, for Earl Granville's consideration, a few facts and inferences which cannot, we believe, be disputed, and which are essential elements in any calculation which may be attempted on the basis of a money purchase.

1st. The Charter of Charles II. (and for the present we raise no question as to its validity) could not, and did not, grant to the Hudson's Bay Company any territory in America which was not then subject to the Crown of England.

2. The Charter expressly excluded all lands, &c., then "possessed by the "subjects of any other Christian prince or State."

3. By the Treaty of St. Germain's-en-Laye, 1632, the King of England resigned to the King of France the sovereignty of Acadia, New France, and Canada generally, and without limits.

4. "La Nouvelle France" was then understood to include the whole region of Hudson's Bay, as the maps and histories of the time, English and French, abundantly prove.

5. At the Treaty of Ryswick (1697), 27 years after the date of the Charter, the right of the French to "places situated in Hudson's Bay" was distinctly admitted, and although Commissioners were appointed (but never came to an agreement) to "examine and determine the pretensions which either of the said kings hath "to the places situated in Hudson's Bay," and with "authority for settling the "limits and confines of the lands to be restored on either side," the places taken from the English (i. e., from the Hudson's Bay Company) by the French, previous to the war, and "re-taken by the English during this war, shall be left to the "French by virtue of the foregoing (the 7th) Article." In other words, the forts and factories of the Hudson's Bay Company, established in Hudson's Bay under pretence of their Charter, and taken possession of by the French in time time of peace, on the ground that they were an invasion of French territory, were restored, by the Treaty of Ryswick, to the French, and not to the Company.

6. By the Treaty of Utrecht, 1714, "the Bay and Straits of Hudson, together "with all lands, seas, sea-coasts, rivers, and places situate in the Bay and Straits, "and which belong thereto," were finally ceded to Great Britain.

7. As no definite boundary was ever established between the possessions of the French in the interior, and the English at Hudson's Bay, down to the Treaty of Paris (1763), when the whole of Canada was ceded to Great Britain, the extent of the actual possession by the two nations for some period, say from the Treaty of Utrecht to the Treaty of Paris, affords the only rational and true basis for ascertaining that boundary.

8. The evidence is abundant and conclusive to prove that the French traded over, and possessed, the whole of the country known as the Winnipeg Basin, and "Fertile Belt," from its discovery by Europeans, down to the Treaty of Paris, and that the Hudson's Bay Company neither traded, nor established posts, to the south or west of Lake Winnipeg, until many years after the cession of Canada to England.

9. No other, or subsequent grant to the Company was ever made, which could possibly extend their territorial rights under their Charter. The license to trade in "the Indian territories" which they obtained in 1821, was revoked in 1858, and has not been renewed.

10. The country which, in view of these facts, must be excluded from the operation of the Charter, includes all the lands fit for cultivation and settlement in that part of British America.

It will be for Earl Granville to consider whether this Company is entitled to demand any payment whatever for surrendering to the Crown that which already belongs to it. We confess our utter inability, upon any principle of law or justice, or public policy, with which we are acquainted, to estimate the amount which ought to be paid under such circumstances. The only basis of computation we can discover, applicable to such a case, is the cost of the legal proceedings necessary, if any be necessary, to recover possession. A person has taken possession of a part of your domain under the pretence that it is included in a deed which you gave him for some adjoining property, before you purchased the domain; you want to get rid of him, but will be compelled to bring an action. He is artful, stubborn, wealthy, and influential. He will be able to worry you with a tedious litigation. How many acres will you allow him to "reserve," and how much will you pay to save yourself the cost and trouble of a law suit? Compromises of this kind are not unknown in private life, and the motives and calculations which govern them, may be applicable to the present case. We recommend this mode of computing the amount of the payment to be made for the surrender of the North West Territory, as distinguished from Rupert's Land, with all the more confidence, because it has already been suggested by one of the ablest and most trusted of the representatives of the Company (see Evidence of Right Honourable E. Ellice, House of Commons' Report, 1857, question 5834).

With respect to Rupert's Land, or "the lands and territories" upon the coasts and confines of the seas, bays, &c. "that lie within the entrance of the Straits, "commonly called Hudson's Straits," "not possessed by the subjects of any other "Christian prince or State," a different rule, we admit, may be held to apply. Giving to the words of grant the widest construction, territorially, that could possibly be admitted by any judicial body, with the facts of the case in evidence before it, or giving to these words the construction which the Company themselves applied for a hundred years from the date of their Charter, the "rights" they propose to sell are of little commercial value. No revenue, we feel assured, will ever be derived from them. The fur trade is the only industry the country offers, as a source of profit, and this, if we rightly understand Sir Stafford Northcote's suggestion, the Company wish to retain.

It has never been alleged, even by the most sanguine advocates of the new theory of the Company respecting land sales, that any revenue can be derived from that source within the limits which we have assigned to Rupert's Land. The cost of Government there, inconsiderable though it may be, will always exceed any possible revenue. We are thus led to the same conclusion as in the case of the territory claimed, but not owned by the Company, viz., that what they propose to sell has no pecuniary or commercial value. They are there, however, by at least a show of right; being there they obstruct the progress of Imperial and Colonial policy, and put in jeopardy the sovereign rights of the Crown over one-third (and, as some think, even a larger portion) of the North American continent. "What is it worth to have this obstruction quietly re- "moved?" This is, perhaps, the true question, but the answer, we submit, belongs rather to Her Majesty's Government, which has the power, in the event of resistance, to remove the evil by a summary process, than to those who are little more than spectators of the negotiation.

Earl Granville is aware that several attempts have been made since 1857, to arrive at a definite agreement on the subject of compensation. The suggestions and proposals on each side, together with the actual market value of the Company's stock at different periods, supply data, which his Lordship may deem of importance, and we therefore respectfully submit our views as to the conclusions which may be deduced from them.

The first attempt of the Imperial Government to estimate and express in pounds sterling, the compensation which it would be reasonable to offer to the Company, was made by the Duke of Newcastle in 1864. The greatest sum which after "very grave consideration," his Grace felt himself able to propose for the surrender of the country west of Lake Winnipeg, was 250,000 l.; but the payment was subject to the following conditions:—

1. £. 150,000 was to be derived from the sale of lands by Government within the territory. The payment was to be made at the rate of 1 s. per acre sold, but to be entirely dependent on the Government receipts.

2. Payments were to cease whenever they reached 150,000 l., and absolutely at the end of 50 years.

3. The Company was to be paid one-fourth of the sum received by Government for export duty on gold, or for mining licenses, or leases for gold mining in the territory, for 50 years, or until the aggregate amounted to 1,000,000 l.

4. The payment of any part of the 250,000 l. was contingent on the ability of the Company to place Her Majesty's Government in possession of an "indis- "putable title" to the territory ceded by them, as against the claims of Canada.

The last condition was objected to by the Company on the ground that they could only give such title as they had, which they contended "must be taken "for better for worse." The Duke of Newcastle renewed his offer, modifying the last condition into a stipulation that, in case it should be found advisable, the territory, eastward of a line passing through Lake Winnipeg and Lake of the Woods, might be ceded or annexed to Canada, in which case, nothing would be payable to the Company in respect of that territory.

The present value, in cash, of such an offer, subject to the conditions and contingencies specified, would be very difficult to ascertain. The revenue from export duty on gold, and for licenses, would probably be nil. The revenue from land sales, if the cost of survey, management, and necessary roads, were deducted, would be nil also. It is very doubtful whether, if these deductions be made, the revenue from land sales in the Provinces of Canada, from 1763 to the present time, would show a surplus.

Sir Stafford Northcote quotes the price of land in Minnesota, and thence infers the value of lands on the Red River and Saskatchawan districts, which lie from five to ten degrees further north, and are still in the possession of the wild Indians of the plain; but we think it will be found that the lands in Minnesota, which sell for "one pound per acre," are either private lands, in the neighbourhood of towns, or the property of railway companies, on or near which millions of dollars have been expended to make them saleable; they are certainly not public lands, unimproved by public expenditure. Sir Stafford ought to have mentioned, at the same time, a fact which we believe is known to every emigrant who leaves the British Isles for America, that in the western states of the Union, and in the Provinces of Canada, wild lands are now given to settlers as "free grants," and we may add that this policy is more likely to be extended than reversed. To talk of the value of public lands as a source of revenue, distant from one to two thousand miles from available markets, and without roads or navigable waters by which to approach them, is to contradict all experience, or to assume that the cost of surveys and management, and of canals, roads, and other improvements for their development and settlement, will be supplied by those who do not own them, for the benefit of those who do; but in order to arrive at some result that can be expressed in figures, let us assume that the sum ascertained by the Duke of Newcastle to be a sufficient "compensation," would, under his proposition, have been paid within 50 years and at an average rate per annum,—we thus give the Company the benefit of all the doubts in the case, and reduce the question to a simple problem in arithmetic. What is the present value of an annuity of 5,000 l. for 50 years?

That value, we submit, is the highest amount in cash which can be claimed as an equivalent for the offer made to the Company in 1864, by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle.

The next offer of the Imperial Government, which mentions a specific sum, is that made by his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, on the 1st of December last. It differs from the previous offer in several important particulars.

1. It embraces the whole of the territory claimed by the Company.

2. It proposes to allow the Company to retain their "posts" and certain allotments of land in their vicinity, with a small reservation in each township, as it is surveyed.

3. It proposes to allow the Company one quarter of the receipts from land (free grants being treated as sales at 1 s. per acre) and one-fourth of the sum received by Government as an export duty for gold and silver, or for licenses for mining for gold or silver.

4. It limits the amount to be received under these heads conjointly, at 1,000,000 l. sterling.

The other stipulations are unimportant for the purpose of ascertaining the cash equivalent of the proposition.

It is evident that the "unknown quantities" in this equation are as difficult to find as in the first. We know the total sum to be paid and the proportion of the receipts from lands and mines applicable for its payment, but we do not know the average annual sum likely to be realised from their sale. The minimum price is fixed at 1 s. per acre and it is doubtful if, under the proposed arrangement, the price would ever be found to exceed that sum. There is one term still to be ascertained, the average number of acres per annum likely to be sold and granted; a crude guess is all that the case admits of. If we take Upper Canada, possessing many advantages for early and rapid settlement, of which unfortunately the remote territories of the North West are deprived, we find that from its erection into a separate Province down to 1868, about 22,000,000 of acres had been disposed of by sale and grant, or an average of about 286,000 acres per annum.

Assuming that the same rate of sale, &c., is maintained in the North-West Territories (which all the old Hudson Bay authorities who know the country would pronounce a bold assumption), we have reduced the question to a simple reference to the Annuity Tables, as before, viz.: What is the present value of an annuity of 3,575 l. per annum for 280 years?

We have omitted from the last term the one-fourth of the Government receipts from gold and silver, for two reasons: first, it has not been shown that there are any gold or silver mines in the territory that will pay for working; second, all the attempts heretofore made to obtain a revenue from such sources in Canada have failed, and public opinion has forced the local Governments to adopt the policy of what may be called "free mining," or cheap lands for miners, and abolition of royalties and imposts, except to meet the cost of preserving the peace, and of surveys and necessary supervision.

There is another proposition on the Government side, which bears on the question of "compensation:" it results from the agreement between the representatives of the Government of Canada and Her Majesty's Government in 1865, and containing fewer elements of uncertainty than propositions which involve questions of Government policy, emigration, land, sales, &c., it can be reduced to a cash value with greater exactitude.

Mr. Cardwell describes the agreement as follows: "On the fourth point, the "subject of the North-Western Territory, the Canadian Ministers desired that "that territory should be made over to Canada, and undertook to negotiate with "the Hudson's Bay Company for the termination of their rights, on condition "that the indemnity, if any, should be paid by a loan, to be raised by Canada, "under the Imperial guarantee, with the sanction of the Cabinet; we assented "to this proposal, undertaking that, if the negotiation should be successful, we, "on the part of the Crown, being satisfied that the amount of the indemnity "was reasonable and the security sufficient, would apply to the Imperial Parlia-"ment to sanction the agreement and to guarantee the amount."

The Canadian delegates reported on the subject with a little more detail. "We "accordingly proposed to the Imperial Ministers that the whole British territory "east of the Rocky Mountains and north of the American or Canadian lines should "be made over to Canada, subject to such rights as the Hudson's Bay Company "might be able to establish, and that the compensation to that Company (if any "were found to be due) should be met by a loan guaranteed by Great Britain. "The Imperial Government consented to this, and a careful investigation of the "case satisfies us that the compensation to the Hudson's Bay Company cannot, "under any circumstances, be onerous. It is but two years since the present "Hudson's Bay Company purchased the entire property of the old Company; "they paid 1,500,000 l. for the entire property and assets, in which was included "a large sum of cash on hand, large landed properties in British Columbia and "elsewhere, not included in our arrangement; a very large claim against the "United States Government, under the Oregon Treaty; and ships, goods, pelts, "and business premises in England and Canada, valued at 1,023,569 l. The "value of the territorial rights of the Company, therefore, in the estimation of "the Company itself, will be easily arrived at."

The principle which this agreement between the two Governments recognises as applicable to the case appears to be, compensation in money for the ascertained rights of the Company, after deducting the value of the property retained by them. The words "if any," and "if any were found to be due," import that, in the opinion of both parties, it was possible, if not probable, that after making the deductions, no compensation would be "due."

The basis of the calculation which seems to have been made, or agreed upon, is very simple. The old Hudson Bay Company had recently sold all the rights and property of the Company, of every description, for the sum of 1,500,000 l. An inventory agreed to by both sellers and purchasers set down the assets, exclusive of "territorial" rights, as follows:

	£.	s.	d.
1. "The assets (exclusive of Nos. 2 and 3) of the Hud-"son Bay Company, recently and specially valued "by competent valuers, at - - - - - -	1,023,569	–	–
2. "The Landed Territory (not valued) - - - -	—
3. "A cash balance of - - - - - - -	370,000	–	–
TOTAL - - - £.	1,393,569	–	–"

On the face of their own statement, 1,500,000 l., less the above sum, or 106,431 l., was the amount which the new purchasers actually paid for the "landed territory." Under the agreement of 1865, this seems to be the highest sum which Mr. Cardwell and the representatives of the Canadian Government thought could, in any event, be demanded by the Company, as indemnity or compensation for the surrender of the rights they "would be able to establish."

We have thus attempted to convert into their equivalents in cash the two offers made to the Company since 1857 by the Imperial Government, and to ascertain the amount of the indemnity contemplated by Mr. Cardwell and the Canadian delegates, in the arrangements of 1865. To arrive at any result, we have had to assume figures which, according to our experience, the facts of a new country will be more likely to reduce than to increase. We have also omitted conditions, either implied or expressed, in the proposals of 1864 and 1868, which we believe would have imposed considerable expense upon the Company.

There

There is another mode of estimating the amount to be paid on the principle of compensation for actual loss only, which remains to be considered. The stock of the Company has, for some time, been quoted at an average of 13¾. The capital is, nominally 2,000,000 l., and the shares 20 l. The value of the stock, therefore, in cash, assuming that the whole of it could be sold at the market rate, is 1,350,000 l., or 43,569 l. less than the value, according to their own estimate in 1863 of the Company's assets, exclusive of the "landed territory."

The money obtained from the public for shares, beyond the 1,500,000 l. paid to the old shareholders, will no doubt be amply sufficient to make good any deficiency in the valuation of 1863.

From a consideration of these data, we submit that if the validity of the Charter is not now to be questioned; if the territorial extent of the country affected by it is not to be defined; if the claim of Canada to include within her boundaries a large portion, if not the whole, of the country occupied by the French at the time of the cession in 1763, is not to be investigated, and finally determined; if the admitted incapacity and the notorious neglect of the Company to perform the duties of Government (which were part of the consideration for the rights conceded by the Charter) are not to be taken as sufficient on public grounds to justify cancellation and re-entry by the Crown; then the very highest indemnity, which ought to be paid in cash, for a surrender of the territorial claims of the Company, with the reservations and other privileges offered by His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, is the sum indicated by the foregoing computations.

We must, in conclusion, express to Earl Granville our strong conviction that no money offer, which either the Imperial or the Canadian Government would deem reasonable, will be accepted by the Company, and that to delay the organisation of constitutional government in the North-West Territory until the Hudson's Bay Company consent to reasonable terms of surrender is to hinder the success of Confederation in British America, and to imperil the interests and authority of the British Crown in the territories now ruled by the Company.

We therefore respectfully submit for Earl Granville's consideration, whether it is not expedient that the Address of the Canadian Parliament be at once acted upon, under the authority of the Imperial Act of 1867.

But if his Lordship should see any sufficient legal or other objection to that course, then we ask, on behalf of the Dominion Government, for the immediate transfer to that Government of the "North-West Territory," or all that part of British North America from Canada on the east, to British Columbia, Alaska, and the Arctic Ocean on the west and north, not heretofore validly granted to and now held by "the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England "trading into Hudson's Bay," by virtue of a charter of King Charles the Second, issued about the year 1670.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 9 March 1869.

LORD GRANVILLE transmitted to the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company a copy of your Letter of the 9th February,* and I enclose, by his Lordship's directions, a copy of the answer which he has received.

The conclusions to which he has been led, after a careful consideration both of the correspondence which has passed and of the various representations made orally to him by yourselves and by the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Company, are embodied in the enclosed Letter, which he has directed me to address address to Sir S. Northcote, and which you will be good enough to consider as conveying to yourselves also the views of Her Majesty's Government. His Lordship is confident that you will give it your earnest attention.

His Lordship desires me to add, that in case the terms suggested in this letter should be accepted by the parties concerned, Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to fulfil the expectations held out in Mr. Cardwell's Despatch of 17th June 1865, and to propose to Parliament that the Imperial guarantee should be given to a loan of 300,000 l., the sum which is proposed to be paid over by Canada to the Company on the transfer of the Company's rights.

Command Paper, 19 June 1865, Canada Conference.

As this is a matter in which the Company has no interest, it is not adverted to in my letter to Sir Stafford Northcote.

Westminster Palace Hotel, London,
Sir, 27 March 1869.

YOUR Letter of the 9th instant,* enclosing a copy of the proposals made by Lord Granville to the Hudson Bay Company in your Letter to Sir Stafford Northcote of the same date, has not been formally acknowledged by us in consequence of a doubt, not yet removed, as to the acceptance of those proposals by the Company. We stated verbally to Lord Granville our objections to his proposals, but finally consented to recommend them to the Canadian Government on condition that the Company first signified their acceptance of them.

Sir Stafford Northcote has since opened communication with us directly, and proposed important modifications of Lord Granville's terms, to which we could not assent. On some points of detail we agreed that the terms might be varied or qualified, if such variation or qualification would be likely to make the arrangements, as a whole, more acceptable to the shareholders of the Company. We understand Sir Stafford Northcote has acquainted Lord Granville with the correspondence which has passed between us on this subject.

The Company having, at their meeting of the 24th instant, postponed for a fortnight the question of accepting Lord Granville's proposals, we regret that we are unable to await their decision. Our public duties require that we should immediately return to Canada, and we have now the honour to repeat the request contained in our letter of the 9th February, viz., that immediate action may be taken by the Imperial Government upon the Address of the Canadian Parliament of December 1867, or that, pending the negotiations for the transfer of Rupert's Land, "the North Western Territory," or all that part of British North America from Canada on the east, to British Columbia, Alaska, and the Arctic Ocean on the west and north, not heretofore validly granted to and now held by "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," may be immediately transferred to the Dominion of Canada, under the authority of the British North America Act of 1867.

ANNO TRICESIMO PRIMO et TRICESIMO SECUNDO VICTORIÆ REGINÆ.

CAP. CV.

AN ACT for enabling Her Majesty to accept a Surrender upon Terms of the Lands, Privileges, and Rights of "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," and for admitting the same into the Dominion of Canada. [31st July 1868.]

WHEREAS by certain Letters Patent granted by His late Majesty King Charles the Second, in the twenty-second year of His reign certain persons therein named were incorporated by the name of "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," and certain lands and territories, rights of government, and other rights, privileges, liberties, franchises, powers and authorities were thereby granted or purported to be granted to the said Governor and Company in His Majesty's Dominions in North America:

Recital of Charter of Hudson's Bay Company, 22 Car. 2.

And whereas, by the British North America Act, 1867, it was (amongst other things) enacted that it should be lawful for Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, on Address from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, to admit Rupert's Land and the North Western Territory, or either of them, into the Union on such terms and conditions as are in the Address expressed, and as Her Majesty thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of the said Act:

And whereas, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the said British North America Act, 1867, and of admitting Rupert's Land into the said Dominion as aforesaid, upon such terms as Her Majesty thinks fit to approve, it is expedient that the said lands, territories, rights, privileges, liberties, franchises, powers and authorities, so far as the same have been lawfully granted to the said Company, should be surrendered to Her Majesty, Her heirs and successors, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by and between Her Majesty and the said Governor and Company as hereinafter mentioned:

Recital of agreement of surrender.

Be it therefore enacted, by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. This Act may be cited as "Rupert's Land Act, 1868."

2. For the purposes of this Act the term "Rupert's Land" shall include the whole of the lands and territories held or claimed to be held by the said Governor and Company.

Definition of "Rupert's Land."

3. It shall be competent for the said Governor and Company to surrender to Her Majesty, and for Her Majesty by any instrument under Her sign-manual and signet to accept a surrender of all or any of the lands, territories, rights, privileges, liberties, franchises, powers and authorities whatsoever granted or purported to be granted by the said Letters Patent to the said Governor and Company within Rupert's Land, upon such terms and conditions as shall be agreed upon by and between Her Majesty and the said Governor and Company; provided, however, that such surrender shall not be accepted by Her Majesty Power to Her Majesty to accept surrender of lands, &c. of the Company upon certain terms.

Appendix.

until the terms and conditions upon which Rupert's Land shall be admitted into the said dominion of Canada shall have been approved of by Her Majesty, and embodied in an Address to Her Majesty from both the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, in pursuance of the one hundred and forty-sixth section of the British North America Act, 1867; and that the said surrender and acceptance thereof shall be null and void unless within a month from the date of such acceptance Her Majesty does by Order in Council under the provisions of the said last-recited Act admit Rupert's Land into the said Dominion; provided further, that no charge shall be imposed by such terms upon the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

Extinguishment of all rights of the Company.

4. Upon the acceptance by Her Majesty of such surrender all rights of government and proprietary rights, and all other privileges, liberties, franchises, powers, and authorities whatsoever, granted or purported to be granted by the said Letters Patent to the said Governor and Company within Rupert's Land, and which shall have been so surrendered, shall be absolutely extinguished; provided, that nothing herein contained shall prevent the said Governor and Company from continuing to carry on in Rupert's Land or elsewhere trade and commerce.

Power to Her Majesty by Order in Council to admit Rupert's Land into and form part of the Dominion of Canada.

5. It shall be competent to Her Majesty, by any such Order or Orders in Council as aforesaid, on Address from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, to declare that Rupert's Land shall, from a date to be therein mentioned, be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the Parliament of Canada, from the date aforesaid, to make, ordain, and establish within the land and territory so admitted as aforesaid, all such laws, institutions, and ordinances, and to constitute such courts and officers as may be necessary for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects and others therein: provided, that until otherwise enacted by the said Parliament of Canada, all the powers, authorities and jurisdiction of the several courts of justice now established in Rupert's Land, and of the several officers thereof, and of all magistrates and justices now acting within the said limits, shall continue in full force and effect therein.

COPY of a LETTER from the Right Hon. Sir Edmund Head, Bart., K.C.B., to Sir F. Rogers, Bart.

Sir, Hudson's Bay House, London, 11 November 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 9th ultimo, in which you state that his Grace the Duke of Newcastle will be ready to consider any proposal submitted to him by the Hudson's Bay Company with reference to the introduction of the direct authority of Her Majesty's Government in Rupert's Land. It is gratifying to myself and the Committee to find that an opening is thus afforded for discussing plans which, to us, appear to have an important bearing on the future welfare of British North America.

At the same time, in order to avoid all misapprehension, it may be right to observe that it is not precisely as a boon to themselves that the Hudson's Bay Company have called his Grace's attention to the establishment of a colony at Red River. Probably their commercial interest would be equally served if things remained as they are, and if their trade were carried on as it has been. It is not, at any rate, with a view to immediate pecuniary profit that they have raised this question, and it is likely, for the present at least, that they would lose fully as much as they would gain by the increase of settlement in the chartered territory. Such appears to have been the unvarying opinion of this Committee before the change made in July last.

It may, no doubt, be said that the Hudson's Bay Company are merely endeavouring to escape from the troublesome responsibility of governing the Red River Settlement and the adjacent district.

In answer to this, I would observe that the responsibility, whatever it may be, which is imposed by the charter on the Company must be correlative with the rights and powers vested in them for the purpose of discharging that duty. What these rights and powers are not, is pretty clear from the following passage in the letter of the Law Officers of the Crown, dated 1st July 1857 (Appendix to Report of Committee, page 404). These gentlemen say:—

"But with respect to any right of Government taxation, exclusive administration of justice, or exclusive trade, otherwise than as a consequence of the right of ownership of the land, such right could not be legally insisted on by the Hudson's Bay Company as having been legally granted to them by the Crown."

The power of taxation may be thought to be the first and necessary condition of all effective powers of Government; but if this first condition is wanting, it would seem to follow that the powers vested in the Company of governing others than their own servants and dependants must be of a very limited character; and if the power is limited, so also must the responsibility be limited.

The Company are fully competent to manage their own people, and they believe that they have proved themselves more competent to manage the Indians than any Government or Association

Association which has yet tried its hand at this work in North America. They have preserved peace and good-will on one side of a frontier when war and savage hatred have raged on the other. They have done so, no doubt, from interested motives, but the motives of those who failed in accomplishing the same task, have perhaps not been more pure.

In the present case the question at issue is not the Government of the Hudson's Bay officers and servants, or of the Indians, but the exercise of proper authority and protection over those subjects of her Majesty, mostly unconnected with the Company, who have chosen to settle at Red River, or who may hereafter settle in the adjoining territory. These considerations then, and the future position of British interests in North America (in which, no doubt, the Hudson's Bay Company are deeply interested), not the hope of immediate advantage, have induced the present Committee to express, as they have done in their resolution of the 28th August last, the conviction that the time had arrived for introducing into these regions the direct authority of the Crown.

I have to assure his Grace, that the Committee will esteem themselves fortunate if they are able to co-operate with him in the establishment there of such a Government as he may deem fitted for the wants of the people and the circumstances of the time.

I have had the honour of several conversations with you on this subject, from which I infer that the Secretary of State is unwilling to deal with the question of establishing a Colonial Government in Rupert's Land, so long as the Company maintain, unimpaired, their claim to the exclusive ownership of the soil within that territory. It is not for me, or the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company, to discuss the reason for such a view. We certainly assume that the Company are proprietors of the land under the charter, and we think that this primâ facie title is impliedly recognised in the letter of the Law Officers of July 1st, 1857, already quoted. No one has contested in a court of any kind a possession which has existed for 200 years; and the Committee do not, themselves, clearly see why the exercise of this private right of ownership of the soil, by individuals, or by a corporate body, should be deemed incompatible with the exercise of the Queen's public authority in matters of government. They do not see why that which is the normal state of things in most other colonies should be inadmissible in this particular portion of British North America; but it is not their business to enter into this question. They are anxious to do all they can to smooth over difficulties rather than raise them, and I will, therefore, proceed to consider what would probably be the nature of the territory to be included in any such Colony, and what are the measures which the Hudson's Bay Company would be prepared to take in order to facilitate its establishment. It will be for his Grace the Duke of Newcastle to decide whether the sacrifices they are ready to make are of a nature to warrant any action on the part of the Crown.

With regard to the extent of the proposed Colony, of which the seat of Government would be Red River (or Fort Garry), the Committee presume that his Grace would wish it to include the whole country from the frontier of the United States, to the north branch of the Saskatchewan, and to extend eastward towards Lake Superior as far as the frontier of Canada, wherever the precise line of that frontier may be found. Perhaps the most convenient limit for the northern boundary would be either the Saskatchewan itself, or a line running from the Rocky Mountains eastward through Edmonton House and Fort Cumberland, and from the latter following the Saskatchewan down to Lake Winnipeg. Nothing would be gained by going farther to the northward, nor by including the eastern side of Lake Winnipeg, but from the mouth of the Winnipeg River where it enters the lake, the line of demarcation might be run eastward until it cut the Canadian frontier somewhere north of Lake Superior or Lake Huron.

Of this large tract, Assinaboia, or the district round Red River, forms but a small portion, although it includes a good deal of the land which is probably fittest for settlement. In 1834 the Hudson's Bay Company repurchased this district from Lord Selkirk for a consideration amounting to upwards of 80,000 l. This fact alone makes it clear that it would be impossible for the Committee, as Trustees for the Company, to entertain the question of ceding the ownership of the soil without compensation or equivalent of some kind.

The most obvious, simple, and satisfactory settlement of the question of transfer would of course be that the Crown should compensate the Company for their property by a sum of money paid either at once or in a series of annual payments; but to the supposed value of the soil would have to be added the price of the Company's interest of all mines of gold and silver which are by express words given in the Charter. It is clear that the recent discovery of gold in the territory would cause the proprietary to reject any bargain which implied the gratuitous cession of these rights. The Committee would be quite willing that the exact amount to be paid to the Hudson's Bay Company for the land should be calculated on the principle of what they themselves paid to Lord Selkirk for a portion of it, and they would be prepared to discuss the fair worth both of territory and mining rights, or to submit the assessment of their value to impartial arbitrators.

But the Committee also know that the Secretary of State may find difficulties in the way of a large money payment of any kind, and in order, as far as they can, to remove all obstacles to this negotiation they have authorised me to propose another alternative as a middle course, which they think would be admissible, although far from welcome to many of their own proprietors.

This alternative is as follows, viz., that, subject to certain special stipulations to be stated hereafter, the Company should retain the ownership in fee simple of one-half of the lands in the Colony and the other half should be conveyed by the Company to the Crown. The actual division should be one based on considerations of the extent and value of different sections, derived from soil, situation and climate. The details might be settled afterwards if the principle were once admitted. In the portion fitted for settlement and along the frontier the division might be made at once in alternate blocks of so many thousand acres, or so many square miles. In the unsettled and remote portion of the country the division might stand over indefinitely, provided a power was given to either party to initiate proceedings against squatters and trespassers. The undivided lands might be managed by a board of commissioners.

The stipulations of which I have spoken, and which it appears to the Committee would be reasonable, are as follows:

1st. The Hudson's Bay Company should have the sole right to erect, and should bind themselves to complete, within five years, an electric telegraph to connect British Columbia and Canada. The line for this telegraph should be approved by the Secretary of State, and it should be maintained by the Company, who would of course engage to convey the messages of the Imperial and Colonial Governments at a fixed and moderate rate.

It would be necessary as a condition precedent to the erection of the telegraph,—

(A.) That the Governments of British Columbia and Canada should pledge their faith respectively to the Secretary of State to pay the yearly sum set forth in the enclosures to the Despatch of 31st July 1862, with all the advantages as to lands to be granted by Her Majesty's Government, and other terms therein specified.

(B.) That a road should be laid out along the line of telegraph, but the soil on which the telegraph stands, and the space (say one mile in width on one side of its course) should belong to the Hudson's Bay Company, to be reckoned as part of the half of the land which they would retain. The other side of the road might be included in the half belonging to the Crown.

(C.) That the Company, in constructing the telegraph, should be entitled to use wood or other materials taken from ungranted land.

2nd. The Crown shall resume the grant of mines and diggings of gold and silver throughout the Colony on condition of paying to the Hudson's Bay Company one-third of the receipts of all dues, royalties, rents, &c. from such mines or diggings, whether raised by way of export duty or otherwise; but the Company should not be liable for expenses of collection or escort.

3rd. The buildings required for military or Government purposes at Fort Garry or Red River should be valued and purchased of the Company.

4th. The Company should retain, as a portion of their half of the lands, all lots already laid out and surveyed, as well as 5,000 acres round each of their forts or posts.

The Committee trust that the Duke of Newcastle will view these proposals of theirs as an evidence of an anxious desire to meet His Grace's wishes.

While suggesting a plan which involves the cession of the Company's right of property over one-half of a vast tract of British North America, the Committee simply ask that the Crown will exercise on British soil, in favour of British subjects, that amount of control and protection which the Queen's prerogative can alone afford; a protection, in other cases, at least, deemed perfectly consistent with the unimpaired enjoyment of existing rights of private property, and which, in fact, is commonly thought to be directed specially to the maintenance of those very rights against wrong and violence of any kind.

Copy of a LETTER from Chichester Fortescue, Esq., M.P., to the Right Honourable Sir Edmund Head, Bart., K.C.B.

Sir, Downing-street, 11 March 1864.

The Duke of Newcastle has considered, with the care which their importance requires, the proposals contained in your letter of the 11th November last, respecting the introduction of the direct authority of Her Majesty's Government into Rupert's Land.

The first of these proposals is as follows:—It appears that in 1834 the Company purchased from Lord Selkirk the tract of land called Assinaboia, on which the Red River Settlement now stands, for a consideration amounting to upwards of 80,000 l. You propose to cede to the Government that territory, together with a far larger tract described in your letter, on receiving:

1. £. 80,000. for the district of Assinaboia.

2. A payment for the rest of the land calculated on the principle of what the Company paid to Lord Selkirk, and

3. The price of the Company's right to all mines of gold and silver.

His

His Grace infers from the tenour of your letter that the payment made to Lord Selkirk was an actual payment of 80,000 l. in money, and not a mere share in the profits of the Company, to some amount supposed to be equal to 80,000 l. But, however the payment was made, he apprehends that it formed part of a large arrangement by which the two companies, which are now combined in the Hudson's Bay Company, put an end to a competition which was becoming ruinous to both of them, and had to be stopped at all hazards. If this is the case, the terms of purchase afford no safe grounds for conjecturing whether 80,000 l. was really a fair market price for the land at the time of the purchase. But his Grace cannot consider this statement to have any bearing on the present negotiation. It appears to him that in making a purchase of land there are really only two questions to be considered, first, what the land is worth to the vendor, and, secondly, what it is worth to the purchaser. It is plain that neither of these questions is even remotely affected by the price which (wisely or unwisely) may have been paid for it to Lord Selkirk in 1834. And his Grace is unable therefore to adopt the proposed principle of valuation.

Nor could he consent to pay the assessed value of the gold and silver which is or may be found in the Company's territory. On this subject a good deal of experience has already accumulated. Judging from this experience, it is very doubtful whether the Crown could raise a revenue from the gold miners more than sufficient to meet the expenses which they entail, and very probable that the revenue so raised might be insufficient for its purpose. That a private corporation should succeed in compelling this class of persons to pay any considerable revenue to be expended, not for the digger's own benefit, nor even for the benefit of the general community, but for the benefit of the corporation, his Grace holds to be absolutely impossible.

He does not consider therefore that the interests of the company in the unascertained and unavailable source of profit is a matter capable of assessment.

Thus much as to the principle of valuation. Passing to the mode of payment, his Grace observes that you are alive to the difficulty of applying to Parliament for a grant of money from the Imperial Treasury. But he thinks it necessary to state clearly that the difficulty is, in his opinion, insuperable, and that having reference to the position of the Company and the views on Colonial expenditure, which are prevalent in and out of the Legislature, any appropriation of Imperial funds by vote of Parliament to the compensation of the Company must be considered as out of the question.

It follows to consider the second alternative proposed on the part of the Company; but before doing so, I am directed to notice your observation that the exercise of the private right of ownership of the soil by individuals, or by a corporate body, need not be deemed incompatible with the exercise of the Queen's authority in matters of government, and you point out in support of your opinion that this is in fact the normal state of things in most other Colonies. This the Duke of Newcastle fully admits. He would even add that it is also the normal state of things in the United Kingdom and in most other settled countries.

The obvious distinction lies in the fact that these colonies and countries are settled. From this fact it follows first that there is a large amount of property, independent of any proceeds derivable from the sale of land, which is applicable to the government and improvement of the country, and next that it is not a matter of public policy to attract immigration by a wise disposal of the public lands. In an unsettled colony there is no effectual mode of taxation for purposes of government and improvement, and the whole progress of the Colony depends on the liberal and prudent disposal of its land. These considerations afford decisive reasons against leaving that land in the possession of a corporation; and I am to observe that these objections, conclusive in any case, are greatly enhanced in the case of the Hudson's Bay Company, as I learn from your letter that it has been "the unvarying opinion" of the committee, on whose behalf you speak, that the Company would "lose fully as much as they would gain by the increase of settlement in the chartered territory." It is therefore (to say the least) a question whether the Company would not be under a direct inducement to use their proprietary rights to thwart the colonizing efforts of the Government.

It is true that in former times the whole soil of a settlement was frequently conveyed to a proprietary body; but in these cases the responsibilities of Government followed the grant of property. Those who were invested with extensive corporate rights of possession bore (like the East India Company in its earlier days) the whole expense both of civil government and of military defence.

In Prince Edward Island the right of property was more recently disjoined from that of Government, but the result has not been such as to invite imitation.

The second alternative proposed in your letter, then, is this; that the whole territory which it is proposed to bring under the authority of the Crown should be divided into large blocks or tracts of land, which shall be assigned alternately to the Crown and to the Company. Waste lands, till so assigned, being managed by a board in which both parties should be represented.

To this proposal his Grace feels himself unable to assent. The difficulties of management which might be expected to arise in working such a plan, would in themselves be sufficiently formidable. The expense, delay, and controversy which might arise in defining and maintaining the boundaries of Crown lands, and the improbability that a cordial agreement would continue between the persons representing different and often conflicting interests in the proposed land board, are serious dangers. But the conclusive objection to the scheme is that it would reproduce in a gigantic shape the inconveniences which on a far smaller scale were found intolerable in Canada. It is evident, as a matter of reasoning, and notorious as a matter of fact, that the interposition of large blocks of property between tracts or districts of Crown land, must obstruct the opening up of those districts, unless it fortunately happens that the private proprietor is ready to expend money pari passu with the Government in the construction of roads and other improvements, and to conform his land policy to that of the authorities.

It is also clear that colonists of the Anglo-Saxon race look upon the land revenue as legitimately belonging to the community, and that the diversion of half, or more than half, of that revenue to the purpose of increasing the dividends of a private corporation, would cause a continual and growing discontent which could not be allayed by any abstract argument of right, and the full force of which the Government would be expected by the company to sustain.

His Grace cannot consent to make himself responsible for these consequences, and he is therefore obliged to treat as inadmissible any proposal for the proprietary partition of those territories which may be placed under the government of the Crown.

The only terms which, after a very grave consideration of your letter, he feels himself able to propose for the acceptance of the company, are the following:

1. That within certain geographical limits (coinciding more of less with those laid down in your letter) the territorial rights of the company should be surrendered to the Crown.

2. That the sum of 1 s. per acre on every acre sold by Government should be paid to the company, and payment to cease when their aggregate receipts from this source shall exceed 150,000 l., or on the expiration of 50 years.

3. That one-fourth of the sum received by the Government as an export duty for gold, or on leases of gold mines, or licenses for gold mining, shall be payable to the company for 50 years, or until the aggregate receipts shall amount to 100,000 l.

4. That on these conditions a government be established in the ceded territories; Great Britain undertaking the expense and risk of that government until the Colony is able to support it, as in British Columbia, and other Colonies.

It must be clearly understood that the payments contemplated in the second and third of these articles are entirely dependent on the Government receipts, and that the Government will not be pledged to any particular form of levying a tax upon gold.

If the company should find themselves unable to accept these terms, or some modification of them, his Grace does not see how it will be possible for him to recommend that the Crown should assume any responsibility in respect of the Hudson's Bay territories, and it will rest with the Company to apply to Parliament for such powers, as may, in their opinion, enable them to preserve order in the country in which they are interested.

Right Honourable Sir Edmund Head, Bart., &c. &c. &c.

P.S.—Since the above letter was drafted, his Grace has received from the Governor General of Canada a Despatch, from which it appears that the Canadian Government contemplate the assertion of a claim to all that portion of Central America which can be shown to have been in the possession of the French in 1763. It must be understood that the above suggestions are made on the supposition that the cession by the Company will place Her Majesty's Government in possession of an indisputable title to the territory ceded by them.

COPY of a LETTER from the Right Honourable Sir Edmund Head, Bart., to Chichester Fortescue, Esq., M. P.

Sir, Hudson's Bay House, London, 14 March 1864.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 11th instant, which has been laid before the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company, by whom I am authorised to make the following remarks:

The Committee deeply regret to find that none of the proposals made by them has been found admissible by his Grace the Secretary of State for the Colonies; but as this is the case, there is no further use in discussing the principles on which they were based, or the details involved in them.

On the other hand, the Committee would feel it their duty at once to address themselves to the consideration of the counter proposal contained in your letter of the 11th, were it not for the postscript of that letter relating to the claims of Canada.

It is true that these claims are not new; they were expressly stated in the same form in the petition from the Board of Trade of Toronto, which was before the Parliamentary Committee of 1857, and they were in fact discussed by that Committee, and were referred to in the letter of the Attorney and Solicitor General to the Right Honourable H. Labouchere. The Law Officers there say, that the question of boundary could not be made the subject of a quasi judicial inquiry without the consent of both parties, and that a decision of a Committee of the Privy Council would have no effect in such a case as a binding judicial determination. They had previously stated, that "in the case of grants of a considerable age,

"age, such as this charter, when the words, as is often the case, are indefinite or ambiguous, "the rule is, that they are construed by usage and enjoyment, including in these latter "terms the assertion of ownership by the Company on important public occasions, such as "the Treaty of Ryswick and Utrecht, and again in 1750."

When Sir Frederic Rogers, in his letter of 9th October 1863, intimated the readiness of his Grace the Secretary of State to receive any proposal made on the part of the Company, the fact that these claims had been made by Canada, and had not been waived, was as well known as it now is. The nature of the title of the Hudson's Bay Company also was then as well, perhaps better, known to the Secretary of State than it is to us. I say, perhaps better, because the Law Officers of the Crown have, we believe, at various times given the Colonial Office the benefit of their observations thereon, an advantage which the Company, of course, have not enjoyed to the same extent.

We believe the title of the Hudson's Bay Company to be good, and we are prepared to defend it in any court in which it may be impugned; but we are not prepared to originate any inquiry of the kind, or to undertake to give any guarantee, or to present to the Secretary of State any title other than that which I have already said is as well known to his Grace as it is to ourselves. Such as it is, it must be taken for better for worse, for we have no other to offer, and we believe that to be sufficient. If, therefore, any such guarantee or undertaking is a condition precedent to the completion of an arrangement on the basis now suggested in your letter of the 11th instant, it will, we fear, be wholly useless for us to enter into the consideration of the principle of that offer, or any discussion how far the details involved in it are or are not acceptable to the Company, or how far the amount of compensation would be sufficient.

If, indeed, the question were one only of some few miles, more or less, of boundary, the case would be wholly different. But in the form in which the claim is presented to us in your postscript, it appears to the Committee to make all further action impracticable.

We may perhaps be permitted to make one other remark on the postscript of your letter.

The claim of Canada, if it means anything, seems to assert that certain rights of a foreign power modify the operation of the Charter. These foreign rights were acquired by Treaty for the Crown of England in 1763, nearly 100 years after the grant of the Charter. Now, after the possession and recognition in various ways for two centuries, the validity of this instrument is attacked on the ground of those supposed rights. The claim thus made may be good or bad, but it appears to us singular that the Company should be required by the Crown itself to warrant the validity of its own Charter. There are legal methods, no doubt, of rescinding, by the courts, improvident or unlawful grants emanating from the Crown. In 1857 the Law Officers were consulted by Mr. Labouchere as to the possibility or equity of having recourse to proceedings of this kind in this case, and they gave their answer in the letter referred to above. Our rights, such as they are, come from the Crown, and it seems to us, who are unlearned in the law, somewhat strange that the Crown, the grantor, should ask of the Hudson's Bay Company, the grantee, a warranty for a title derived immediately from itself. It adds to this apparent anomaly, that the only competing title against which the warranty could be required is the title of the Crown itself in another shape. We presume that the object of the Canadian Government is to open the country for settlement—an object which it would be in the power of the Colonial Office to secure at any rate, and which the Hudson's Bay Company have no wish whatever to prevent.

Appendix to Report pp. 403 and 404.

But for this preliminary difficulty, arising from the postscript to your letter, it would now be my duty to call your attention to the fact that that letter makes no allusion to a substantive portion of our offer, to which we attach great importance; that, namely, of erecting, on certain terms, an electric telegraph across the Hudson's Bay territory. We have ceded to no one the right to do this, and we are perfectly ready, on fair conditions and as part of the arrangement, to undertake to do it ourselves; nor is anything said, in the counter proposal made by you, as to the portions of land which the Company might be allowed to retain as private property, nor as to the manner in which their posts, or their buildings and improvements would be dealt with.

To revert for a moment to the electric telegraph, it is obvious that, so far as it goes, the mere appearance of a vague claim on the part of Canada, pressed upon us now or countenanced by the Secretary of State, must have a tendency to deter us from any outlay of capital in this or any other form. We had hoped to have taken the first steps for the erection of the telegraph in the present season, and we know by experience that in a distant country where winter begins early and lasts till late, a season lost is the loss of the whole year.

I trust, sir, that in laying these remarks before his Grace the Secretary of State, you will assure him that they are offered with great humility and respect, and that we are as ready as we ever were to deal in a fair and candid spirit with this or any other offer made to us. So far as the proposal itself goes, and irrespective of this question of title, the Committee rejects no basis of negotiation (if that is a proper word to use in a correspondence between a private company and Her Majesty's Government), and what they have said is dictated only by a sense of the duty incumbent on them to uphold the interests of the Company whose affairs they administer.

Copy of a LETTER from C. Fortescue Esq., M.P., to the Right Honourable Sir E. Head, Bart., K.C.B.

Sir, Downing Street, 5 April 1864.

I am directed by the Duke of Newcastle to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th ultimo, in which you state that the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company are prevented by the postscript of my letter of the 11th from taking into consideration the proposals contained in that letter relating to the transfer of part of Rupert's Land to the Crown.

It appears to the Duke of Newcastle that the Committee has somewhat misapprehended the intention with which that postscript was written.

It is assumed, for the present purpose, that the grant to the Hudson's Bay Company is a valid grant; but it appears to be contended on the part of Canada, that whether valid or not, an instrument which only granted to the Company land not in possession of a foreign power in the year 1670, could not, from its very terms, comprehend in 1763 a territory which then belonged to the French, and which it is contended must therefore have then belonged, and belongs now to Canada.

If this claim, on the part of Canada, were established it would evidently be impossible for Her Majesty's Government to secure that lands to which it extended, should when sold, be subject to a payment of 1*s.* an acre to the Hudson's Bay Company. It is therefore impossible for his Grace to make any pledge of this kind, except as to land which is beyond the scope of the Canadian claim.

As regards the territories west of the Mississippi, to which the present negotiation in the main relates, the Duke of Newcastle, after a careful examination, is prepared, for the purpose of the present negotiation, to assume that the Canadian claim is groundless. And he therefore authorises me to renew the proposals contained in the body of my letter of the 11th, subject to the following stipulation: that in case it should be found advisable to cede or annex to Canada any territory lying eastward of a line passing through Lake Winnipeg, and from thence to and through the Lake of the Woods, Her Majesty's Government should be at liberty to exempt the annexed territory from all payment to the Hudson's Bay Company, which payments would thenceforth be exclusively leviable (without any deduction from their amount) on the territories acquired by the Crown to the west of the above line of demarcation. His Grace hopes that this suggestion will remove the difficulty by which the Hudson's Bay Company at present conceive themselves to be embarrassed.

His Grace did not direct me to offer any observation on your proposal for the construction of a road and telegraph, because he had already commenced negotiations on that subject with gentlemen representing the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph and Transit Company, whose project he had recommended to the favourable consideration of the Colonies concerned. He is now informed, that this company has transferred its rights and responsibilities to the Hudson's Bay Company. That transfer his Grace is most willing to recognise, if it is recognised by the Colonies concerned. And he is further willing, that on the completion of the road and telegraph, from the frontier of Canada to that of British Columbia, lands adjacent to the line shall be granted to the company, at the rate of one square mile for every lineal mile of road and telegraph constructed on Crown land between the line of demarcation, above described, and the frontier of British Columbia.

The form and exact situation of these grants should, in his Grace's opinion, be left for future discussion, the principle being, that a strip of land, two miles in width, along the line of road and telegraph, is to be divided equally between the Government and the Company. But, in other respects, the grants will be subject to the conditions expressed in the 3rd article of a Memorandum, enclosed in a letter addressed to the Duke of Newcastle by Mr. Watkin, on the 28th April 1863,* and in Mr. Fortescue's answer of 1st of May, and must be understood to stand in lieu of the grants contemplated by that article.

I enclose a Parliamentary Paper, in which Mr. Watkin's letter is printed, with the correspondence relating to it.

Copy of a LETTER from the Right Honourable Sir E. Head, Bart., K.C.B., to C. Fortescue, Esq., M.P.

Hudson's Bay House, London,

Sir, 13 April 1864.

Above. I have had the honour of receiving your letter of 5th April,* which has been laid before the committee of the Hudson's Bay Company, and considered by them at a special meeting summoned for that purpose.

After the explanation given with reference to the postscript of your letter of the 11th ultimo, the Committee feel that they are in a position to renew the negotiation, with every hope of coming to a satisfactory conclusion. They think this, because they trust it will be found that their demands, on the part of the Company, differ in degree, rather than in principle, from the offers made by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle.

2. The

2. The Committee do not object to the proposal that a payment of 1*s.* per acre for all lands sold should be made to the Company, in proportion as the money is received by the Government; nor do they object to the term of 50 years as the limit of time, after which such payment should cease. They think, however, that if a limit of time is fixed, there ought to be no limit of amount, inasmuch as the Government pay nothing beforehand, and will be called on to hand over the money only on the supposition that they receive a larger sum themselves. If the lands sell freely the receipts of the Government will be increased, and the Committee do not see why the share of the Company should not in justice increase in proportion.

If, however, any limit in the amount of the payments to be made to the Company by this and the next article is absolutely required, the Committee would be willing to agree that the produce of the two together; that is, of the 1*s.* an acre for land, and the per-centage on the gold, should not, in the aggregate, exceed 1,000,000*l.*

It is necessary to make one observation with reference to the payments on account of land. According to the letter of the proposal, it would be open to the Colonial Government to defeat the claim of the Company altogether by adopting a system of free grants; and it must therefore be understood, if this is done on any ground of policy, the payment to the Company should be made notwithstanding.

3. With regard to the per-centage on the proceeds of gold, the Committee are willing to accept the proportion of one-fourth, as stated in your letter, it being clearly understood that they are not called on to defray any portion of the expense of collection or escort. Here again, however, it appears to the committee, whilst they are willing to admit the limit of time, that the limit in amount, looking to the contingent nature of the payment, ought to be withdrawn.

At any rate, they could consent to it on the terms already stated in Article 2; that is to say, if the possible limit were extended to 1,000,000*l.* for both lands and gold conjointly.

4. If, in exchange for the rights to be ceded by the Hudson's Bay Company, the Government were about to pay an adequate money consideration not contingent in its character, there would be, of course, no reason why the sellers should expect to retain any large portion of the soil, or to reserve to themselves the chance of future benefit from the future prosperity of the Colony. But the offers now made are of a totally different character. No profit will accrue to the Company unless the Government itself makes a higher one; and the committee, as trustees for the proprietors, feel it to be absolutely necessary to stipulate for certain additional reservations in land, which I will proceed to specify. I may add, too, that such a reservation would appear to be politic in the interest of the Colony itself. For many years to come the Company must be closely connected in trade with the territory which they propose to relinquish; and it appears important, on every account, that they should retain what may be called "a share in the stake"; that they should feel their own interest on landowners, as well as merchants, wrapped up with those of the Colony, and should have every inducement to contribute, by their influence and proceedings, to its future well-being and tranquillity. There is nothing, perhaps, in which the Company could exert this influence more beneficially than in discouraging the use of spirits in the trade with the natives; and it would be their interest and their wish to second every effort of the Colonial Government in this direction.

The Committee therefore ask—

(a). That the Company should retain as private property all their posts and stations on which buildings have been erected, with an area of not less than 6,000 acres round each such post; but they do not of course intend that this clause should apply to the Red River Settlement.

(b). That they should, in like manner, retain all lots set out and occupied by them.

(c). That whenever the Government of the Colony shall have sold or granted 50,000 acres, the Company should be entitled to a grant of 5,000 acres of wild land, to be selected by them.

The Committee have proposed this mode of reservation, because it appears to them to obviate the objection which may reasonably be made to setting apart beforehand a number of isolated tracts of wild land, dotted over the surface of the Colony, and calculated to impede the free flow of settlement in the territory. In this manner the grants to the Company will only proceed equally with the progress of colonisation; and the demand will hardly seem extravagant when it is considered that the total number of acres to be at once handed over cannot be estimated at less than 200,000,000.

5. The Committee think it necessary to provide that the Colonial Government shall not at any time tax the lands or property of the Company, in any way, or on any scale, different from that on which the lands or property of other proprietors are taxed.

6. The Committee assume that all charges of a public character which now fall on the Hudson's Bay Company shall, as a matter of course, be transferred to the Government of the Colony. As regards the salary of the Bishop of Rupert's Land, the Company, by the Governor and Deputy Governor, act jointly with others as trustees of what is called "The Leith Fund." For the discharge of these trusts, so far as that fund is concerned, they of course would remain answerable, but they think that they ought to be relieved of any obligations (over and above the proceeds of the fund) which they have taken on themselves as a matter of liberality and public policy. In an equitable arrangement of all these matters, without injury to the interest of the Church or of individuals, the Committee see no real difficulty.

Appendix.

7. The next point to be dealt with is the important question of the electric telegraph, and the opening a communication sufficient for the passage of the mails across the present territory of the Company from Canada to British Columbia.

The Committee are quite willing to accept the paper submitted by Mr. Watkin to his Grace the Duke of Newcastle as the basis of this arrangement, and are prepared to place themselves substantially in the position of the Atlantic and Pacific Transit and Telegraph Company, subject to the following alterations;—

The point at which the telegraph will probably begin on the eastern side of the territory, will be either Pembina or Rainy Lake, according as Canada may or may not adhere to the original terms proposed. If Canada should decline to fulfil what is laid down in the paper referred to, the Company will of course be compelled to make the best bargain they can with the lines traversing Minnesota, and passing through the United States; and they will have to forego the guarantee of interest originally held out from Canada. Rainy Lake is named, not as being the admitted frontier of the province, but simply as the conventional point eastward, assumed in your Despatch.

With regard to the third article in the paper referred to, the letter of its provisions is not wholly applicable to the altered state of things; but in accordance with your letter of the 5th instant, the Committee are willing to adopt its spirit as the basis of the arrangement to be made. They cannot however admit that one square mile for every lineal mile of telegraph would be an adequate allowance of wild land for such an undertaking. They believe it will be found that in all such enterprises through an unsettled country in America, the proportion of land granted to the contractors has been far larger, and they think that the claim in their case is strengthened, rather than weakened, by the fact that the land to be passed through is a very small portion of that which they themselves propose to cede for a consideration for a time, at least little more than nominal.

The Committee, on referring to the printed correspondence forwarded by you, find that Sir Frederic Rogers, in his letter of 28th August 1862 (p. 7), expressed the gratification of his Grace the Duke of Newcastle at the readiness of the Company to make a grant of land to the promoters of the proposed passenger and telegraphic communication; but they believe, on the best authority, that the most moderate demand ever made by Mr. Watkin, when then sent to the Company by his Grace, very far exceeded the breadth of five miles of wild land for every lineal mile of telegraph. Below this amount of wild land to be set out in alternate sections, as proposed in the 3rd article (p. 13) of Mr. Watkin's paper, the Committee could not reduce their demand.

8. Such, sir, are the conditions which the Committee feel bound to offer to Her Majesty's Government, after a full consideration of all the circumstances of the case. Even with these conditions they do not feel sure that they shall escape, on the part of their proprietors, the question, "What are we to obtain for this cession of our rights in so large a territory? Why are we (the Hudson's Bay Company) to purchase at so large a cost the exertion of the Queen's authority on British soil rendered necessary by no fault of ours"? Could we, under any circumstances, be worse off than we shall be in sacrificing, for a contingent consideration, this vast mass of property, and the chance of profit from its future development.

If we did not think that these questions admitted of a satisfactory answer, we should not, as trustees for the proprietors, convey to you the offers made in this letter. But it may be difficult to convince our shareholders that (as we believe) the real interests of the Company and of Her Majesty's Government will be equally promoted by their adoption in the form now suggested.

Sir, Downing-street, 6 June 1864.

I am directed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to inform you that he has had under his consideration your letter of the 13th of April last.

Mr. Cardwell will not be prepared to accept, without considerable modifications, the terms contained in it. But before sending to you, in answer, the terms to which he would be prepared to bind Her Majesty's Government, he feels that it will be necessary to consult the Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, and to ascertain more fully the views which may be entertained by the advisers of the Governor General of Canada.

In the meantime he does not understand that you are willing to undertake to complete a line of telegraph and road to the Pacific until you shall have received the assurances from Canada, British Columbia, and Vancouver Island, to which reference has been made in the former correspondence.

Copy of a LETTER from the Right Honourable Sir E. Head, Bart., K.C.B., to Sir F. Rogers, Bart.

Sir, Hudson's Bay House, London, 7 December 1864.

In my letter of 13th April 1864,* a definite proposal involving the cession of a certain portion of the Company's territory, and rights of property therein, was made by me (subject to the approval of the proprietors) on behalf of the committee of the Hudson's Bay Company. We cannot but feel that the long delay which has taken place in answering this proposal has been detrimental to the interests of the Company in more ways than one; but, looking to the reasons assigned by the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for such delay, in your letter of 5th April 1864, we have not hitherto felt at liberty to press for a final decision.

* Page 72.

The discussion which has now arisen respecting the union of the North American Provinces under one government, has made us think it may be expedient for us to submit to the Secretary of State another scheme for carrying out this transfer; not because we wish to alter or retract our previous offer, but simply as an alternative which we, on behalf of the Company, and subject to the approval of our proprietors, should be ready to accept.

The territory, with its mining rights, affected by such transfer, has been sufficiently defined in the former correspondence, but it may be roughly described as follows:—

On the west bounded by British Columbia.

On the north by the Northern Saskatchewan down to Lake Winnipeg.

On the east by a line from the mouth of the Saskatchewan to the point where the Winnipeg river enters that lake; and thence, by a parallel of latitude due east, until such parallel cuts Canadian territory by intersecting the watershed between the basin of the Lakes and the St. Lawrence on the one hand, and that of Hudson's Bay on the other.

On the south by the United States boundary, or by any outlying portion of British territory not included in this Company's lands.

The conditions on which we would recommend the proprietors to cede this territory, and all mining rights and rights of property or Government within it, are the following:—

1. That the Company be paid 1,000,000 l. sterling.

2. That the Government of British North America acknowledge the Company's right to trade, without exclusive privileges of any kind, within the territory.

3. That the Company should hold in fee simple all their posts now occupied, with a reasonable area round each post. All previous sales and bargains at Red River, made by them, shall be confirmed.

4. That the Government of British North America shall impose no exceptional taxes on the Company, its property, or its servants.

5. That the disputed matter of the Company's lands in Canada be settled by issuing grants on the footing formerly agreed upon between Mr. Vankoughnet and Mr. Hopkins.

6. That the Company shall be bound to hand over to the Government of British North America all the materials for the construction of the telegraph, on payment of the cost-price and expenses already incurred.

You will understand, sir, that the proposal contained in this letter is not to be construed as any withdrawal or modification of that previously made, but that it is laid before the Secretary of State simply as a possible alternative.

The committee are of opinion that in the event of the transfer of the territory to any Colonial Government, such transfer ought to be effected, and the conditions stipulated, with the Company, ought to be embodied in an English Act of Parliament.

Before closing this letter it is right that I should state, for the information of the Right Honourable the Secretary of State, that Dr. Rae has returned to England, having traversed the whole district, from Red River over the pass leading to Tête Janne Câche, and thence down the Fraser to New Westminster. Every assistance was given him in British Columbia, and he reports that it is perfectly easy to construct across this country a line of telegraph, as well as a road sufficient for the carriage of the mails. Telegraphic wire and insulators in sufficient quantities are already at York Factory on the Mississippi, or on the voyage to Victoria, so that all the materials will be in the spring on the spots where they are required, and the Company will await with anxiety the decision of Her Majesty's Government as to the offers now in the hands of the Secretary of State.

COPY of a LETTER from T. Frederick Elliot, Esq., to the Right Honourable Sir E. Head, Bart., K.C.B.

Sir, Downing-street, 23 January 1867.

AT a recent interview between Sir C. Lampson and yourself on the one side, and Lord Carnarvon on the other, respecting the position of the Hudson's Bay Company, some doubt appeared to exist respecting the exact state of the inchoate or intended negotiation for the transfer of certain of the rights claimed by the Company to Her Majesty's Government of the Province of Canada.

With the view of explaining the present position of the Canadian Government, I am directed by Lord Carnarvon to enclose extracts from a Minute of the Executive Council of Canada, dated the 22nd of June 1866, from which you will perceive, that while the question of confederation is pending the Canadian Government consider themselves incompetent to initiate negotiations, and bound to reserve them for the Confederate Government and Legislature.

It is, of course, for the Hudson's Bay Company to consider for themselves what course is most proper and conducive to their own interests. But it appears to Lord Carnarvon that any effective negotiation, being for the moment impossible, it is for the interest of both parties that the question should remain open for arrangement so soon as an authority exists capable of dealing with it on the part of the Colony or Colonies interested. He would, therefore, regret to learn that the Company contemplated any immediate action which was calculated to embarrass the negotiations which would then become possible, and which, in the opinion of the Executive Council, it would be the duty of the Confederate Government to open.

EXTRACT of a REPORT of a Committee of the Honourable the Executive Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the 22nd day of June 1866.

* * * * *

"Impressed with this conviction Canada would, ere this, have opened negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company for the extinction of their claims, had it not been for the prospect of her speedy absorption in the proposed union of the British North American Colonies, it would obviously have been improper for the Canadian Government to commence negotiations which they could not hope to complete, or to enter into engagements, the fulfilment of which must fall on the whole Confederated provinces.

* * * * *

"Recent events serve to show that in a few months that union will be effected, and the Committee will have no doubt that the Confederate Government and Legislature will feel it to be one of their first duties to open negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company for the transfer of their claims to the Territory. Meanwhile Canada invites the aid of Her Majesty's Government in discountenancing and preventing any such sales of any portion of the Territory as is now applied for."

STATEMENT AND ACCOUNT

OF

PROCEEDINGS UNDER THE CANADA RAILWAY LOAN ACT.

Treasury Chambers,
19 July 1869.

ACTON S. AYRTON.

— No. 1. —

Sir F. Rogers to the Secretary to the Treasury.

Sir, Downing-street, 5 February 1868.

I AM directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to transmit to you a copy of a Despatch from the Governor General of Canada, accompanied by an Act of the Canadian Legislature, passed for the purpose of carrying into effect the requirements of the Imperial Act of last year, entitled, "The Canadian Railway Loan Act, 1867."

No. 7.
7 Jan. 1868.
Cap. xiii.

Their Lordships' attention will probably be drawn to the 32nd section, which provides for the raising of a supplemental loan of 1,000,000 l. without Imperial guarantee, if such additional expenditure should be necessary for the completion of the works.

His Grace has no data before him, further than were supplied at the time of the introduction of the Imperial Act, on which to found an estimate of the probable sum required to ensure the completion of the railway, but he desires me to state that he entertains considerable doubt whether the additional sum contemplated by the present Act will be sufficient for the purpose.

The 7th article of section 3 of the Imperial Act was especially inserted to meet the uncertainty of estimate, and as it is impossible to say that lines may not be selected which would inevitably exhaust the additional sum of 1,000,000 l., his Grace thinks that as a security for the completion of the railway, the extra loan to be raised by Canada should not be fixed at a lower amount than 2,000,000 l.

I am, &c.
(signed) Frederic Rogers.

The Secretary to the Treasury.

Enclosures in No. 1.

(No. 7.)

Lord Monck to the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

Government House, Ottawa, Canada,
7 January 1868.

My Lord Duke,

I HAVE the honour to transmit three copies of a Report to me from the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, on the Act passed in the present Session of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, for the purpose of carrying into effect the requirements of the Imperial Statute, intituled, "The Canada Railway Loan Act, 1867."

2.

I also transmit three copies of the Provincial Act referred to.

3.

Your Grace will observe that the object of the Canadian Government is to obtain as soon as possible the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, as to whether the Act passed by the Canadian Parliament fulfils the requirements of the Imperial Statute, in order that that no unnecessary delay may occur in commencing the construction of the Intercolonial railway.

I shall feel much obliged if your Grace will inform me as soon as convenient, whether, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, this Act is a satisfactory fulfilment of the conditions imposed as the basis for granting the Imperial guarantee by the "Canada Railway Loan Act, 1867."

I have, &c.
(signed) Monck.

His Grace
The Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,
&c. &c. &c.

The Minister of Justice to Lord Monck.

THE undersigned has the honour to submit for your Excellency's consideration, the expediency of transmitting at an early day to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, a copy of the Act of the Canadian Parliament, authorising the construction of the Intercolonial railway, which was passed on the 21st December last, and an official copy of which I beg leave to send you herewith.

This Act has been framed with the view of fulfilling the requirements of the Imperial Act, known as "The Canada Railway Loan Act, 1867." It provides for the construction of the railway, and appropriates four millions sterling for the purpose, and by the 26th clause it provides for the use of the railway, at all times, for Her Majesty's military and other service.

It will be observed also that the conditions of the 3rd section of the Railway Loan Act are fulfilled by the 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, 31st, 32nd, 33rd, and 34th clauses of the Canadian Statute.

As it is of great consequence that this work should be proceeded with without delay, it is important that the approval of Her Majesty's Government should be obtained with all convenient speed.

The Canadian Parliament will re-assemble on the 12th March, and it is exceedingly desirable that it should be informed that the Act in question has been approved of, or that some further legislation is necessary.

The undersigned assumes that the measure will be considered satisfactory, and in such case the only thing remaining to be done before the granting of the guarantee and the commencement of the work, is to obtain the approval of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to the line in which the railway is to be constructed.

The Canadian Government expect to be able to transmit for the consideration of his Grace the Secretary of State for the Colonies, before the work can be commenced in the spring, a report of their decision as to the plan of the line of railway, together with the estimates of the cost of construction, which it is hoped will meet with his approbation.

The undersigned trusts, however, that his Grace will not wait the reception of such report before obtaining the decision of Her Majesty's Government, whether the Canadian Act is in other respects satisfactory.

Ottawa, 6 January 1868. (signed) John A. Macdonald.

ANNO TRICESIMO-PRIMO VICTORIÆ REGINÆ.

CAP. XIII.

AN ACT respecting the construction of "THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY."

Assented to 21 December 1867.

Preamble.

WHEREAS the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick joined in a declaration that the construction of the Intercolonial Railway is essential to the consolidation of the Union of British North America, and to the assent thereto of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick; and consequently agreed that provision should be made for its immediate construction by the Government of the Dominion of Canada; and whereas, in order to give effect to that agreement, it was declared by the 145th section of the Imperial Act, known as "The British North America Act, 1867," that it should be the duty of the Government and Parliament of Canada to provide for the commencement, within six months after the Union, of a railway connecting the River St. Lawrence with the city of Halifax in Nova Scotia, and for the construction thereof without intermission, and the completion thereof with all practicable speed; and whereas the Imperial Act known as "The Canada Railway Loan Act, 1867," authorises the guarantee by the Imperial Government of the interest on a loan to be raised by Canada towards the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, connecting the Port of Rivière du Loup, in the province of Quebec, with the line of railway leading from the city of Halifax, in the province province of Nova Scotia, at or near the town of Truro, on certain conditions therein mentioned: Therefore, in fulfilment of the duty imposed on the Government and Parliament of Canada as aforesaid; and in order to the raising of the said loan, so to be guaranteed as aforesaid, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

Termini of Railway.

1. There shall be a railway constructed, connecting the port of Rivière du Loup before mentioned, with the line of railway leading from the said city of Halifax, at or near the said town of Truro, and such railway shall be styled and known as "The Intercolonial Railway."

Its name.

To be a public work.

2. The said railway shall be a public work belonging to the Dominion of Canada; and shall be made with a gauge of 5 feet 6 inches, and on such grades, in such places, in such manner, with such materials and on such specifications as the Governor in Council shall determine and appoint as best adapted to the general interests of the dominion.

How constructed and managed.

3. The construction of the railway and its management until completed shall be under the charge of four Commissioners, to be appointed by the Governor, who shall hold office during pleasure.

Appointment of chief engineer.

4. The Governor shall and may appoint a chief engineer, to hold office during pleasure, who, under the instructions he may receive from the Commissioners, shall have the general superintendence of the works to be constructed under this Act.

Appointment of other officers, &c.

5. The Commissioners shall and may appoint and employ a secretary, such engineers (under the chief engineer), and such surveyors and other officers, and also such agents, servants and workmen, as in their discretion they may deem necessary and proper for the execution of the powers and duties vested in the said Commissioners by virtue of this Act.

Powers of Commissioners.

6. The Commissioners shall have full power and authority by themselves, their engineers, agents, workmen, servants, contractors and the servants and workmen of such contractors:—

To explore.

1. To explore and survey the country lying between Rivière du Loup and Truro;

To enter on lands.

2. And for that purpose to enter into and upon any public lands or the lands of any corporation or person whatsoever;

To fix the site of road.

3. To make surveys, examinations or other arrangements on such lands necessary for fixing the site of the railway, and to set out and ascertain such parts of the lands as shall be necessary and proper for the railway;

To fell timber.

4. And to fell or remove any trees standing in any woods, lands or forests where the railway shall pass, to the distance of four rods from either side thereof.

To take possession of lands.

7. The Commissioners are further authorised to enter upon and take possession of any lands required for the purposes of the railway, and they shall lay off the same by metes and bounds, and deposit of record a description and plan thereof in the office for the registry of deeds for the county or registration division in which the lands are situate, and such deposit shall operate as a dedication to the public of such lands, which shall be thereupon vested in the Crown.

May use adjacent lands.

8. The Commissioners or contractors may enter with workmen, carts, carriages, and horses, upon any lands, and deposit thereon soil, earth, gravel, trees, bushes, logs, poles, brushwood or other material found on the line of railway or works connected therewith, or for the purpose of digging up, quarrying and carrying away earth, stones, gravel, or other material, and cutting down and carrying away trees, bushes, logs, poles and brushwood therefrom for the making and preparing of such railway.

May make all necessary works.

9. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners to make or construct in, upon, across, under or over any land, streets, hills, valleys, roads, railways or tramroads, canals, rivers, brooks, streams, lakes or other waters, such temporary or permanent inclined planes, embankments, cuttings, aqueducts, bridges, roads, ways, passages, conduits, drains, piers, arches or other works as they may think proper.

May alter the courses of rivers.

10. They may alter the course of any river, canal, brook, stream or watercourse, and may divert or alter as well temporarily as permanently the course of any such rivers, streams of water, roads, streets or ways, or raise or sink the level of the same, in order to carry them over or under, on the level of, or by the side of, the railway, as they may think proper.

May drain into adjacent lands.

11. They shall have power to make conduits or drains into, through or under any lands adjoining the railway, for the purpose of conveying water from or to the railway.

And enjoy powers conferred by any General Railway Act.

12. The Commissioners shall have all such other powers (not inconsistent with this Act) as may be conferred upon railway companies by any Act which may be passed for the consolidation and regulation of the general clauses relating to railways.

Powers of Commissioners with respect to purchase of lands.

13. The Commissioners may contract and agree with all persons, corporations, guardians, tutors, curators and trustees whatsoever, not only for themselves, their heirs, successors cessors and assigns, but also for and on the behalf of those whom they represent, whether infants, absentees, lunatics, married women, or other persons otherwise incapable of contracting, for the purchase of any land or other property necessary for the construction, maintenance and use of the railway, at such prices as may be agreed upon; and may also contract and agree with all such persons and corporations on the amount of compensation to be paid for any damages sustained by them by reason of anything done under and by authority of this Act.

In case of difference as to value of lands.

14. Whenever the Commissioners and any such party or corporation fail to agree as to such value or compensation as aforesaid, the claim for the same shall, on the request of the claimant, be referred to the award of the official arbitrators to be appointed according to the provisions of any Act that may be passed respecting the public works of Canada, and the same proceedings shall be had before the said arbitrators as if the claim were one made under that Act.

Arbitrators to consider increased value given to property.

15. The arbitrators in deciding on such value or compensation are authorised and required to take into consideration the increased value that would be given to any lands or grounds through or over which the railway will pass, by reason of the passage of the railway through or over the same, and to set off the increased value that will attach to the said lands or grounds against the inconvenience, loss or damage that might be suffered or sustained by reason of Commissioners taking possession or using the said lands or grounds as aforesaid.

Duties of Commissioners with respect to tenders and contracts.

16. The Commissioners shall build such railway by tender and contract after the plans and specifications therefor shall have been duly advertised, and they shall accept the tenders of such contractors as shall appear to them to be possessed of sufficient skill, experience and resources, to carry on the work or such portions thereof as they may contract for; provided always that the Commissioners shall not be obliged to accept the lowest tender, in case they should deem it for the public interest not to do so; provided also that no contract under this section involving an expense of ten thousand dollars or upwards shall be concluded by the Commissioners until sanctioned by the Governor in Council.

Securities for fulfilment of contract.

17. The contracts to be so entered into shall be guarded by such securities, and contain such provisions for retaining a proportion of the contract monies, to be held as a reserve fund, for such periods of time, and on such conditions, as may appear to be necessary for the protection of the public, and for securing the due performance of the contract.

Chief engineer to certify to work done before payment.

18. No money shall be paid to any contractor until the chief engineer shall have certified that the work, for or on account of which the same shall be claimed, has been duly executed, nor until such certificate shall have been approved of by the Commissioners.

Disqualification of Members of Parliament as officers or contractors.

19. No Member of Parliament shall hold, or be appointed to any office of emolument under the Commissioners, or be a contractor or party to any contract with the Commissioners for the construction of the railway or any part thereof.

Inspection of contracts, &c. by Governor.

20. The Governor, or any person or persons appointed by him, shall have power to inspect all contracts and proceedings of the Commissioners, and to examine their accounts at all times.

Salaries.

21. The Governor in Council shall, in the first instance, fix the rate of salary or compensation for the Commissioners and the chief engineer, and shall approve of all other salaries to be awarded by the Commissioners, subject in all cases to the revision and confirmation of Parliament at its first Session thereafter.

Suspension of works.

22. The Governor in Council shall have the power, at any time, to suspend the progress of the work until the then next Session of Parliament.

Provision for meeting expenditure.

23. The Commissioners shall from time to time be paid, on their requisition by the Receiver General, all monies that may be required for the purposes of this Act, in such manner, at such times, and in such sums as may, from time to time, be ordered by the Governor in Council.

Quarterly accounts.

24. The Commissioners shall furnish quarterly accounts (or oftener, if required by the Governor in Council) to the Receiver General, of all expenditure and liabilities under this Act.

Working of completed portions.

25. Whenever the railway, or any portion thereof, shall be completed, it shall be lawful for the Governor in Council to make suitable arrangements for the working of the same; but such arrangements shall not be for any longer period than the end of the Session of Parliament next after the making of the same.

Carriage of naval and military forces.

26. The Secretary to the Treasury to the Under Secretary for the Colonies.

Sir, Treasury Chambers, 13 February 1868.

I AM directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to state, for the information of the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, that my Lords approve generally of the Act of the Canadian Legislature, 31 Vict. c. 13, for the construction

construction of the Intercolonial Railway, which was submitted in your letter of the 5th instant.

My Lords, however, concur with his Grace in opinion, that it would be desirable that the sum to be raised by the dominion without Imperial guarantee, should not be less than 2,000,000 l.; and they suggest that before approval of the Act is given, a communication to that effect should be made to the Governor General.

I am &c.

The Under Secretary for the Colonies, (signed) George Ward Hunt.

— No. 3. —

The Under Secretary for the Colonies to the Secretary to the Treasury.

Sir, Downing street, 16 May 1868.

I AM directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to refer to the letter from this Department, dated the 5th of February last, and to your answer of the 13th of February, relative to the Act of the Canadian Legislature, 31 Vict. c. 13, respecting the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. In addition to the sum of 3,000,000 l. sterling, for which a guarantee loan is proposed to be raised in England, that Act provides for raising, if necessary, an additional million without guarantee, in order to complete the railway.

Their Lordships agreed with the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos that the provision of this additional amount was less than it might be prudent to require, especially in the uncertainty what line might be selected.

But his Grace has since understood it to be probable that the route by the Bay of Chaleur will be selected, which is the one that would best suit Imperial purposes

Major Robinson, of the Royal Engineers, made a report in 1848 for the Imperial Government, in which he estimated the length of the entire road from Halifax to Quebec at 635 miles, and the cost, including 10 per cent. for contingencies, at 4,889,500 l. This gives a cost of 7,700 l. per mile. The road has since been constructed from Halifax to Truro, and from Quebec to Rivière du Loup, a distance taken in Major Robinson's estimate at 165 miles, so that, according to that estimate, 470 miles remain to be constructed. At the above rate per mile, this would cost 3,619,000 l., much less than the total sum of 4,000,000 l. sterling.

Mr. Sandford Fleming was a civil engineer, appointed in 1863, with the joint opinions in his favour of the three Provincial Governments, and of the Duke of Newcastle, who was then Secretary of State. He bears a high reputation for accuracy and caution. Mr. Fleming thought that, allowing for curvature, the distance might exceed Major Robinson's estimate, and he expressed a general opinion that, although the actual result might prove more favourable, the total cost should be taken in round numbers at twenty million (20,000,000) dollars.

But then Mr. Fleming caused a thorough survey to be made of a portion of the line, 70 miles in length, described by Major Robinson as the "most formidable" part of the whole, and the result confirmed Major Robinson's account of the distance, whilst the cost was estimated by Mr. Fleming at $ 39,786, or about 8,290 l. per mile. If this rate of cost, calculated on one of the most difficult portions of the line, be extended to the whole, the required distance of 470 miles would not cost more than 3,896,300 l.

Reviewing the circumstances, the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos would be prepared, if the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury concur, to instruct the Governor General that in case the line by the Bay of Chaleur be adopted, Her Majesty's Government will be willing to accept the provision of 1,000,000 l. sterling made in the Act already passed by the Canadian Parliament.

I am, &c.

The Secretary to the Treasury. (signed) C. B. Adderley.

Mr. G. A. Hamilton to the Under Secretary for the Colonies.

Sir, Treasury Chambers, 22 May 1868.

The Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury have had before them your letter of the 16th instant, stating that the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos has had under his consideration the estimates for the Canadian Intercolonial Railway; and that upon a review of the circumstances, his Grace is disposed to consider that, if the route by the Bay of Chaleur is adopted, the provision of 1,000,000 l. already made in the Act passed by the Canadian Legislature, will be sufficient, in addition to the 3,000,000 l. guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government, and requesting the concurrence of my Lords in this view.

My Lords request that you will inform his Grace that, under the circumstances represented, they are not prepared to refuse their assent to the proposal of the Secretary of State.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith certain documents on the subject of the proposed loan for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, to be guaranteed by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, under the authority of "The Canada Railway Loan Act, 1867."

The terms of the Act of the Canadian Parliament, as well as the proposed line of railway, having been approved by Her Majesty's Government, it now only remains for the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to convey their sanction to the conditions of the loan, as detailed in Enclosures A. and B., and to approve of the form in which it is suggested the guarantee of Her Majesty's Government may be evidenced.

I have prepared, for facility of reference, a brief statement (Enclosure, No. 1) of the several Acts of Parliament, and of the communications which have taken place on this subject, to which I would very respectfully call your attention.

I shall be happy to give any further information which may be desired, and, as my public duties require my return to Canada as speedily as possible, I trust I may be pardoned if I express the hope that I may be favoured with an early communication of the views of Her Majesty's Government on the subject of the enclosed.

Enclosure in No. 6.

(No. 1.)

CANADA INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY LOAN.

30 & 31 Vict. c. 16.

THE Canada Railway Loan Act authorised the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to guarantee, in such manner and form as they think fit, payment of interest not exceeding four per cent. on any principal sum not exceeding three millions sterling, to be raised by the Government of Canada for the purpose of constructing the Intercolonial Railway, on condition that Canada should pass an Act providing—

1st. For the construction of the railway; for its use by Her Majesty's troops; and provided the line should be approved of by a Secretary of State.

2nd. That the Canadian Act should provide, to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of the Treasury, for the raising and expenditure by Canada of the three millions on the railway; for creating a sinking fund, and for making the loan and the sinking fund charges on the revenue of Canada; for the appointment of trustees to manage the sinking fund; and lastly, for raising, on the sole credit of Canada, such further sum beyond the three millions as might be necessary to complete the line.

31 Vict. c. 13.

The Canada Act has complied with all these conditions, and authorised the raising of one million sterling beyond the three millions guaranteed by the Imperial Government, and has been approved of by Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Despatch, July 1868.

The line has also been approved of by the Colonial Secretary, and Thomas Baring, Esq., and George Carr Glyn, Esq., have been named trustees by Canada for the management of the sinking fund.

The Canada Act provides that the work shall be performed and the money expended by a commission, named by the Canadian Government, and it is intended that operations shall be prosecuted by them as rapidly as possible.

Canada

Canada now proposes to put a portion of the loan on the market, and, after consultation with Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., and Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., the financial agents of the dominion in London, the terms specified in the annexed paper are suggested as those on which it should be offered to the public. Prospectus (A).

It will be perceived that it is proposed that the bonds for that portion of the loan which is guaranteed by the Imperial Government should, when issued, be countersigned on the part of Her Majesty's Government in the same form as was adopted in 1855, in the case of the Turkish Loan guaranteed by Her Majesty and the Emperor of the French.

The approbation of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury is necessary before preparing the form of bond to be issued by the Government of Canada, which is also annexed, as well as to the proposed terms of the loan and the form in which the guarantee is to be evidenced; and it will be requisite that the financial agents of the dominion, or the Minister of Finance, should receive the Commissioners' authority to grant the interim receipts embodying the undertaking for the countersignature on the part of Her Majesty's Government to the bonds when issued. Paper (B).

Mr. T. F. Elliot to Mr. G. A. Hamilton.

Sir, Downing-street, 10 July 1868.

I am directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to refer to Mr. Adderley's letter of the 16th of May last, on the Canadian Intercolonial Railway, and to your answer of the 22nd of May, in which it was agreed that if the Bay of Chaleur route be adopted, the provision of 1,000,000 l. sterling already made under the Act passed by the colonial legislature, may be accepted in addition to the sum of 3,000,000 l. sterling guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government.

The Duke of Buckingham and Chandos has now received a telegraphic message from the Governor General of Canada, announcing that the Bay of Chaleur line has been adopted by the Canadian Government. This is understood to be the short expression for the line surveyed on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and reported on by Major Robinson, R.E., in 1848. I am desired to acquaint you that his Grace will be prepared to approve of that line, as soon as he receives Lord Monck's Despatch conveying the decision.

1 July 1868.

I am directed to enclose an extract of a letter from Mr. John Rose, Canadian Minister of Finance, who is now in England, urging the importance of taking steps for raising the loan at as early a date as possible; and I am desired to suggest that Mr. Rose should be enabled to enter into direct communication with the Treasury in order to arrange those matters connected with the line, on which the authority or assistance of their Lordships is required.

I am, &c.

Enclosure in No. 7.

EXTRACT of a LETTER from Mr. Rose to the Duke of Buckingham, dated London, 1st July 1868.

"YOUR Grace is now aware of the result of the deliberations of the Canadian Government on this question, and it being important that the necessary financial arrangements should be made for the prosecution of the work with as little delay as possible, I have the honour to beg that the approval of the line may be given by your Grace as contemplated by the Imperial Act, and that the sum of money provided by the Government of Canada in excess of the 3,000,000 l. to be raised on the Imperial guarantee, may be held sufficient for the construction of the railway."

"I have further the honour to inform your Grace that Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P., and George Carr Glyn, Esq., M.P., have been named trustees by the Government of Canada under the 3rd Section of the Act, for the management of the sinking fund."

"On consultation with the financial agents of the dominion in London, it is thought to be extremely desirable that advantage should be taken of the present low rate of interest to place the loan, or such portion of it as the Government of Canada may think requisite, on the market at as early a day as possible, and I have accordingly to solicit the sanction of Her Majesty's Government to that proceeding."

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

My Lords, Downing-street, 14 July 1868.

WITH reference to the letter from this Department, dated the 16th of May, and in pursuance of the second clause of the Imperial Act of Parliament, styled "The Canada Railway Loan Act, 1867," I have the honour, as one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, to convey to you my approval of the selection as the line in which the railway is to be constructed of the line passing by the Bay of Chaleur, explored by Major Robinson of the Royal Engineers, and recommended in his Report dated the 31st of August 1848, presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty in February 1849, the line so approved by me to be subject to such moderate deviations and modifications as may prove to be necessary or desirable in the progress of the undertaking. I append to this Despatch a copy of the Parliamentary paper containing Major Robinson's Report, authenticated by my initials, and containing a map which is also authenticated by my initials, showing the direction of the proposed line.

— No. 9. —

Copy of TREASURY MINUTE, dated 15th July 1868.

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer lays before the Board a letter, dated 11th July 1868, which he has received from Mr. John Rose, the Canadian Minister of Finance, in which he submits a statement of the terms and conditions, under which it is proposed by the Canadian Government to raise the loan for the sum of 3,000,000 l. for the construction of a railway connecting Quebec and Halifax, interest on which amount at the rate of 4 per cent. was guaranteed by the Act, 30 Vict. c. 16, together with a form of bond by which the guarantee of Her Majesty's Government may be carried into effect.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer states that in consequence of this communication an interview took place between himself and Mr. Rose, who was accompanied by Mr. T. Baring, M.P., and Mr. G. Glyn, M.P., the agents of the Canadian Government, in the presence of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Financial Secretary to the Board, and Sir A. Spearman, and that, after full consideration, it appears to him that the terms proposed for the several loans of 3,000,000 l. and 1,000,000 l., to be raised under the provisions of the before-mentioned Act, are unobjectionable; and he, therefore, recommends to the Board that their guarantee should be given for the payment of interest, at the rate of 4 per cent. on the sum of 3,000,000 l., in accordance with the form of bond or debenture, annexed to Mr. Rose's communication.

My Lords have before them the Act 30 Vict. c. 16. My Lords have also before them the following letters from the Colonial Office, viz.:—

5th February 1868, enclosing an Act of the Canadian Legislature (31 Vict. c. 13) respecting the construction of "The Intercolonial Railway," by which provision is made for carrying out the provisions contained in the 2nd and 3rd sections of the before-mentioned Act, 30 Vict. c. 16.

16th May 1868, stating that the Secretary of State is of opinion that in case the line of railway by the Bay of Chaleur is adopted, Her Majesty's Government should accept the provision made by the Canadian Act, 31 Vict. c. 13, of the sum of 1,000,000 l., in addition to the sum of 3,000,000 l., as sufficient for the purpose; and of 14th instant, conveying the approval of the Secretary of State of the selection, as the line in which the railway is to be constructed, of the line passing by the Bay of Chaleur, recommended by Major Robinson, R.E., in his Report of 31st August 1848.

My Lords have also before them the letter from the Colonial Office, of 1st instant, enclosing copy of a Despatch from the Governor General, reporting the appointment by the Canadian Government of Messrs. Baring and Glyn as trustees for the sinking fund of the loan of 3,000,000 l., under the provisions of the Act, 30 Vict. c. 16.

My Lords concur in the recommendation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and desire that a letter be addressed to the Honourable John Rose, stating that they have no objection to offer to the terms (as per enclosed statement No. 1) on which it is proposed by the Governor of Canada to raise the sum of 3,000,000 l., under the provisions of the Act 30 Vict. c. 16, and that they are prepared to guarantee the payment of interest at the rate of 4 per cent. on the said sum of 3,000,000 l., in accordance with the terms of the enclosed bond or debenture.

State that my Lords have appointed the Permanent Secretary to the Board, Mr. G. A. Hamilton, to carry into effect the guarantee on behalf of the Board, and that each bond or debenture should be submitted to this Department in order that his signature may be attached thereto.

Prepare warrant accordingly, appointing Mr. Hamilton.

Acquaint Colonial Office, and state that my Lords propose to appoint Sir F. Rogers, the Permanent Secretary to the Colonial Office, and Mr. William Law the Auditor of the Civil List in this office, as trustees to the Sinking Fund on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

— No. 10. —

COPY of Treasury Warrant, dated 20th July 1868, authorising Mr. Hamilton to sign Canada Intercolonial Railway Loan Bonds; and appointing Sir F. Rogers and Mr. Law Trustees of Sinking Fund.

After our hearty commendations:

WHEREAS, by an Act passed in the 30th year of Her Majesty's reign, entitled "The Canada Railway Loan Act, 1867," it was enacted, That the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may guarantee, in such manner and form as they think fit, payment of interest at the rate not exceeding 4 per cent. per annum, on any principal money not exceeding the sum of 3,000,000 l., to be raised by way of loan by the Government of Canada, for the purpose of the construction of a railway connecting Quebec and Halifax; and the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may from time to time cause to be issued out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, or the growing produce thereof, any money required for giving effect to such guarantee.

And whereas an Act of the Parliament of Canada has been passed providing for the construction of the said railway, for the raising, appropriation, and expenditure of the said loan of 3,000,000 l., for chargng the Consolidated Revenu e Fund

Fund of Canada with the principal and interest of the said loan, for the payment by way of Sinking Fund of an annual sum, at the rate of 1 per cent. per annum on the entire amount of principal money whereon interest is guaranteed, and for charging the same on the said Consolidated Revenue Fund, and in all other respects providing for the conditions prescribed by the Imperial Act abovementioned.

And whereas the line in which the railway is to be constructed has been approved by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies;

Now, we, being two of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, do authorise and empower George Alexander Hamilton, Esq., the Permanent Secretary to this Board, for us and in our name to guarantee the due payment of the interest of 4 per cent. on the said loan so contracted as aforesaid, and generally to do all acts, matters, and things, necessary for effecting such guarantee as aforesaid; so, nevertheless, that all such acts, matters, and things, shall be in all respects conformable with the provisions of the aforesaid Act.

And we do further appoint Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart., Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, and William Law, Esq., Auditor of the Civil List and Assistant to the Secretaries to this Board, to be Trustees of the Sinking Fund of the said loan, in accordance with the provisions of the aforesaid Act.

Sir, London, 16 July 1868.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 15th instant, informing me, by direction of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, that their Lordships have no objection to offer to the proposed mode of raising the loan for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, and that they are prepared to guarantee interest on the sum of 3,000,000 l. sterling in the manner stated in your letter, and that Mr. G. A. Hamilton, the Permanent Secretary of the Board, has been appointed to sign the bonds when forwarded to the department.

Permit me, in reply, to express my grateful acknowledgments, both on my own part and on behalf of the Government of Canada, for the great courtesy and promptitude which the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Lords Commissioners so kindly evinced in the course of their recent negociations, and for their readiness to meet the wishes of the Government of Canada.

The bonds will be forwarded, in accordance with your instructions, to the Secretary of the Treasury as soon as they are received from Canada, through Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., and Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., the financial agents of the dominion in England, and will be countersigned by one or other of those firms in evidence of their genuineness.

THE Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury have had before them your letter of the 13th instant, enclosing copy of a letter from Messrs. (Intercolonial.)

My Lord Duke, London, June 1868.

YOUR Grace will already have been apprised that the Government of Canada have had under consideration the question of determining the line of railway between Rivière du Loup and Truro, to be submitted for the approval of Her Majesty's Government, in accordance with the provisions of "The Canada Railway Loan Act, 1867."

Three lines presented themselves for discussion; the first, proceeding to and crossing over to the right or southern bank of the St. John River, at Woodstock, or Fredericton; thence continuing on the right bank of that river, by branch lines now in progress, to the town of St. John, by what is termed the Western Extension Railway; the second, in a more central direction through the Province of New Brunswick, connecting with the European and North American Road at some point between St. John and Shediac; and the third, the line surveyed by Major Robinson in the year 1848.

Your Grace is now aware of the result of the deliberation of the Canadian Government on this question, and it being important that the necessary financial arrangements should be made for the prosecution of the work with as little delay as possible, I have the honour very respectfully to beg that the approval of the line may be given by your Grace, as contemplated by the Imperial Act, and that the sum of money provided by the Government of Canada in excess of the three millions to be raised on the Imperial guarantee, may be held sufficient for the construction of the railway.

I have further the honour to inform your Grace, that Thomas Baring, Esquire, M. P., and George Carr Glyn, Esquire, M. P., have been named trustees by the Government of Canada, under the 3rd section of the Act for the management of the Sinking Fund.

On consultation with the financial agents of the Dominion in London, it is thought to be extremely desirable that advantage should be taken of the present low rate of interest, to place the loan, or a portion of it, on the market at as early a day as possible, and I have, accordingly, to solicit the sanction of Her Majesty's Government to that proceeding.

(Copy Memo.) INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

My Lord Duke,

ON the letter from the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick Intercolonial Railway Company, Limited, of the 9th inst., addressed to his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, I beg to say that the only arrangements now existing for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway are to be found in the Imperial Act, 30th Vict. c. 16, and in that of the Parliament of Canada, 31st Vict. c. 13.

The previous negotiations which had, for a number of years, taken place between the several Provinces now composing the Dominion of Canada are superseded by the provisions contained in these two Acts.

The Imperial Act left to the Dominion of Canada to adopt such agency as it saw fit for the prosecution of the work, provided the requisite money provision was made; and by the Act of the Canadian Parliament it is provided that the work shall be done directly by a Commission, and not through the interposition of a Company, and shall be a public work belonging to the Dominion.

It will be the duty of the Commission to locate the road on the line approved by the Imperial Government, and they are in no way whatever bound to assume any intermediate portion of road, or to adopt any contracts which either of the Provinces may have previously made in respect of such local sections. Indeed, they are prohibited, by the terms of the Act, from concluding any contract exceeding 10,000 dollars without the sanction of the Government in Canada. It is of the first importance that the whole, from Truro to River du Loup, should be done in the most economical manner, and that the Dominion should have the advantage which payments in cash to contractor, out of the money raised on the Imperial Guarantee and on the credit of the Dominion, afford. Provisions of former contracts may be altogether too onerous, the prices excessive, the location and character of the work may be bad, the specifications insufficient. It was never contemplated that the work itself, or the commission for its execution, should be trammelled by any arrangements anterior to the two Acts of Parliament above quoted. If any contracts or engagements have been entered into by either of the Provinces anterior to the Act of Union, they will be faithfully carried out by the Dominion, if by the provisions of the Union Act they are entailed upon it. But it would be contrary to the spirit and terms of the Intercolonial Acts, both Imperial and Canadian, to tie the hands of the Commissioners appointed to carry them into effect.

The assumption of any intermediate section of work, or the adoption of any contracts, must be matter of arrangement with the Commissioners.

In conclusion, I beg to call his Grace's attention to the fact that the negotiations referred to in the letter written by direction of his Grace the Duke of Newcastle to Mr. Watkin, under date of the 19th March 1864, were never completed; and as in that letter his Grace expressly states, "That no claim is to be made on the Imperial Government under the old project" is to be carried into execution, and if the offer of 1862-63 should fall to the ground, this assurance will fall with it.

It therefore follows (wholly irrespective of the entirely new Legislative provision made in 1867), that no possible claim can be based on the terms of that communication.

The Nova Scotia and New Brunswick (Intercolonial) Railway Company (Limited),
6, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, London, S.W.

My Lord Duke, 9 June 1868.

WE, the Directors of the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick (Intercolonial) Railways Company, Limited, respectfully beg to draw the attention of your Grace to the following facts:—

This Company was formed for the purpose of constructing, under concessions granted by the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick Governments, two of the most important sections of the Intercolonial Railway.

The

The section in New Brunswick, which extends from a junction with the European and North American Railway, near Moncton, in New Brunswick, to a point on the Nova Scotia boundary near Amherst, is about 36 miles in length, and is now in course of construction. The contract is in the hands of Messrs. Edwin Clark, Punchard, & Co., and the works are so far advanced that a portion of the line will be open for traffic in the Autumn of the present year.

The contract for the Nova Scotia section, 74 miles in length, from Amherst to Truro, where it joins the Nova Scotia State Line to Halifax, is also let to Messrs. Clark, Punchard, & Co., and heavy responsibilities, as well as considerable outlay, have already been incurred.

Both these lines were located by the respective Governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as part of the proposed Intercolonial Railway, and were to be covered by the Imperial Guarantee, as your Grace will perceive by reference to the Despatch of the late Duke of Newcastle to Mr. Watkin, M.P., dated 19th March 1864.

It was on this understanding, and on the personal assurance to that effect of the Delegates of the Nova Scotia Government, that these lines were undertaken, and the necessary capital raised for their construction.

We beg to submit these facts for the information of your Grace, in order that the rights which we possess, and the responsibility we have incurred, may be duly considered in any decision that may be taken by the Imperial Government with respect to the Intercolonial Railway.

We have, &c.

Chairman.

Secretary.

His Grace
The Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,
&c. &c.

The Under Secretary of State to Mr. Watkin.

(Copy.)

Sir, Downing-street, 19th March 1864.

THE Duke of Newcastle desires me to inform you that he has received from the Lords of the Treasury a copy of your letter of the 15th of February, contemplating the construction by New Brunswick and Nova Scotia of the first link of the Intercolonial Railway between Truro and the Bend, and suggesting that the line so constructed should be held to be part of the larger scheme contemplated in the laws recently passed by those two Provinces and by the memoranda of December 1862, and January 1864, recited in those laws.

I am directed by his Grace to inform you in reply, that if the Lower Provinces shall, at their own expense, commence the construction of a railway on a line approved by Her Majesty's Government between Truro and the Bend, and if subsequently the proposed loan of 3,000,000 l. shall be raised under the Imperial Guarantee in virtue of the offer contained in the above memoranda, the railway between Truro and the Bend, and the works constructed thereupon by the Lower Provinces, shall (as far as Her Majesty's Government is concerned) be considered to form part of the railway on which the loan of 3,000,000 l. is to be expended, and that his Grace sees no reason for requiring any change in that part of the memoranda which declares that 5-12ths of the loan shall be chargeable against Canada, 3½-12ths against Nova Scotia, and 3½-12ths against New Brunswick.

The further question, what part of that sum of 3,000,000 l. should be paid over to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia in consequence of the works effected by them without the concurrence of Canada, will be mainly a question for the Provincial Governments, in which it must be understood that Her Majesty's Government is not to be involved. But the Imperial Government, before being party to any such payment in respect of this section of the railway, must have sufficient security that the whole scheme will be prosecuted with effect.

It is scarcely necessary to observe, that this assurance is given merely for the purpose of providing (as far as Her Majesty's Government is concerned) that New Brunswick and Nova Scotia shall not be prejudiced by commencing the railway in anticipation of a final arrangement (if such arrangement should ever take effect), and is not to be construed as in any way varying or keeping alive, or extending that arrangement, or as imposing on the Imperial Government any liability to assist in the construction of the shorter line now contemplated, whether by way of guarantee or otherwise, except in pursuance of the offer of December 1862 and January 1863. Therefore, no claim whatever is to be made on the Imperial Government, unless the old project is carried into execution; and if the offer of 1862–3 should fall to the ground, this assurance will, of course, fall with it. It must also be understood, that the present correspondence is not to affect the right of the Home Government to determine for itself at what period the offer of 1862–3 shall be held to be cancelled by the failure of the Canadian Government to fulfil the first of the proposed conditions, viz., that of submitting immediately to the Colonial Legislature the Bills required for carrying that offer into effect.

I am

I am to add, however, that Her Majesty's Government consider that offer as still subsisting, but would certainly cease to do so unless a definite arrangement were made, and the necessary colonial laws passed within five years of the date of the first memorandum, i.e., before December 1867.

I am, &c.

E. W. Watkin, Esq.

Fleming's Hotel, Clarges-street, W.,
7 July 1868.

My Lord Duke,

I VENTURE to submit the following observations on the points adverted to by your Grace in person, as those in respect of which some explanation might with propriety be offered:—

First, touching the vagueness of the definition in speaking of the line submitted for the approval of Her Majesty's Government as the Bay of Chaleurs Line.

This term has been applied to indicate the route surveyed by Major Robinson in 1848 (and which in its general course follows the course of the Gulf of St. Lawrence), in consequence of its being used in the telegraphic message sent by your Grace to the Governor General of Canada in May last, and because a junction with the Bay of Chaleurs is incompatible with the adoption of the frontier route or any practicable central route.

I may now add, by way of supplement to my letter of the 1st inst., that the line submitted by the Canadian Government for your Grace's approval is understood to be the Robinson route, as contra-distinguished from the frontier or central route, subject of course to any such local modifications and changes in its location as more minute examination may show to be advantageous.

I would therefore presume to suggest, in approving of the line, your Grace, for the sake of greater certainty, might designate it as that following the general line of the route surveyed by Major Robinson, and indicated in his report laid before Parliament in January 1849, touching at the Bay of Chaleurs, and thence proceeding to Truro, in Nova Scotia, in such a course as may be shortest and best, and as may offer the greatest engineering advantages, touching, where practicable and consistent with these conditions, at any points in the Gulf of St. Lawrence which it may approach. The approval in such terms would seem to overcome any difficulty arising from the communication being made by telegraph, since your Grace would have thus defined with precision the line recommended in general terms by the Government of Canada.

That Government cannot, of course, proceed to construct any other line than the one approved of, and it would seem to be unimportant whether the adoption of it by the Government of Canada take place before or after the approval by Her Majesty's Government. As it is of the greatest moment that no time should be lost in making the financial arrangements, and as my public duties require my immediate return to Canada, I trust I may be pardoned if I express the hope that your Grace may find it not incompatible with your public duty to give the necessary sanction at the present time.

I transmit for the information of your Grace, the copy of a letter which Mr. Fleming, the engineer by whom the first surveys have been made, has addressed to me, showing that it is impossible that any more complete definition of the line can be given at the present time.

On the second point, relating to any supposed contracts for particular sections of the work, I desire, with the greatest respect, to repeat the objections I have already made to imposing these contracts in any way on the Commission appointed to carry out the works. These objections are, if possible, strengthened by a communication which I have received from Mr. Fleming since I addressed your Grace on the subject, and a copy of which communication I enclose for your information.

I cannot but feel assured that your Grace will consider the scope of duty devolving on Her Majesty's Government by the Act of Parliament to be limited to an approval of the general line of the route to be followed, and will leave to the commissioners for the work, the duty of determining whether or not it be in the public interest to avail themselves of any pre-existing arrangements for its partial execution.

Trusting that these explanations may be sufficiently satisfactory to enable your Grace to give the necessary reference to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, in order that the Canadian Government may have the advantage of making their financial arrangements at the present moment, which is so favourable for that operation.

I have, &c.

The Honourable John Rose, Minister of Finance, Canada.

No. 2, Montagu-street, Russell-square,
London, July 1868.

Sir,

I AM unable to find a copy of my letter to Sir John A. Macdonald, which you inquired for, relative to the estimated cost of the whole length of the Intercolonial Railway; I enclose, however, at your request, a copy of my Report to the Minister of Public Works, on that portion of the line between Moncton and Amherst.

In my report on the exploratory surveys of 1864, I ventured to give $20,000,000 as the probable total cost of the Intercolonial Railway. The information which I have since acquired in the maritime provinces convinces me that this estimate is not only sufficient, but that with very good management it is quite possible to complete the main line between Truro and Rivière du Loup, and also the projected branch from Bathurst to , for the sum named.

If, however, the line be twisted and warped from the best position to serve private and local interests, it will not be possible to form any reliable estimate of what the expenditure will ultimately come to. It appears necessary that I should allude to this in expressing, at your request, an opinion as to the sufficiency of the appropriation for the construction of the railway, because at the only point where the question of location has practically arisen as yet, viz., between Moncton and Amherst, the line advocated by the local authorities, and adopted by a contracting firm, is not only less favourable in an engineering point of view, but is actually from 21 to 35 per cent. longer than the line which ought to be constructed.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Sir, London, 7 July 1868.

REFERRING to our conversation this morning, allow me to remark:

It would not be possible to furnish plans and sections of the Intercolonial Railway, as it may finally be built, for a very long time. Railway surveys are very laborious operations in a wild wooded country. In England, the Ordnance surveys enable engineers very readily to define the line of a projected railway, but in a country like Canada, where no such surveys exist, the best position for the railway can only be ascertained after repeated trials and laborious surveys. After the work is commenced desirable changes and improvements in the location are frequently made in a wild country, and it would not, in my opinion, be wise to define the line so exactly that no such changes could be made.

With regard to the name of the route selected for the Intercolonial Railway, it has been designated "Major Robinson's Line," "The North Shore Line," and "Bay Chaleurs Route" (No. 15). It is, probably, best known as "Major Robinson's Line," but as the expression—line, might be taken to mean the exact line laid down by Major Robinson on the plans furnished by that gentleman, and which plans do not profess to be more than the results of a rough exploratory survey, and the line shown thereon as a possible railway line, it would, perhaps, be wise to define the route for the railway so as to avoid any misconceptions. I would suggest, therefore, that the route be described generally as follows:—

The shortest and best line that can be found from the existing railway at Rivière du Loup to the Bay Chaleurs by the River Matapediac, and from the Bay Chaleurs to the existing railway at Truro, in Nova Scotia. The general designation of this intended line to be "The Bay Chaleurs Route."

On an examination of the map it will be found that a line touching the Bay Chaleurs, as above described, cannot be taken to mean a central or a frontier line, and that it is, in fact, substantially the route indicated by Major Robinson in his report laid before Parliament.

Referring to my report to the Minister of Public Works, dated 15th May last, on the location of that portion of the line between Moncton and Amherst, and also to my letter of yesterday, addressed to you on the same subject, I consider it my duty again to submit that within the limits of the route above defined, the railway should be located, as far as it is possible to do so, on that line which presents the most favourable engineering features, and subserves in the highest degree the general interests of the Dominion. If, on the contrary, other interests are too largely consulted, it will probably be discovered, when too late, that a large and useless expenditure has been incurred in constructing a railway proportionately expensive to maintain and operate.

Messrs. Edwin Clark, Punchard & Co.

Gentlemen, London, 11 July 1868.

I HAVE to acknowledge your letter of yesterday's date, with the accompanying statements on the subject of certain works in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

I think it right to say, in order that misapprehension may not arise in future, that I have no authority whatever to come to any arrangements respecting these contracts, nor should I feel myself warranted in even expressing an opinion which might influence your action with reference to the subject-matter of your communication.

While it is due to you, as a matter of courtesy, that I should meet you and hear your representations, I trust you will understand that I can do no more than give respectful attention to your statements.

Yours, &c.

Sir, Downing-street, 22 July 1868.

I AM directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to acknowledge your letters of the 1st and 7th instant, supplying information bearing on the choice of the line of railway to be constructed between Rivière du Loup and Truro, in order to complete the Intercolonial Railway.

The Duke of Buckingham and Chandos received with much satisfaction a telegraphic message from the Governor General, by which it appears that the Bay of Chaleurs Line has been selected by the Canadian Government. Her Majesty's Government readily acquiesce in this selection, as you will learn from the despatch to Viscount Monck, of which a copy is annexed.

I am, &c.

(Canada—No.—.)

The Duke of Buckingham to Viscount Monck.

My Lord, Downing-street, 22 July 1868.

I HAVE received your Lordship's telegraphic message that the route by Bay of Chaleurs has been selected by the Canadian Government as the one to connect Truro with Rivière du Loup, and thus complete the Intercolonial Railway.

I understand three routes to have been under the consideration of the Government of Canada, namely, one crossing the St. John River, either at Woodstock or Fredericton; the second in a more central direction, through New Brunswick; and the third following the line selected by Major Robinson in 1848.

The route crossing the St. John River, either at Woodstock or Fredericton, is one to which the assent of Her Majesty's Government could not have been given. The objections on military grounds to any line on the south side of the St. John River are insuperable. One of the main advantages sought in granting an Imperial guarantee for constructing the railway would have been defeated if that line had been selected.

The remaining lines were the Central Line and that following the general course of route surveyed by Major Robinson; and Her Majesty's Government have learned, with much satisfaction, that the latter has been selected by the Canadian Government. The communication which this line affords with the Gulf of St. Lawrence at various points, and its remoteness from the American frontier, are conclusive considerations in its favour, and there can be no doubt that it is the only one which provides for the national objects involved in the undertaking.

I have, &c.

Governor,
The Right Honourable Viscount Monck.

(Intercolonial.)

Sir, Fleming's Hotel, 11 July 1868.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith certain documents on the subject of the proposed loan for construction of the Intercolonial Railway, to be guaranteed by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, under the authority of "The Canadian Railway Loan Act, 1867."

In the terms of the Act of the Canadian Parliament, as well as the proposed line of railway having been approved by Her Majesty's Government, it now only remains for the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, to convey their sanction to the conditions of the loan, as detailed in enclosures A. & B., and to approve of the form on which it is suggested the guarantee of Her Majesty's Government may be evidenced.

I have prepared for facility of reference a brief statement (Enclosure, No. 1) of the several Acts of Parliament, and of the communications which have taken place on this subject, to which I would respectfully crave your attention.

I shall be happy to give any further information which may be desired; and as my public duties require my return to Canada as speedily as possible, I trust I may be pardoned if I express the hope that I may be favoured with an early communication of the views of Her Majesty's Government on the subject of the enclosed.

I have, &c.

The Right Hon. S. E. Hunt, (signed) John Rose.
Chancellor of the Exchequer, &c. &c.

Canada Intercolonial Railway Loan.

(Copy.)

THE Canadian Railway Loan Act authorised the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to guarantee, in such manner and form as they think fit, payment of interest, not exceeding 4 per cent. on any principal sum not exceeding 3,000,000 l. sterling, to be raised by the Government of Canada, for the purpose of constructing the Intercolonial Railway, on condition that Canada should pass an Act, providing:— 30 & 31 Vict. c. 16

1st. For the construction of railway; for its use by Her Majesty's troops; and, provided the line should be approved by a Secretary of State.

2nd. That the Canadian Act should provide, to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, for the raising and expending by Canada of the 3,000,000 l. on the railway; for creating a sinking fund, and for making the loan and sinking fund charges in a specified order on the revenue of Canada; for the appointment of trustees to manage the sinking fund; and, lastly, for raising such further sum, on the sole credit of Canada, beyond the 3,000,000 l., as might be necessary to complete the line.

The Canada Act has complied with all three conditions, and authorised the raising of 1,000,000 l. sterling, beyond the 3,000,000 l. guaranteed by the Imperial Government, and has been approved of by Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies. 31 Vict. c. 13.

The line has also been approved of by the Colonial Secretary; and Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P., and George Carr Glyn, Esq., M.P., have been named trustees by Canada, for the management of the sinking fund. Despatch, 18th July.

The Canadian Act provides that the work shall be performed and the money expended by a commission, named by the Canadian Government; and it is intended that operations shall be prosecuted by them as rapidly as possible.

Canada now proposes to put a portion of the loan on the market, and after consultation with Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., and Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., the financial agents of the Dominion in London, the terms specified in the annexed paper are suggested as those on which it should be offered to the public. Prospectus A.

It will be perceived that it is proposed that the bonds for that portion of the loan which is guaranteed by the Imperial Government should, when issued, be countersigned on the part of Her Majesty's Government in the same form as was adopted in 1855 in the case of the Turkish Loan guaranteed by Her Majesty and the Emperor of the French.

The approbation of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury is necessary before preparing the form of bond to be issued by the Government of Canada, which is also annexed, as well as the proposed terms of loan, and the form in which the guarantee is to be evidenced, and it will be requisite that the financial agents of the dominion or the Minister of Finance should receive the Commissioners' authority to grant the interim receipts embodying the undertaking, for the countersignature on the part of Her Majesty's Government to the bond when issued. Paper B.

INTERCOLONIAL LOAN.

1st. IT is proposed that of the intercolonial loan of 4,000,000 l. sterling, the present issue shall be for two millions, three-fourths of which to be raised on the guarantee of the Imperial Government, and one-fourth on the bonds of Canada without such guarantee.

2nd. The bonds will be redeemable in 35 years; a sinking fund of 1 per cent. per annum will be provided for the redemption of the Imperial portion and the ordinary sinking fund already existing for the redemption of the consolidated debt of Canada will be applicable for the Canadian bonds.

3rd. The loan will be payable to the subscribers by the following instalments, with the liberty to anticipate the rebate of interest at the bank rate.

4. Form of bond, to be prepared for approval of Treasury, who will authorise Messrs. Baring & Co., and Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., to grant interim certificates on payments made previous to completion of bonds.

5. Loan to be offered to public by tender, and minimum price to be fixed, and placed in the hands of the Governor of the Bank of England.

Issue of 1,500,000 l. Canada Bonds, bearing 4 per cent interest, and guaranteed by the Imperial Government of the United Kingdom, under the authority of the Act of 30 Vict., c. 16, being one moiety of the loan authorised by that Act; and of 500,000 l. 5 per cent. Bonds of the Government of Canada, being also a moiety of the loan of 1,000,000 l. authorised by the Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed on the 21st of December 1867, for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway.

Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., and Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., are authorised by the Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada to receive at the office of the former firm, No. 8, Bishopgate-street Within, on Thursday, the 23rd instant, between the hours of one and two o'clock of the day, sealed tenders for 1,500,000 l. Canada 4 per Cent Bonds, guaranteed by the Imperial Government of the United Kingdom, and to be repaid on 1st October 1903, as per form of Bond annexed.

And 500,000 l. Canada 5 per Cent. Bonds, of the form and tenor annexed, to be repaid also on the 1st October 1903.

All these bonds will bear interest from 1st July 1868. A dividend for three months will be paid on 1st October, and the dividends will thenceforth be payable half-yearly, on 1st April and 1st October of each year, as per coupons.

The above-mentioned sealed tenders may be for the whole or part of 2,000,000 l., in the proportion of three quarters of guaranteed bonds, and one quarter of ordinary 5 per Cent. Canada Bonds; and no tender will be admitted which does not comply with this condition, namely, stating one price for the two stocks united.

The Minister of Finance of Canada will deliver to the partners present of Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co. and Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., a sealed paper containing the minimum price at which he will sell the above-mentioned 2,000,000 l. bonds, and those partners will then open the tenders and allot the bonds to the highest bidder or bidders pro ratâ, according to the price offered. The sealed paper will only be opened in case the Minister of Finance declares that the whole amount has not been tendered at or above his minimum.

Neither Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., nor Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., will make any tender.

Upon allotment, a payment of 20 per cent. will be required, and the subsequent instalments must be paid at the office of Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., or Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., or, in default, the previous payments will be forfeited.

Twenty-five per cent. on the 13th of October 1868.

Twenty-five per cent. on the 12th January 1869.

And the balance on 13th April 1869.

Payment of these instalments may be made in full, on any of the above days, under discount at the then existing Bank of England minimum rate of discount.

Script receipts will be issued without delay, and bonds of 1,000 l., 500 l., or 100 l., will be delivered in exchange as soon as practicable.

In the reply to this Letter the following number should be quoted: 11,112/68.

I am further to acquaint you that my Lords have appointed Mr. G. A. Hamilton, the Permanent Secretary of this Board, to act for them and in their name, for the purpose of guaranteeing the interest on the loan of 3,000,000 l., as provided by the before-mentioned Act. And I am to add that it will be necessary that each bond or debenture should be forwarded to this department, in order that his signature may be affixed thereto.

Sir, London, 16 July.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 15th instant, informing me, by direction of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, that their Lordships have no objection to offer to the proposed mode of raising the loan for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, and that they are prepared to guarantee interest on the sum of 3,000,000 l. sterling, in the manner stated in your letter, and that Mr. G. A. Hamilton, the Permanent Secretary of the Board, has been appointed to sign the bonds when forwarded to the department.

Permit me, in reply, to express my grateful acknowledgments, both on my own part, and on behalf of the Government of Canada, for the great courtesy and promptitude which the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Lords Commissioners, so kindly evinced in the course of the recent negociations, and for their readiness to meet the wishes of the Government of Canada.

The bonds will be forwarded in accordance with your instructions to the Secretary of the Treasury as soon as received from Canada, through Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., and Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., the financial agents of the dominion in England, and will be countersigned by one or other of those firms in evidence of their genuineness.

I have, &c.

Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co.
Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co.

Gentlemen, London, 18 July 1868.

REFERRING to the communications which have taken place between us during the last fortnight, on the subject of the Intercolonial Railway Loan, I have now the honour to enclose the copy of a letter from the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, approving of the terms suggested in the course of our recent interviews, and of the form in which the guarantee of the Imperial Government shall be given.

I have, accordingly, to request that you will be good enough to take the necessary measures for placing the loan upon the market, in the terms stated in the enclosed draft of prospectus, and form of bond attached thereto. The bonds themselves will be prepared in Canada, in such amounts as you may indicate, and will be transmitted to you with the least possible delay.

I should be glad to be apprised of the result of your views on the question of commission, which has been discussed between us, and which you informed me would not, in any case, exceed the customary charge for similar operations on behalf of other foreign Governments, nor what, under the circumstances, would be a proper and reasonable remuneration for agency.

On the subject of investing the instalments that may be made, I have only to repeat the instructions already verbally expressed, that you will obtain the best rate of interest compatible with perfect security and immediate convertibility. The Indian Stock held as a sinking fund for the last instalments of the former loan on the Imperial guarantee, may, I presume, be considered of that character, and I will be glad if you will make arrangements with Commissioners, in whose control it is, for the retention of that stock, by your paying the balance of the loan, on its maturity, out of the money to be raised by the present operation.

I have, &c.
(signed) John Rose,
Minister of Finance, Canada.

Sir, London, 28 July 1868.

WE have delayed our reply to the letter, which you have done us the honour to address to us, under date of the 18th instant, until the conclusion of the negotiation of the loan for the Dominion of Canada, in order to reply at once more positively to its several contents, and you will allow us now to commence by congratulating you, and by expressing our own sincere satisfaction, on the result of the tenders on 23rd instant, which have proved to be so favourable to the interests and credit of your Government.

The conditions on which the loan was offered to the public were in conformity with the official sanction of Her Majesty's Treasury, and with the instructions contained in your letter; and we observe with pleasure that the greatest possible expedition will be insured for the transmission to us here of the necessary bonds from Canada, since, for the satisfaction of the subscribers, it is most desirable that delay in their delivery should, as much as possible, be avoided.

With regard to the commission which our two firms will charge upon this operation, we are influenced, not only by the wishes for economy which you have personally expressed to us, but by our own desire to render the proceeds of the loan as advantageous as possible to the dominion, in agreeing that a commission of 1 per cent. on the nominal amount, and not on the actual sum received, 20,000*l.* between our two firms, should cover, not only our own remuneration for the agency, and responsibility of the transaction, but should also relieve the Government from all the incidental charges of legal expenses, advertisements, printing here, and other petty disbursements, so that the only additional expense for which the dominion will be liable will be the stamp duty required by the British Government; and we shall charge no additional commission for any purchases of stock which we may be required to make for the future employment of the sinking fund. Without entering into details, we must add, that the commission we now charge is much below that usually adopted for the agency in the negotiation of any foreign loan.

We take note of our instructions, that we should obtain for the temporary employment of the money to be received by us, the best rate of interest compatible with perfect security and immediate convertibility; but we regret that, in the present state of the money market, and consistently with these conditions, we cannot credit this account with a higher rate of interest than 1 per cent. per annum, whilst we assure you that we shall avail of any improvement in the value of money to afford to the Government such increased advantages as opportunities may allow.

With regard to the Indian Securities to which you allude, they are not under our control, and we must await your further powers and instructions; but we take due note of your order to us to pay the balance, when due, of the former guaranteed loan of Canada, which will be regularly complied with.

It only remains with us to repeat the assurance of our anxiety to devote our services in every way to the advancement of the credit and prosperity of the Dominion of Canada, and to renew to you the expression of the personal respect with which

We have, &c.

Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co.
Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co.

Gentlemen, London, 29 July 1868.

In acknowledging your letter of yesterday's date, in reply to mine of the 18th instant, permit me to convey my cordial acknowledgments to your respective firms for the satisfactory manner in which the recent operations connected with the Intercolonial Loan were carried out by you, and to say I feel assured the Government of Canada recognise in the anxiety you evinced to make it successful, a practical evidence of the interest which you express in the future prospects and credit of the dominion.

I trust that the occasion which has arisen, of bringing its resources and character before the public, with your co-operation (on which I feel assured Canada may at all times rely), tend to place it securities and credit as high as those of the most favoured nations.

The charge which you make for commission, which you propose shall cover not only your ordinary remuneration for the agency and responsibility of the transaction, but all incidental charges of legal expenses, advertising, printing here, and petty disbursements, is satisfactory; and I have to express my thanks for your consideration in waiving the important item of commission in connection with the future management of the Sinking Fund.

I note your assurance, that you will avail of any improvement in the value of money, to obtain for the Government such rate of interest as opportunity may allow. Meanwhile be pleased, out of the first instalments, to extinguish the amount standing at the debit of the province, with your respective firms.

I have communicated with the Treasury on the subject of the Indian Securities; and I will thank you to redeem the balance of the former loan at maturity, and to intimate to Her Majesty's Government that you will be prepared to do so out of funds in deposit with you.

Will you be kind enough to furnish me with a list, under your signatures, of the bids for the loan, and also to apprise me, as soon as possible, of the number of bonds for the respective amounts of 1,000 l., 500 l., and 100 l., which you wish sent over.

I beg to thank you for the kind expressions at the close of your letter, and to acknowledge very cordially the uniform courtesy and kindness which you have extended to me in common with all my predecessors in official intercourse with you.

I have, &c.

Hon. John Rose, Minister of Finance.

Dear Sir, Bank of Montreal, Montreal, 12 June 1868.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, referring to the heavy expenditures, on the part of the Government, pending the financial arrangements about to be made in London, and desiring a renewal of the loan from the bank of 2,500,000 dollars, maturing on the 30th instant, say 1,000,000 dollars for three months, to mature 30th September; and 1,500,000 dollars for six months, to mature 31st December next.

The bank is quite ready to meet the wishes of the Government, and will renew its loan in the manner you propose.

You are correct in the estimate of 500,000 dollars, available to the Government from the sales of Dominion Bonds, issued in connection with the export of American silver, as verbally reported, a sale of 500,000 dollars of bonds has been made to the Government of Ontario, and only awaits the sanction of an Order in Council from Toronto, to render the proceeds available to the Government of the dominion.

An account is being prepared of the recent silver operations, which I hope to furnish to-morrow.

Dear Sir, Montreal, 24 August 1868.

I SHOULD be glad to know what arrangements the Bank would be willing to make respecting the loan of two and one-half millions of dollars, maturing on the 30th September and 31st December next, in case the Government should determine to anticipate the payment of any of the instalments.

It is probable that a considerable sum of money may be at the disposal of the Dominion, and I will thank you to say whether it will suit your arrangements to receive any, and what, sum in deposit in excess of the debt due to the bank, and what rate of interest the bank would be willing to allow on such deposits.

I should likewise feel obliged by your stating whether arrangements can be made, so that a credit of 500,000 l. sterling can be available to the Government at such time within the next 18 months, and in such sums as may be required for the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway.

In case the bank cannot meet the views of Government with reference to the repayment of the loan, or further deposits, I will thank you to say whether any arrangement can be made for the purchase of any, and what, amount of Dominion Stock, and on what terms.

Yours, &c.
(signed) John Rose.

E. H. King, Esq.,
General Manager, Bank of Montreal, Montreal.

Hon. John Rose, Minister of Finance, Ottawa.

Bank of Montreal, Montreal,
Dear Sir, 25 August 1868.

I BEG to acknowledge your letter of 24th instant. In the present state of the money market, the bank can find no profitable employment for the large sum of 2,500,000 dollars, and it would much prefer that the loans maturing for that amount should remain undisturbed until maturity.

The directors request me to say, however, that if it will be any advantage to the Government to deposit the sum of 2,500,000 dollars, with the understanding that it is to be supplied in payment of the loans at their maturity, the bank will allow interest thereon, at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum. And with reference to the inquiry whether an available credit for a similar amount, on say 500,000 l. sterling, can be arranged, I am desired to reply, that the directors will be quite willing, and entertain no doubt of their ability to make advances to the Government to that extent, within the next 18 months, if required, for the purpose of the Intercolonial Railway.

With respect to any further deposits of money, the directors are compelled to decline them at present, as they can see no outlet for their profitable employment, and in response to your last inquiry, they would suggest that such moneys be invested in the purchase of Dominion Stock, which can probably be obtained at a small discount, to the extent of 500,000 l. This would be a more advantageous than the present arrangement for the Government, and if there be no objection to the redemption of what is now a permanent loan, at 6 per cent. per annum, the directors would prefer to see a portion of the money intended for the repayment of their loan employed for that purpose, rather than in deposit with the bank, under present circumstances.

I remain, &c.
(signed) E. H. King,
General Manager.

Dear Sir, Ottawa, 25 August 1868.

I HAVE to acknowledge your letter of the 25th instant, in reply to mine of the 24th.

The terms you name with reference to the deposit of the 2,500,000 dollars, and the application of that sum to the repayment of the bank loan, are satisfactory; and I have to express my acknowledgment to the bank for its readiness to meet the wishes of the Government, as well in that matter as in granting the credit of 500,000 l., referred to in my letter.

The available bank balances in Canada will be required to meet maturing bonds and other engagements of the Government here, and payment of the 2,500,000 dollars will have to be made by exchange on our London agents.

I am apprehensive of the effect which throwing so large an amount of exchange on the market would have on the rate; and I will feel obliged by your favouring me with your opinion as to the quantity which the market here could absorb without causing a decline, and also on the expediency of having the bills drawn against a credit authorised by the Government in London, rather than by the Receiver General himself.

I will further thank you to say what arrangements the bank would be willing to make itself, for having the money available, and placed to the credit of the Government here.

I do not think that, for the present, I am in a position, under the circumstances of the contemplated arrangement, to negotiate for the purchase of the Dominion Stock.

Thanking

Thanking you for the promptitude with which you have acted on my former communications, and awaiting your early reply to this letter,

I am, &c.

Bank of Montreal, Montreal,
25 August 1868.

Dear Sir,

I HAVE to acknowledge your letter of this date. There can be no doubt that the sale of 500,000 l. sterling would cause a decline in the exchange market. So far as the local market is concerned, it would assist you but little. It would not absorb more than 20,000 l. to 25,000 l. per week, for cash sales, and not even that without a concession on the rate, which approximates, for such sales, very close to that of New York. You would also find Commissariat bills competing with yours in the market, before you had sold any considerable amount.

I am satisfied that it is not advisable for the Government to draw their own bills for sale in New York. Their appearance would at once give rise to the impression, Government was drawing very heavily against the Intercolonial Railway loan, and this would immediately cause a decline in the market. To avoid this, I think it would be more for your advantage to use our bills of exchange, paying our English bank commission, and the stamps we require to affix. If this were done, the bank would undertake the sale of the bills through its agents in New York, at the rate of 100,000 l. per week, charging a commission of one-quarter of 1 per cent., which would cover the remittance of the funds to the credit of the Government at Ottawa, without further charge.

The highest class of bills can be bought in New York to-day, according to my latest telegrams, at 9¼ per cent. premium, and you might limit our sales, for your account, to that, or such lesser rate as you think advisable. It would doubtless be more for the advantage of the Government if the whole 500,000 l. sterling could be disposed of in one sale, at a fair rate, inasmuch as it would give you the benefit of interest immediately.

I am unwilling that the bank should take any risk of loss by decline of the market, and I don't think it could be considered entirely safe in making an offer for such a sum, even with a margin of one-half of 1 per cent. in the rate, exclusive of English commission; this would make the rate, based upon to-day's quotations, 8½ per cent. premium, net, for the funds in Canada.

If the Government should be disposed to accept the rate, I shall submit to the directors; but I shall be more pleased, so far as the bank is concerned, if you elect to take the chances of the market, and direct us to sell for your account.

I remain, &c.
(signed) E. H. King,
General Manager.

P. S.—Since the above was written, I have lower quotations from New York, and I wish my suggestion, as to the bank purchasing the whole amount, to be understood as contingent on present rates.

COPY of a REPORT of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the 27th of August 1868.

THE Committee have had under consideration the annexed Memorandum of the Honourable the Minister of Finance, reporting, for your Excellency's information, the proceedings adopted by him whilst recently in England for the negotiation of the Intercolonial Railway Loan, and the arrangements entered into with the Financial Agents of the Dominion in London, in relation thereto; and they respectfully report their concurrence in the measures so adopted by the Finance Minister, and submit the same for your Excellency's sanction.

(Certified) W. H. Lee, Clerk, P.C.

THE undersigned has the honour to submit, for the information of his Excellency the Governor General, the following report of his proceedings in England on the subject of the Intercolonial Railway Loan. It was important that the preliminary arrangements with Her Majesty's Government should be made without delay, in order that advantage might be taken of the unusually favourable state of the money market, and that the loan should be placed before the summer holidays, as well as previous to certain anticipated loans by the Governments of France, Egypt, and Sweden.

Communication was, accordingly, immediately had with his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, for the purpose of obtaining the requisite assent to the sufficiency of the legislation here, and of having that assent conveyed to the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

Copies of the correspondence which took place are herewith submitted.

After full discussion with Messrs. Baring Brothers, and Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co., the Financial Agents, it was considered proper to offer the loan on the terms stated on the accompanying prospectus, which terms were accordingly communicated to the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

The approval of the Secretary of State for the Colonies having been obtained, the general conditions, and the terms of the proposed bond, were discussed at a meeting with his Grace, the Colonial Secretary, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Secretary of the Treasury, at which Mr. Baring and Mr. Glyn were present, and these terms were finally settled.

The correspondence on that subject is annexed to this report. Every publicity was given by advertisement, through the press, and otherwise, respecting the loan.

The minimum price was settled by the undersigned, and placed in a sealed paper in the hands of the Financial Agents, in the presence of the bidders for the loan, but was not communicated to any one.

The sealed tenders (in number 335) were opened by the Financial Agents, in the presence of the parties tendering. A schedule of those bids is herewith submitted.

Letters dated London.
J. Rose to Baring Brothers, & Glynn, Mills & Co., 18th July 1868.
Reply dated 28th July.
Reply dated 29th July.

A good deal of communication took place on the subject of the commission to be charged by the Financial Agents. The result of those communications will be found in the correspondence entered in the margin.

The undersigned thinks it right to acknowledge the exertion made by the Financial Agents to place the loan on the most advantageous terms possible, and to say that he believed the arrangements touching the commission, and management of the Sinking Fund are more favourable to Canada than are ordinarily accorded by London agents to foreign governments on like operations.

He cannot close this report without mentioning the courtesy and ready assistance which were on all occasions extended to him by his Grace, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

But for the facilities which were at all times so kindly afforded, it might have been difficult to have placed the loan on the market during the present season.

Minister of Finance.

Ottawa, 14 August 1868.

COPY of a Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the 27th August 1868.

THE Committee have had under consideration the annexed memorandum from the Honourable the Minister of Finance, submitting for consideration and approval, certain arrangements which he suggests should be made in view of the exceptional state of the financial affairs of the Dominion, and reporting the measures he has adopted in reference thereto.

The Committee advise that the action taken by the Minister of Finance be approved; and further, that the balance due to the Financial Agents in London be paid out of the amounts on deposit with them; that the maturing bonds, and other engagements mentioned in the memorandum of the Finance Minister, be paid, and that his recommendation. as to the issue of Exchequer Bills or Bonds be carried into effect through the Treasury Board, in such form as may be deemed expedient; and finally, that the Finance Minister be authorised to carry out his suggestion with reference to Exchange, in such manner as he may deem most advantageous.

(Certified) W. H. Lee,
Clerk, P.C.

The undersigned has the honour to submit a statement of the amount deposited on account of the Intercolonial Loan, together with the other balances available to the Government in the banks here, amounting in the aggregate to about $ 6,200,000, accompanied with a statement of the engagements which the Dominion has to meet at an early day.

The loan of two and one-half millions of dollars from the Bank of Montreal, and the bonds amounting to $ 880,000, issued in 1866, both bear 7 per cent. interest, while the amount payable to Ontario, bears 5 per cent.

The balance on the account of the Financial Agents in London also bears 5 per cent. interest.

These agents report that they are unable at the present moment to obtain in England more than 1 per cent. per annum on the sum in their hands. It is obvious, therefore, that, unless other employment can temporarily be found for the money, a serious loss of interest may take place, for the Dominion is paying at the rate of 7 per cent. interest on all its old current loans, 4 per cent. on three-fourths, and 5 per cent. on one-fourth of the Intercolonial Loan, and 5 per cent. to Ontario, and a like rate on any balance due the Fiscal Agents in London.

The Minister of Finance begs to bring under the notice of his Excellency in Council the following suggestion, by which it is sought to accomplish the double purpose of finding such employment for the money as will avert a serious loss to the dominion in the way of interest, and at the same time provide, beyond all possible eventuality, for having the Intercolonial money immediately available whenever it may be required for the prosecution of the work.

The credit with Messrs. Baring & Glyn, which the dominion may avail of to the extent of 250,000 l. sterling, he proposes shall be specially used, if need be, to recoup any portion of the Intercolonial money that may now be invested in any interest-bearing securities, issued for the reduction of such dominion liabilities as bear a high rate of interest, and the Bank of Montreal have agreed to grant a further credit for the like purposes of the Intercolonial Railway, to the extent of 500,000 l. sterling.

He suggests, further, in addition to these special credits provided for recouping the Intercolonial Loan, that Exchequer Bills of the Dominion, bearing a like rate of interest as is payable on that loan, be prepared; that these Exchequer Bills shall be receivable in payment of all dues to the Government, and be placed in the hands of the Receiver General, as Trustee for the Intercolonial Fund, and not be issued by him unless needed for that work.

There will thus be available, for recouping the Intercolonial Fund, apart from the general resources of the Dominion, the special credits of the Financial Agents and of the Bank of Montreal, and Exchequer Bills convertible at any moment, as they are receivable in payment of public dues, at short date.

Although the undersigned does not contemplate the probability of any occasion arising, which will render it necessary for the Dominion to avail itself of any of these special means provided for replacing the Intercolonial Fund, and although, under ordinary circumstances, the surplus revenues of the Dominion, and the incomings from good debts actually due to it from Savings Banks deposits, and the issue of Dominion Stock to Insurance Companies and the public, as demand for it may arise, might be relied on to meet the payments on the works, according to their progress; yet in view of the circumstances attending the issue of the Intercolonial Loan, he is of opinion that the special provisions before suggested, should be supplied before even a temporary use of any portion of the fund is made.

If Council deem it expedient to invest any portion of the Intercolonial money in such way as to reduce the interest payable by the Dominion, it will be necessary to bring the funds now in deposit with the London Financial Agents, to Canada.

In anticipation of the possibility of that operation the undersigned had informal communication with the Bank of Montreal, the substance of which is contained in the correspondence and telegrams herewith submitted.

It will be seen that the Bank is willing either to sell the Bills of Exchange of the Government for a Brokerage, and place the proceeds to the credit of the Dominion at Ottawa, or themselves to purchase the Exchange at the rate specified in the Manager's letter placing the proceeds to the credit of the Government at once to bear 4 per cent. interest.

The undersigned has considered the propriety, first, of importing gold from England, and, secondly, of asking public tenders for Bills of Exchange. In the former way the money could not be laid down here except at a considerable loss as compared with the present quoted rates of Exchange in New York, and if the latter course were adopted he believes it would lead to a serious decline in the rates as well in Canada as in New York. He is of opinion that the same result would follow if the Government were to offer its own Bills drawn on the financial agents in London, for sale through any broker, or through the agency of the Bank of Montreal, and he thinks it would be for the interest of the Government to allow the Bills of the Bank of Montreal on the Union Bank of London, its agents there, to be used. This course will subject the Government to the payment of a brokerage to the Bank of Montreal on the sale of the Bills in New York, and the transfer of the funds thence to Canada, as well as to the cost of recouping that institution for the commission it may have to pay to its London agents on their acceptance and payment of the Bills it may draw. But he considers it probable that the cost to the Government of that plan would be less than the loss which would be occasioned by the decline in the rate of Exchange were the Government to draw its own bills on Messrs. Baring and Glyn.

From the best information within his reach, the undersigned is inclined to the opinion that the price of Exchange is less likely to rise than to decline for some time to come.

The present demand for American securities in Europe, the probable heavy export of grain and other products in the autumn, the prospect of a considerable cotton crop, and the light fall importations into Canada, are among the causes which prompt this belief, and he thinks it improbable that the Government would gain as much by waiting for a rise, as it would lose in the way of interest which the deposit of money on the sale of the bills would otherwise give. He therefore submits, for the consideration of Council, the expediency of realising the exchange as expeditiously as practicable in New York, and placing the amount at 4 per cent. interest.

But, in view of the impossibility of making any certain calculations with reference to the result, and in order that the Government may have the advantage of any rise in exchange, and at the same time place a considerable sum at once at interest, he proposes :—

1st. That the offer of the Bank to purchase, at the rate specified in Mr. King's letter, be accepted as to the half of the 500,000 l. sterling only.

2nd. That the other half be sold by the Bank on Commission on the terms stated by him, either pari passu with the purchased half, or at a minimum rate to be fixed from day to day by the Government when apprised of the daily quotations in New York.

3rd. That the sum of 500,000 l. be placed by the Financial Agents in London at the disposal of the Bank of Montreal, by letter of instruction to that effect, to meet the drafts of the Bank, and on the understanding that if the payment of stamps and commission to the Bank Agents is thereby avoided, these charges will be allowed to the Government.

		(Sir George Grey.)
1	14 Aug. 1861 (No. 121)	Transmits Letter from the Basuto Chief Moshesh placed in the hands of His Royal Highness Prince Alfred praying that it might be laid before the Queen. As the Chief thinks himself neglected, suggests sending a special agent carefully to listen to his wishes, and that his requests may be sent to the Home Government - - - - - - - -	1
		(Governor Wodehouse.)
2	1 Feb. 1862 (No. 9) (Extract.)	Encloses Letter from Moshesh addressed to the Governor, requesting that he may be recognized as a subject of Her Majesty, and that through him his subjects may likewise be regarded as subjects of the Queen. Trusts His Grace will approve of the cautious tenor of the instructions which have been issued by the Commissioners - - - - - - -	2
3	19 June 1863 (No. 72)	States that for some months past an agitation has been in progress in the Orange Free State with a view to the re-annexation of that territory to the British Possessions in that quarter. Requests distinct instructions as to the course which Her Majesty's Government may desire to see followed - - - -	8
4	13 Oct. 1865 (No. 105)	Forwards Correspondence between Moshesh and the Governor which places the Government in a very peculiar position with reference to the further conduct of negotiations. States his intention to send Mr. Burnet, Commissioner of Aliwal North, to Thaba Bosigo with a view to ascertain Moshesh's position and views, and to impress upon him that the Government is in earnest in declining to accept his overtures without previous proof of his sincerity by a settlement of the question with Natal - - - - - - - - -	9
5	13 Jan. 1866 (No. 6) -	Calling particular attention to those passages of the Basuto Chiefs in which they beg that the Governor will yield to their repeated solicitations that their tribe may be taken under the immediate authority of the Queen as the sole means of preserving them from internal confusion and distress. Mr. Burnet states that the Chiefs are sincere and that the arrangement would be acceptable to the French Protestant missionaries. Explains the grounds of his opinion for believing that by accepting their offered allegiance great good would arise not only to the Basutos but to all those regions. Recommends that the people should be accepted as Her Majesty's subjects and be placed under the authority of the High Commissioner - -	13
6	3 May 1867 (No. 41) -	With reference to the offer of Moshesh to cede to the Government of Natal the whole of his territory, reports his opinion that the proposal could not be entertained on account of the decided instructions from Her Majesty's Government not to countenance any step in that direction - - - - -	15

Number in Series.	Number and Date.	SUBJECT.	Page.
7	12 May 1866 (No. 42)	In acknowledging Mr. Cardwell's Despatch, No. 21, states that he will be strictly guided by his instructions, that while favourable to the exertion of moral authority for the establishment of peace between the Free States and the Basutos, the Secretary of State is not prepared to authorize compliance with the request of the latter that they may be taken under the immediate authority of the Queen. Trusts that the proposal made in the enclosed correspondence with the Rev. M. Mabille will be approved - - - - - - - -	15
8	17 Sept. 1867 (No. 88) -	Encloses a communication from the Governor of Natal relative to the prospect of a renewal of hostilities between the Free State and the Basutos, and the overtures made by Moshesh with a view to the annexation of his country to Natal. Also transmits his reply to Mr. Keate, and correspondence with the President of the Free State, and trusts His Grace will approve of his having again offered to assist in the adjustment of the disputes - - - - - - - -	17
9	14 Jan. 1868 (No. 2) -	Encloses Correspondence with the President of the Free State and Moshesh in reference to the Duke of Buckingham's Despatch, No. 78, of 9th December conveying the authority of Her Majesty's Government to treat with Moshesh whenever a fitting opportunity may occur for the recognition of himself and tribe as British subjects, and for the incorporation of their territory with Natal on certain conditions. Proposes visiting Basutoland - - - - - - - -	23
10	18 Feb. 1868 (No. 15)	Forwards the result of the communications addressed to the President of the Free State, to Moshesh, and to the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal relative to the incorporation of Basutoland with that Colony. Negotiations not satisfactory; but trusts that he may yet be able to bring them to a satisfactory settlement - - - - - - - - -	25
11	18 March 1868 (No. 24)	Transmits Correspondence relative to the affairs of the Free State and the Basutos, with a Proclamation declaring the latter to be British subjects. Announces his intention of leaving Cape Town for Basutoland. Calls attention to his Letter to Sir Walter Currie directing him to proceed to the assistance of the Basutos with the frontier police - - - -	37
12	9 April 1868 (No. 29)	Reporting that the Volksraad of the Orange Free State had declined to negotiate on the subject of the boundary line between that State and Basutoland, and had determined to send delegates to England to remonstrate with Her Majesty's Government in person. Suggests that it would be desirable to refer the delegates back to the Governor for the settlement of the question, where alone the various interests involved can be properly appreciated - - - - - -	44
13	2 May 1868 (No. 30) -	Transmits Correspondence which had passed between the President of the Free State and himself. Reports that satisfactory explanations had been made by him to persons belonging to the State that in many quarters a strong feeling of regret exists at the determination of the Government to have recourse to a deputation to England; that warlike operations had ceased; and that he had recommended the Basutos to abstain from any steps calculated to give offence. Sir Walter Currie to withdraw from Basutoland with a large portion of the armed police. A detachment to remain for the preservation of peace - -	50
14	2 May 1868 (No. 31) -	Transmits proposed regulations for the internal administration of Basutoland - - - - - - - -	53
15	2 May 1868 (No. 32) -	Report of the proceedings at Thaba Bosigo regarding the annexation of Basutoland to Natal. Is of opinion that an immediate union with either Natal or the Cape is undesirable. Deprecates the sudden introduction of Cape Colonial law with the action of the Cape Parliament. Thinks that the Natal Legislature has shown a disposition to pass measures pressing heavily and exclusively on the Natives with the object of raising money. Believes the country will pay its own expenses, and had better, for the present, be kept separate - - - -	55

Number in Series.	Number and Date.	SUBJECT.	Page.
16	2 May 1868 (No. 33) -	Acknowledges Despatch No. 108. Expresses his apprehension that he may have lost the confidence of Her Majesty's Government in consequence of the steps which he had found it necessary to take for the recognition of Moshesh and his tribe as British subjects not being in strict accordance with the instructions which he had received. Submits that the policy of leaving the decision to the Natal Legislature, whether the Basutos should become British subjects or not, is of doubtful expediency. States that should Her Majesty's Government regard it their duty to disavow what he had done, or to withhold a frank support, then that it would be desirable that he should be relieved at once, and the management of affairs placed in the hands of one in whom they can unreservedly trust - - - - - - - - - -	57
17	18 May 1868 (No. 37) -	Acknowledges Despatch No. 116 stating that His Grace does not withdraw his confidence. States that it will be time to disavow his acts if His Grace finds him either moving troops, or asking for military assistance, or money. Forwards latest correspondence with Mr. Brand - - - - - - -	59
18	1 June 1868 (No. 40) -	With reference to the Protest forwarded to Her Majesty's Government by the President of the Free State. States his views generally. Has a firm conviction that under the terms of the treaties the two races can never live in peace together. Cannot too strongly disclaim any intention of insulting the people or Government of the Free State, or of appropriating for selfish ends the fruits of the exertions they have been making during the war - - - - - - - - -	61
19	3 June 1868 (No. 41) -	Forwards for consideration a Letter from the President of the Free State, and of his reply on the subject of the boundary line to be defined between that State and Basutoland, from which it will be perceived that the Government had taken advantage of Mr. Brand's last overture to offer the Free State, a second time, an advantageous arrangement - - - - - -	63
20	3 June 1868 (No. 47) -	Repeats recommendation that the Basuto country should be left for some time under the control of the High Commissioner. Strongly urges the propriety of not bringing Basutoland at once under the control of either of the Colonial Legislatures. Transmits Correspondence from the Governor of Natal on the subject - - - - - - - - - -	65
21	18 June 1868 (No. 50)	Transmits reply of the President of the Free State and subsequent correspondence, in which it appears that the Volksraad have decided on refusing the Governor's offers - - - -	68
22	2 Sept. 1868 (No. 82) -	Reports that he has received from the Lieut.-Governor of Natal a copy of his Despatch No. 71, addressed to the Duke of Buckingham on the subject of Basutoland, and trusts that his Grace will approve of his not re-opening the discussion on the expediency of its annexation to Natal, to which proposal Sir P. Wodehouse is opposed - - - - - -	74
23	18 Nov. 1868 (No. 127)	Transmits Letter which he had addressed to Lieut.-Governor Keate on receiving a copy from him of the Despatch which he had addressed to the Duke of Buckingham (No. 101 of 24th Sept.) containing his views as to the treatment of the matters referred to in Mr. Keate's Despatch - - - - -	74
24	19 Nov. 1868 (No. 128)	Transmits Letter from the President of the Free State calling on the Governor to put a stop to the murders and thefts committed by the Basutos, with a copy of his reply - - - -	75
25	19 Dec. 1868 (No. 137)	Acknowledges confidential Despatch of the 9th November. Expresses satisfaction derived by this fresh proof of his Grace's confidence. Forwards a communication addressed to the President of the Free State - - - - - -	77
26	26 Jan. 1869 (No. 5) -	Announces that the Orange Free State have at last consented to enter into negotiations for the settlement of their affairs with the Basutos - - - - - - - - -	79

1	17 Oct. 1861 (No. 347)	Acknowledges Sir G. Grey's Despatch No. 121. Authorizes sending a special agent to the Chief Moshesh for the purpose of correctly ascertaining his wishes, in order that they may be communicated to Her Majesty's Government - - -	83
2	5 April 1862 (No. 451) (Extract.)	Signifies approval of the Governor's proceedings reported in his Despatch No. 9 of 1st February. Concurs in his views of associating the Executive Council in the general administration of affairs - - - - - - - - -	83
3	4 August 1863 (No. 673)	In reply to Despatch No. 72, applying for distinct instructions in case the Governor should receive some communication from the Government of the Orange Free State, or from either House of the Cape Parliament in favour of re-annexation to the British possessions in South Africa. Care must be taken to hold no language which would have the effect of encouraging a movement in favour of re-annexation - - - -	83
		(The Right Honourable Edward Cardwell.)
4	21 Dec. 1865 (No. 968)	Acknowledges Despatch No. 105, in which Moshesh states that he has given himself and the whole of his country into the hands of the Queen's Government. Approves of the Governor's intention to send Mr. Burnet, the Civil Commissioner of Aliwal, to ascertain Moshesh's position and views. Is glad to learn that the Governor has no intention of accepting Moshesh and his people as British subjects - - - - -	84
5	9 March 1866 (No. 21)	Acknowledges Governor's Despatch No. 6, proposing that the wishes of the Basutos should be acceded to although the country should not be declared to form part of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, yet that the people should be accepted as Her Majesty's subjects and be placed under the authority of the High Commissioner. The Governor is clearly to understand that the Secretary of State adheres to the views expressed in his Despatch No. 968 (December 21). While he approves of every legitimate exertion of his influence to restore peace between the Boers and the Basutos, he is not prepared to authorize his compliance with the request of the Basuto chiefs that their tribe may be taken under the immediate authority of the Queen - - - - - - - - -	84
		(The Right Honourable the Earl of Carnarvon.)
6	25 July 1866 (No. 3) -	In acknowledging Despatch No. 42, forwarding correspondence with the Rev. A. Mabille, who is acting for the Basuto chief Letsia, approves generally of the Governor's answers to the several points brought to his notice on behalf of that chief, but does not think that any advantage will be secured by appointing an officer to reside with the Basutos, and would be glad that the connexion with the tribe should be strictly limited to friendly mediation without any breach of faith with Moshesh - -	85
7	9 Jan. 1867 (No. 38) -	States that he had received a Despatch from the acting Lieut.-Governor of Natal relative to a proposal made by Moshesh for the annexation of his territory to that colony for placing himself and his people under the government of the Queen. As Colonel Bisset had submitted that proposal to Sir P. Wodehouse in his capacity of High Commissioner, would be glad to be furnished with his views on the subject - - -	86

8	9 Dec. 1867 (No. 78) -	Her Majesty's Government consider that the residence of a British agent with the chief Moshesh would not accomplish a permanent settlement of the difficulties, while it might embarrass the relations with independent native tribes and the Free State. They have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the peace and welfare of Her Majesty's possessions in South Africa would be best promoted by accepting the overtures made by that chief. Expresses approval of the Governor having again offered the Free State his friendly mediation for the settlement of the disputes between that state and the Basutos - -	86
9	26 Feb. 1868 (No. 108)	Acknowledges Despatch No. 2 of 14th February. States that the announcement to the chief Moshesh that the Queen had acceded to his request that he and his tribe should be received as subjects of the British throne appears to be in excess of the authority given. Suggests the expediency of the Governor availing himself of the earliest opportunity of explaining that the acceptance is conditional only upon the satisfactory completion of the negotiations with the Free State and of the acceptance by Natal - - - - - - -	87
10	27 March 1868 (No. 116)	Acknowledges Despatch No. 15 of the 18th April, relative to the incorporation of Basutoland with Natal. Impresses the great importance of adhering to the instructions conveyed to the Governor in his Grace's Despatch No. 78, so far as it may be in his power to do so; and expresses regret that his endeavours to suspend hostilities with the Basutos had been unsuccessful - - - - - - - -	88
11	24 April 1868 (No. 127)	Acknowledges Despatch No. 24 of 18th March, transmitting Proclamation declaring the Basutos to be British subjects and their territory to be British territory. Relies on the Governor's discretion not to force matters to such a point as to involve England in a contest with the Free State. Hopes that he may be able to make an amicable arrangement with the Free State and be in a position to carry out the negotiations with that state with respect to the boundary of Basutoland as well as with Natal for the incorporation with that colony of the Basuto territory - - - - - - - -	88
12	5 June 1868 (No. 142)	In acknowledging Despatch No. 29 of the 9th May, reporting that the Volksraad of the Orange Free State had declined to negotiate on the boundary line between that state and Basutoland, and had determined to send delegates to this country to remonstrate with Her Majesty's Government, requests that if the delegates should not have left the Free State that the President should be informed that it would be impossible to arrive in England at any satisfactory conclusion in regard to the various questions of boundary and other matters, and that the whole matter must, of necessity, be referred back for settlement by the different local authorities, and that these negotiations had been intrusted to the Governor as High Commissioner - -	89
13	9 July 1868 (No. 149)-	Acknowledges Despatches Nos. 33 and 37, in which the Governor expresses his apprehension that he may have lost the confidence of Her Majesty's Government in consequence of the steps which he had found it necessary to take on the subject of the recognition of Moshesh and his tribe as British subjects not being in strict accordance with the instructions he had received. Under the circumstances stated by the Governor, Her Majesty's Government are not disposed to withhold their consent from the scheme which he had proposed of placing Moshesh and his tribe, for the present, under the control of the High Commissioner until they become more fitted for union with one of the colonies in South Africa, on the understanding that no pecuniary or military aid is to be sought from England. His Grace states his satisfaction in assuring the Governor that he sees no reason to express any disapproval of the course he had pursued, nor to withhold from him that full confidence which is essential to the hopes of a successful result to the difficult task with which he had been entrusted - -	89

18	9 Nov. 1868 (Confidential.)	With reference to the interview held with the Deputation from the Orange Free State, states that the Delegates were informed that the assumption of the Basutos as British subjects must be regarded as an accomplished fact; that Her Majesty's Government could not admit that they were bound to permit the supply of ammunition to the Free State under circumstances of hostility; that there was no disposition on the part of the British Government to act in an unfriendly way towards the Orange Free State; that the Governor had been directed to confer with the Free State respecting the establishment of a boundary line between that State and Basutoland, and that there could be but a common feeling as to the importance of arriving at a boundary which should not be not merely a solution of a temporary difficulty, but should have in itself the elements of permanency. Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir George Grey, K.C.B., to his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, K.G.

(No. 121.)

Cape Town, Cape of Good Hope,
August 14, 1861.

(Answered, No. 347, October 17, 1861, page 83.)

My Lord Duke,

Before quitting the Colony, I beg to bring under your Grace's notice the present state of our relations with the Basuto Chief, Moshesh, which are such as to keep him in a continued state of discomfort and anxiety. His restlessness has recently manifested itself strongly in the case of the Zulu intrigues.

2. Moshesh from time to time sends in letters to this Government, vague from his not understanding exactly what he wants, from his ignorance of our customs, and vaguer still from his custom of using figurative language. I enclose for your information the copy of a letter this Chief placed in the hands of His Royal Highness Prince Alfred, praying it might be laid before the Queen. Moshesh afterward substituted another letter in place of this, but still so vague, that I could not understand what he really desired.

3. I am now told that his present restlessness in part arises from his thinking himself neglected, and I am of opinion that it would be just to him to send a special Agent carefully to listen to his wishes, and after a conference with him which must from his manner and habits be a long one, to take down in detail his requests, in order that they may be thoroughly understood, and then sent on to the Home Government. I should have appointed Mr. Orpen to this duty, and have sent him at once to Moshesh, but I think it not impossible that he may now, at once, ask to be made a British subject, and, if he did this, embarrassments might arise, if your Grace had not previously been consulted. I therefore beg to recommend that your Grace would approve of the course I have above alluded to being carried out, or that you would give such other instructions as you may think best suited to the circumstances of the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) G. GREY.

His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, K.G.,

Enclosure in No. 1.

To His Royal Highness.

Encl. in No. 1.

May it please your Royal Highness, Aliwal, North, 18th August 1860.

While everybody is flocking to see the Sun, I also wish to enjoy its light, and to have the happiness of seeing a real Son of the Queen in person. My trust has always been in the Queen from the first, and I am the oldest of Her Majesty's servants and subjects in this country, and during all the governorship of the Queen's Ministers in this country from Napier, Maitland, and H. Smith, down to Sir George Clerk, and in spite of everything that has happened to me, and in midst of many troubles, I have been faithful in my allegiance to Her Majesty.

My prayer to-day is that I may be restored to the same position among the Queen's servants that I first held, for I am become as the least of them. Let whatever fault I may have committed be to-day forgiven. You are the Queen's own Son, give me peace in her name. I do not say that I have been thrown away, but just because I have not been thrown away I make this prayer. I have come to have the peace which I enjoy increased and confirmed. But although I have come to see the light myself, I should be very sorry to prevent all my people enjoying the same privilege. I should like every old man and every child to have it shining on him, and my desire is to draw it into my country. That which hastened me in my journey was the desire to arrive here in time to accompany Mr. J. Burnet and the people of Aliwal in going to meet your Royal Highness. I have not said all I wish to say in this letter, and should be very happy, if your Royal Highness can spare the time, to have the honour of speaking mouth to mouth with you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) Moshesh his × mark.

No. 2.

Extract from a DESPATCH from Governor Wodehouse, C.B., to his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, K.G., dated Government House, Cape Town, February 1, 1862.

(No. 9.) (Answered, No. 451, April 5, 1862, page 83.)

I beg to take this opportunity of making your Grace aware of the position at which, on my arrival in this Colony, I found that the relations between this Government, the Chief Moshesh, and the Orange Free State had arrived, and of the steps which, after consulting the Executive Council, I have thought it my duty to take in the hope that I may at an early date be informed if you approve of what has been already done, and be made acquainted with your views in respect to our future policy.

At the time of my landing the Government had just received from the Gentlemen selected for the special mission sanctioned by your Grace's Despatch, No. 347,* of the 17th October last, an intimation of their readiness to undertake the service. There was also awaiting my arrival a very long letter from Moshesh himself, describing to me the past transactions between him and this Government, and expressing his great anxiety to be placed on terms of more intimate union with us.

* * * * * *

Your Grace will find that in his letter to me he has, as Sir George Grey had anticipated, distinctly requested that he may be recognized as a subject of Her Majesty, and that through him his subjects may likewise be regarded as the subjects of the Queen. This question involves considerations of great importance, and I have no desire, with my present imperfect acquaintance with Native affairs, to offer any opinion as to the propriety of acceding to his wishes, more particularly as the members of the Executive Council were far from being prepared to advocate any decided course, and I hope your Grace will therefore approve of the very cautious tenor of the instructions which have been issued to the Commissioners, warning them to abstain from committing the Government to any positive course of action, to make the Chief thoroughly aware of the consequence of a compliance with his request, and to endeavour to ascertain positively whether, after that explanation, he was still desirous of becoming boná fide a subject of the Queen. Some time must elapse before we learn the result of the mission, and it would give me much satisfaction if before advancing further in our negotiation with Moshesh, I could be made acquainted with your Grace's views on all that I have now put before you.

Enclosure 1 in No. 2.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

Encl. 1 in No. 2.

SIR, Thaba Bosigo, December 6, 1861.

I HAVE the honour to present your Excellency my respectful salutation upon your arrival in the Colony.

I have received the letter which his Excellency Sir George Grey wrote bidding me farewell; in it he alluded to my desires with regard to my relations with Her Majesty's Government, and mentioned that he had recommended that an agent should be sent to me.

I beg your Excellency also to support my petition; and since there appears to be still some doubt as to the precise nature of my wishes, I beg your Excellency, lest this should cause any delay, to lay this letter before the Queen, for I desire now to explain distinctly my views with regard to my past relations with Her Majesty's Government and my wishes for the future.

It is well known that when subjects of Her Majesty began to enter my country, and I met some of them about the year 1833, I asked them to tell their Chief on their return that I desired an alliance, and from the time I first became known to Government I have been its friend and virtually it sally; it is now nearly thirty years.

On the 30th May 1842, I wrote to Governor Napier asking for a written treaty. In that letter I opened my heart, and told him how I honoured and trusted the English Government, and how I saw that we natives could not live and prosper, save under the care of the Queen, and now I think so still.

In the year 1843 a written treaty was granted to me by which I became the child of the Queen, and on account of it I continue still Her child, for, notwithstanding many and great troubles, I have always kept that covenant faithfully, and I cling to Her still.

On the 30th June 1845, his Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland proposed to me an additional treaty founded on the first, and I agreed to it. By that agreement I gave up at his request, for the use of Her Majesty's emigrant subjects, a part of my country which had been acknowledged to be mine in my former treaty, and Government bound itself to restrain those subjects beyond the limits which I had assigned to them, and which were agreed to to prevent their molesting me, and even to protect me with troops if necessary, and now, though those limits have been broken through and removed nearer to me, the treaty still exists. I may even say I bought it with that land, and the land has never been returned to me.

On the 27th January 1848, Sir Harry Smith proposed to me at Winberg an agreement, and it was made strong between us in writing that day. Upon that writing, so far as my country was concerned, was built Sir Harry Smith's proclamation of Her Majesty's paramount authority over the country between the Vaal and the Orange Rivers, but the agreement itself, and all that was done by its power, was based upon my original treaties. The written agreement itself styles our arrangement "this day's cemented alliance." It cannot be said to have destroyed that which it cemented; my original treaties therefore continued still in force.

And if Sir Harry Smith's proclamation of the Queen's paramount authority (3rd February 1848) be read, it will also show that notwithstanding it, I continued to be an ally of Her Majesty as I was before, although placed under the Queen as a Chief of my own people.

For these reasons, I have always believed that my alliance was not destroyed, when Her Majesty revoked Sir Harry Smith's proclamation of Her authority beyond the Orange (River). It was merely the removal of a superstructure and the old foundations, which were my original treaties, remained still firm, and in effect his Excellency Sir George Clerk, Special Commissioner, who carried out the measure of abandoning the country, never told me that by his doing so my alliance would cease to exist. He spoke to me at Platberg, only one month before the abandonment of my future relations with Her Majesty's Government. We spoke together of a very close connection, and the appointment of a special representative of Her Majesty to reside with or near me. He said I "might rely on General "Cathcart's choosing a fit person." All this he related in his Despatch of the 24th January 1854, in which he strongly recommended such an appointment, and in his Despatch of the 10th November 1853 he calls my old and still existing treaty, "the most formal document of the kind in our time executed "in South Africa."

His Excellency Sir George Clerk, afterwards in his convention of the 23rd February, by which he gave the people of the Free State the right to govern themselves, did say, "the British Government "has no alliance whatever with any native tribes northward of the Orange River, save that with "Adam Kok, and no wish or intention to enter into any treaties which would be prejudicial to the "interests of the Orange River Government."

In this thing, however, I think Sir George Clerk was deceived; but it is to be seen in his Despatches that though he may have considered my treaty technically void, yet he strongly advised that the relationship should not be broken off altogether. He thought the abandonment made such an alteration in our affairs that some new arrangements were required between us. He wrote in his Despatch of the 24th January 1854, "The advantages are considerable in leaving matters between us and Moshesh on "a footing which does not prohibit a closer connection hereafter," and he did leave affairs in such a state, and refused to bind Government not to resume such a close connection, and it is this for which I have been waiting, and now ask.

As for me, I have never been told that my alliance had been broken, but I have been as if forgotten; I have found myself left alone, and have suffered much in consequence. I do not know why Sir George Clerk denied my alliance on that occasion; but I have heard that he is said to have thought the unhappy collisions which took place between my people and Her Majesty's troops amounted to war, and therefore destroyed my alliance, for it is said war is a flood which destroys the traces of the past.

Although I speak of these collisions, I do so with very great pain; but I wish to be received again by the Queen, and am anxious to sweep away every obstacle which stands in my way, and this is just the greatest obstacle, and that by which any one looking into my petition would at first be blinded. But I do not wish to contest that the Basuto were without fault; no, for I acknowledged at the time and asked forgiveness, and it was granted to me, and I still ask that it may indeed be forgotten altogether. But I deny that I have ever been the enemy of the Queen. The collisions were two. In both instances my people were on the defensive. The first was in May 1852 at Viervoet. Major Warden, the British Resident, then attacked my people with the troops and many natives, and denounced me as the enemy of the Queen, but I continually protested against that untruth, and begged for investigation, particularly in my letter to Major Warden and Sir Harry Smith of the 8th and 10th October. I restrained my people as well as I was able, and for 18 months after the attack, until Cathcart came, it was not war, though Major Warden continued to cause much confusion in the land by setting tribes against me whom he called allies, and gave ammunition, and they often attacked me both before and after that day at Viervoet, without restraint from him.

When after 18 months General Cathcart, the Governor, came, he came to investigate, as I had begged. Long before he came he wrote to say he would come to visit "as a friend." He came in peace and not in war. He said this in his proclamation at the time when he came, and he repeated it again in his letter to me of the 13th March 1854, "I come amongst you in the Queen's name to "administer justice and right equally to all, not to make war, but to settle disputes, and establish the "blessings of peace."

It could not therefore have been on account of anything which happened before Cathcart came that Sir George Clerk is said to have thought my treaty broken by war, and he also himself says, in his Despatch of the 10th November 1853:—The Basutos never really offended Government till the end of 1852,—that is till Cathcart came (December 1852). This offence, for which I grieve to this day, was the struggling of children against a father's chastisement. I begged forgiveness that very same day, and it was granted me with a pleased heart, and the child remained his father's child still.

Sir George Cathcart himself considered his measures at Berea "a vindication of sovereign authority "a chastisement," "the levying of a fine by force" "administering justice in the Queen's name," not war. It was an act of that authority proclaimed on the 3rd February 1848, and built upon by agreement of the 27th January 1848, which cemented the deep foundations of my original treaties. With its causes and consequences it was confined within those walls, and did not disturb the ancient foundation.

Sir George Cathcart was at first deceived. He thought it possible for me in the short time of three days to raise the immense fine of ten thousand head of cattle, which was then first demanded from me, for before that no number had been specified. The demand was unexpected, but I collected all I could, four thousand, and paid them to him, and was collecting more when he advanced and seized by force six thousand more; and my people fought that day, but that same day I wrote in haste and said, "My Chief, I beg you to be satisfied with what you have taken, you have shown your power, you have "chastised, let it be enough I pray you;" and when Cathcart wrote back he praised me for the message I had sent, and said "Moshesh, I consider your past obligations fulfilled, I am not angry with "your people for fighting in defence of their property."

I have said Sir George Cathcart was at first deceived, but he was an honourable and noble soldier, and before his death he left me this testimonial and assurance in his letter to me of the 13th March 1854; he said, "I rejoice to believe that you are and always have been well disposed towards the "British Government, and a true and loyal friend to our gracious Queen. I shall not fail to assure "Her Majesty of this my favourable and sincere opinion as soon as I have an opportunity, and you "may be assured that Her Majesty will be ever favourably disposed towards you so long as you "continue so."

I treasure this letter, for who was more competent than he to judge of my conduct on that occasion? And with regard to the causes of this attack, he laid the whole blame on Major Warden. He explained these causes in his minute of the 20th May 1853, and in his Despatch of the 14th April. He says of him, "In support of unjustifiable aggression he had recruited petty Native Chieftains on the "side of Government, and had openly instigated them to annoy and vex the Basutos, whose by no "means ill-disposed Chief he had denounced as the enemy of the Queen." He says further that if war had been declared "it was very questionable whether justice and good faith would be found on the "side supported by Government;" and he explains that he had thought it necessary, in vindication of the Queen's supremacy, to establish, by an exhibition of power, that authority which the British resident had compromised by his acts.

On these grounds I beg that generosity may be shown me, and that my treaty may not be considered void on account of the resistance offered at Berea, which was forgiven that day in the name of the Queen.

But I can also show that I was at once, after that resistance, deliberately and formally recognized to be still the ally of the Queen, and was reported to her Ministers as such.

On the 3rd January 1853, Mr. Green, the British Resident, wrote to me that I, Moshesh, now that peace was restored, was still and still an "ally of the Queen of England." His Excellency Sir G. Cathcart mentions, in his Despatch of the 15th March 1853, that this letter was written according to his instructions; and Mr. Green also mentions, in his letter of the 30th March 1853, that he had personally informed me of Sir G. Cathcart's approval of it; and again, Sir G. Cathcart himself, in his Despatch of the 13th January 1853, mentions me as "a valuable and willing ally of no small power." But even if it could be said we did so deeply offend Her Majesty that we have been unworthy of her countenance, and cast off since that day at Berea, or that we were abandoned at the same time as the country, then I would ask that our conduct since that day should be remembered, for we have continued to do our duty according to the treaty, and throughout all this long darkness we have clung to the Queen for years.

In February 1857 I became aware that war had been determined against me by Mr. Boshof, late President of the Free State. I remembered my duty, and submitted all questions in dispute between us to his Excellency Sir George Grey's decision, calling him "my Father," for he was in the place of the Queen. I begged him by my alliance to interfere and prevent war, and mediate between us; and I begged Mr. Boshof also to join me in calling in the Governor.

The dispute was about a boundary line claimed by the Free State. It was an old line, which Major Warden, the British Resident, had once made by force; but every subsequent representative of the Queen had declared it to be withdrawn, and to have been an unjustifiable aggression, for though he had made it by the power of Sir Harry Smith's proclamation of the sovereignty, it was an infraction of my agreement of the 27th January 1848, upon which that proclamation was founded. It robbed me of a great part of my country and thousands of my people, and both these were reserved to me in that agreement, and my boundaries had been guaranteed in my former treaties.

In March 1858, Mr. Boshof made war upon me on account of this line. Presently, however, circumstances, which he explained at the time in his letter to Sir G. Grey, led him to ask for peace through the mediation of his Excellency. Then one word from Her Majesty's representative caused me to make peace, and put my whole case in his hands, for I remembered my duty. But I did not forget my people and my country, and when I accepted mediation, I claimed, in my letter to Sir G. Grey, that peace should be guaranteed to me, so that I should not be similarly attacked again (May 28, 1858).

I then, at Sir George Grey's desire, offered a boundary line. He said it was very fair and liberal. The Free State asked more. Through Sir G. Grey's mediation I gave it, and ever after the line was defined; in the treaty of peace alterations were made which gave them still more, and I submitted to it.

We now thought our faults would indeed be forgotten, and that the face which had been averted from us would shine on us again.

I and my people kept the peace which Sir George Grey had made, and though they suffered from famine, were emaciated with hunger, were reduced to eat the seed of grass in the fields, and many nearly died, they abstained from obtaining food by reprisals.

And now we say, can the Queen suffer Her children to be attacked again with their hands bound, while those who attack us are furnished with cannon and guns and ammunition by Her Government? I have always said we were forgotten, but for a moment. I still trust in Her justice and humanity, therefore I now ask to be recognized as Her subject, and that my subjects, the Basutos, may, on account of and through my chieftainship, be Her subjects too.

I ask this of Her generosity, for we have nothing to offer in exchange but our gratitude and fidelity; though, if it were asked, or necessary, every Basuto would willingly offer his life in Her service, and, as I did in 1846 and 1848, I would again feel pain when she felt pain, and make Her enemies my enemies.

I do not wish to involve Government in wars on my account, my only longing is for peace and rest; and I know that if I were but received, no one would ever think of attacking me. As for me, it is known that I never make war unless I am attacked, and, besides, did I not give peace in the midst of war at one word from the Governor? and would I not, were there anything wrong on my side which would cause war, with all my heart remove it, if he asked me?

I am not perhaps altogether unable to defend my own country, but this I am unable to do—to keep from it the constant expectation of being attacked; this does my people no good. Such security Government alone can give me. It is, therefore, that I ask to be received, that my people may never again be disturbed with thoughts of war, and may build and cultivate, and grow in civilization.

If it should please Her Majesty to appoint an agent to reside with me and communicate with me, and be Her ears and eyes, (such an appointment as Sir George Clerk recommended, and Sir George Grey also spoke of,) I would receive him with gladness. It is an arrangement provided even in my original treaty, and had it been carried out, much mischief might have been prevented.

Though I desire peace much and above all things, yet, after it, I do desire also that powder and such supplies should be allowed to reach us in such measure as our conduct shows us to be deserving of confidence. I beg this favour, because when these things are prohibited my position is difficult, for this gives power to the arguments of those who say it is the fixed determination of Government to give the native tribes no protection, and to deprive them of the means of self-protection. This thing, believed by some, constantly excites evil among people on both sides of my frontier. (Sir G. Grey knew this long ago, and declared that such a policy was unjust, and he said it again in his memorandum of the 27th July last.) I beg it also because my treaties give it to me, and because it is a means of obtaining food for the poor among the Basuto, and indeed all the game in the country first belonged to us.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

I ask this of Government very freely, for even the Free State gives these things to the natives under its Government (as Jan Latelle). Sir George Grey also promised to recommend that this should be allowed me.

If I should be received I would wish that the land of the Basuto should continue to be recognized as mine, as it remains at present, for no other tribe disputes it with me.

On the south my line touches the Colony, it is partly the Orange River, then the Tees up to its source, thence along the range dividing the waters which flow to the Kraai and Orange Rivers, to where that range reaches the Quathlamba Mountains dividing the waters which flow towards Kaffraria from those flowing westwards.

In one part my country extends beyond the Quathlamba. It is where my son Nehemiah is established. The boundaries of this part as they have been agreed upon with the surrounding native tribes, I cannot to-day exactly describe, but I will shortly point them out to your Excellency in a letter.

On the west my boundary is the Free State.

I do not anticipate that the inhabitants of the Free State will have any objection to make against my being received, for the thing I ask is a security for peace between us, and those who desire war and cause it are in all lands few, and those who suffer by it many. Besides, the document they have received from the Queen giving them the right to govern themselves, gives them no right whatever to object either to my being received or to my receiving ammunition. No such promise was ever made to them or implied, and even if it were, my alliance is older than their independence.

If your Excellency can give me any encouraging information upon the subject of my application it will gratify me exceedingly and be of service to me.

I shall be very grateful to receive in answer an assurance that my letter has received your Excellency's favourable consideration.

I have, &c.

SIR, Civil Commissioner's Office, Aliwal, North, January 6, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch marked "confidential," dated 26th December ultimo, enclosing a Despatch for the great Chief Moshesh, which I have lost no time in forwarding to its destination.

I have already communicated with Mr. J. M. Orpen on the subject of the special mission to the Chief, and shall lose no time in making his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor acquainted with his reply, Mr. Orpen being at present absent on a surveying tour in the Orange Free State may occasion a few days delay in receiving his answer.

I have the honour to enclose herewith for the information of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, a letter this day received from Mr. Superintendent Austen, containing an interesting account of a visit to the Chief Moshesh and Letsie his eldest son, occasioned by the tracing of a theft of a number of horses from Kat River in Basutoland.

I have, &c.
JOHN BURNET,
Civil Commissioner.

(Extract.) Witteburgen, 4th January 1862.

* * * * * *

On the receipt of your letter of the 23d ultimo I communicated with Sub-inspector Thornton of the Fr. A. M. Police, and invited that officer to co-operate with me, to which that officer in his usual promptness at once responded, and joined me with a small patrol of police on the 27th ult., and we proceeded to the kraal of the Basutu Chief Molomo, having sent my special detective the day before in advance, to gather information, if possible, about the sale of 13 horses stolen in the division of Stockenstrom from the Messrs. Marix's as adverted to in your letter to me of the above date.

I reached the kraal of the Chief Molomo on the evening of the 27th ult, and found my detective at the village with the necessary information to enable me to secure the recovery of the said horses. I lost no time to acquaint the Chief Molomo with the purport of my visit, and am happy to state for the information of his Excellency the Governor that I was well received by the above Chief, and who, in a most generous and open-hearted manner, acknowledged that he and his nephew had purchased five horses and two mares and foals from the prisoners Jan Roos and Pretorius, and which the Chief said he would collect and hand over to me the next morning; one of the horses he said was lost since, and another he had sold but would replace with another, which he accordingly did the next morning.

I have much pleasure to say that throughout this Chief acted in the most straightforward manner, and deserves great praise.

On the 30th ult. I proceeded to the Mariga Mission Station in search of those of the horses not yet recovered, and sent a messenger to the Chief Letsei, to inform him of my arrival, and to know at what time it would be convenient to see him. The morning of the 31st was fixed by the Chief, and by appointment we had a very satisfactory interview with the Chief, who I regret to say I found very unwell, still suffering from a severe injury he sustained in his hand from the bursting of a gun. I stated the cause of my sudden visit; the Chief expressed himself pleased to see me, and said that the prisoners had been to his village with the horses in question, and had offered them to him for sale, but that he had refused to buy them. The Chief Letsei spoke very reasonably, and I was quite satisfied with the truthfulness of his intentions and good feelings towards the Government, and willingness to co-operate in the suppression of thefts and recovery of stolen property.

As I was so near the residence of the paramount Chief Moshesh, we proceeded to Thaba Bossigo on the evening of the same day, arriving too late to pay my respects to the old Chief that evening. I sent a message that I was at the Mission House, and to know at what time I could see him the next morning. The Chief fixed 10 o'clock a.m., and upon that appointment I went up the mountain and met the old Chief, who appeared pleased to see me and had a long conversation with me, stating to me that all his present troubles with the Free State authorities in connection with the late murder case of Phillip Ventnor, and would have me hear from the son of his late brother Mahali who was in charge of the men who killed Ventnor. From the statement made to me by Mohali's son, and one of the men who killed Ventnor, I feel satisfied that if the case was tried in our Circuit Courts, no other verdict would be given but that of justifiable homicide and not murder, and the acquittal of the prisoners.

The Chief Moshesh says that he has decided not to give up to the Free State the accused Basutos on the 16th inst., which date is fixed, when a deputation would be at Thaba Bossigo to receive them; and gives for his reasons:—That he has had nine subjects shot down by Free State boors upon various occasions, and which cases he had duly reported to the Free State, but no redress awarded, and all of which charges he will be prepared to prove on the spot by witnesses who will be present at the meeting the day the deputation meets.

The Chief appears much depressed in spirits, and fears that all his efforts to satisfy the Free State will be futile.

The Chief Moshesh, in his usual bland manner, expressed his loyalty to the British Government, and to cultivate the most friendly feelings.

MINUTE.

(Extract.)

* * * * * *

Turning now to the immediate object of the proposed mission, the Council will perceive from a letter which Moshesh sent down to be delivered to me on my arrival, that the Chief has, as Sir George Grey in some degree anticipated, made a distinct application to be recognized as Her Majesty's subject, and that the Basutos may, on account of and through his chieftainship, be Her subjects too. It seems very doubtful, however, whether the Chief is quite alive to, or is really willing to abide by, all the consequences of such a change in his position. It is manifest that if it should be the determination of Her Majesty's Government to assent to this request, they would take upon themselves, in a greater or less degree, the responsibility of his administration,—more particularly his relations with other states. The intervention of British Authorities would necessarily follow, and it is difficult to believe that an independent Chief would willingly consent to such an abandonment of his own power, or that the tribe over which he rules would be content to sink into so completely a subordinate position; on the other hand, it is clear, from the Chief's letter, that he is exceedingly anxious for the removal of all doubts as to his being in alliance with the British Government, and tries to prove that the old treaties with him have not been destroyed by any later occurrences. He may, therefore, prefer, and be quite satisfied with, our entering into a new arrangement recognizing the friendly relation subsisting between us. I do not conceive that there is any stipulation in the convention with the Orange Free State which can be construed to debar us from taking such a step. We have covenanted not to enter into any treaty injurious to their interests, but we are certainly not bound to consider any treaty that has for its object the preservation of the peace of the country as being injurious to their legitimate interests. I am clearly of opinion that the gentlemen to be employed on this mission should be enjoined to act with the greatest caution; to avoid saying anything calculated to commit this Government to any particular line of action; to make Moshesh aware that the subject is now under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, whose approval will be indispensable in every stage of the proceedings; and above all, to point out very distinctly to the Chief the inevitable results of a compliance with his application, if in the end assented to, and to ascertain if he be really desirous of a change in his position, and is inclined to believe that it would be acceptable to his subjects in general.

Enclosure 5 in No. 2.

INSTRUCTIONS for the guidance of JOHN BURNET and JOSEPH M. ORPEN, Esqs., Commissioners appointed by his Excellency the Governor to proceed to the residence of Basuto Chief Moshesh for the purpose of ascertaining by personal conference with him what are his views and wishes in respect of his present and future relations with this Government.

1. The Commissioners will be good enough to understand that they have no power or authority to treat with Moshesh in any way, but that the object of their mission is simply to confer with that Chief to endeavour to ascertain distinctly his views and wishes in regard to his relations with this Colony present and future, and to report thereon for the information of Government.

2. Moshesh has frequently addressed letters to the Governor of this Colony upon the above subject, but generally in such vague and undefined terms (arising, probably, from his not quite understanding his own wants, his ignorance of our customs, and his habit of using figurative language) as to render it impossible that any practical result can be arrived at from them.

It is not unlikely that his communications with the Commissioners will be in like terms, and if so, they will point out to him the impossibility of any action being taken unless he clearly and distinctly expresses his feelings and opens his mind freely and without reservation.

3. A copy of the last letter from Moshesh, dated 6th December 1861, is annexed for the information of the Commissioners. In this communication, Moshesh alludes to his treaties with Sir George Napier, Sir P. Maitland, Sir Harry Smith, and Sir George Clerk's arrangements with the Free State Government on the Queen's sovereignty over the country north of the Orange River being withdrawn. All these documents, except that with Sir P. Maitland, will be found in a "Blue Book" herewith forwarded. No treaty was completed between Sir P. Maitland and Moshesh, in consequence, it is believed, of the undefined state of the boundary lines. But hereto are annexed papers showing what was agreed upon between Sir P. Maitland and the Chief in regard to certain written points of policy.

It is by no means clear which of the above recited treaties or agreements is the one preferred by Moshesh, or whichever he is desirous of reverting under the altered circumstances which now exist, to the position in which he was placed by either of them; but should it appear to the Commissioners that he is desirous of again placing himself and people under the sovereignty of Her Majesty the Queen, they will take care to make him fully acquainted with what, in the event of Her Majesty assenting to such a proposition, would be his own and people's position, a position which he appears to think never to have contemplated, viz., that neither he nor any of his subordinate Chiefs could thereafter be permitted to exercise unrestricted jurisdiction, and would be bound to act both within their own limits and beyond them, in strict conformity with such rules and regulations as would be from time to time promulgated for that purpose, and they would also be required to submit to the jurisdiction of European Magistrates, should it be found expedient to appoint such officers.

In Moshesh's letter to the Governor, referred to in paragraph 3, he alludes to the country occupied by his son Nehemia, south of the Drakensbergh, as a part of his territory; his Excellency in his reply has not touched upon this subject, or any other question of boundary, but the Commissioners are requested to state to him that without further information than that at present possessed by his Excellency, he is not prepared to form a definite opinion upon that claim or in any way admit it.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir P. E. WODEHOUSE, K.C.B., to his Grace the DUKE OF NEWCASTLE, K.G.

(No. 72.)

Government House, Cape Town,
June 19, 1863.

MY LORD DUKE, (Answered No. 673, August 4, 1863, p. 83.)

I THINK it necessary to acquaint your Grace that for some months past an agitation has been in progress in the Orange Free State with a view to the re-annexation in some shape of that territory to the British Possessions in this quarter.

Latterly public meetings have been held at various places, at which resolutions in favour of such a measure have been carried either unanimously or by large majorities; and I have every reason to suppose that before long I shall receive some communication on the subject from the existing Government of the Republic.

In communicating to your Grace my desire to be placed as soon as possible in possession of distinct instructions as to the course which Her Majesty's Government may desire to see followed, I do not feel under the necessity of entering on the discussion of a subject which was so fully brought before them in 1858. I have therefore only to add that, pending the receipt of your Grace's reply, I shall in the event of any communication being made by the Free State or any question being put by either

House of Parliament, state that I have requested to be instructed as to the views of Her Majesty's Government. CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir P. E. WODEHOUSE, K.C.B., to the Right Hon. EDWARD CARDWELL, M.P.

(No. 105.) Government House, Cape Town, October 13, 1865.

SIR, (Answered No. 968, December 21, 1865, p. 84.)

WITH reference to the several Despatches I have addressed to you on the subject of the war between the Free State and the Basutos, and of the inroad made by some of the latter into Natal, I have the honour to forward copies of correspondence which has passed between Moshesh and myself, and which unquestionably places us in a very peculiar position with reference to the further conduct of the negotiations. Enclosure.

It will be seen that on the 29th August Moshesh sent me a copy of the terms on which the President of the Free State was prepared to make peace, and to which the Chief asserted that he would never assent. He stated that he considered himself a subject of the British Government, and that he gave up his country to them, on conditions to be agreed upon between himself and me. This proposal has been even more distinctly stated in a letter of the 18th September, in which he writes, "I have already "given myself and whole of my country into the hands of the Queen's Government. "Your Excellency may therefore consider the whole of the Basuto Land under your "jurisdiction, to deal with us and the compensation demanded in (for Natal), according "to your Excellency's discretion."

In reply to his first intimation, I informed him on the 25th September last, that much as I regretted the misery and distress caused by the war, I felt it was impracticable for this Government then to interpose with any prospect of a good result, more especially as he gave me no idea of the concessions he would be prepared to make to obtain peace. I added that I could not be expected to put faith in his professions of attachment to the Queen, while he neglected to satisfy the just demands of the Colony of Natal. To this I have not yet received any answer.

When his letter of the 29th August was written, he and the people with him on Thaba Bosigo were supposed to be suffering great misery, and to be closely besieged, and exposed to the constant cannonade kept up by the Boers. But we have now learned from the messenger who took up my letter of the 26th August, and remained with Moshesh from the 15th to the 22nd September, that there never was the slightest distress, that the incessant firing of the Boers was perfectly harmless, and that the people on the mountain were amply supplied with food. The result has been that the Boers, after much mutiny and desertion, have abandoned the siege, and turned homewards in different divisions, professing an intention to renew the siege when fresh levies have been called out.

This notion of declaring himself the subject of the Queen is not new with Moshesh; and you will find that in 1862 I sent a deputation to Thaba Bosigo to ascertain, if possible, what signification he really attached to it. Matters then advanced so far, that I contemplated, with the approval of the Duke of Newcastle, appointing a British Officer to reside with Moshesh as our representative, and to act as a friendly mediator between the Basutos and the Free State. About that time, however, the President of that State visited Cape Town, and exhibited so much apprehension as to the selection of the agent, that I allowed the proposal to fall to the ground.

Moshesh's great ability and skill in negotiation have never been denied; and there can be no doubt that the line he has now taken is very ingenious. He makes it almost impracticable for me to take extreme steps against one who thus places himself at my disposal, and who, I really believe, desires always to be on good terms with us, but who nevertheless is equally desirous of escaping or postponing as long as possible the consequences of the disorderly act of his tribe. Indeed I cannot tell if he really has the power to enforce his order, if given, for the payment of full compensation.

Under existing circumstances, therefore, I propose to send Mr. Burnet, the Civil Commissioner of Aliwal North, to Thaba Bosigo. He is a gentleman of great experience in the affairs of that part of our border, well known to and respected by Moshesh and the Basutos, as well as by the people of the Free State, who was with me during the negotiations of last year, and with whom I can communicate confidentially on all questions that may arise. He will be enabled to ascertain Moshesh's position and views, and to impress upon him that the Government is quite in earnest in declining to accept his overtures without previous proof of his sincerity by a settlement of the question with Natal. Moshesh will also be disposed to take in good part any advice coming from him.

It is right I should add I have no intention of accepting him and his people as British subjects. But much good might perhaps be effected by the establishment at Thaba Bosigo of a British Agent, invested, by consent of all parties, with authority to settle disputes on cattle thefts, and such matters, arising between the people of the Free State and the Basutos.

MY DEAR SIR, Thaba Bosigu, August 29, 1865.

I AM happy to inform your Excellency that I have received your letter of the 12th July 1865.

Allow me to state that I have done all that was laying in my power to maintain peace and union with the Free State, and I have offered to the Boers all they demanded from, when I thought it just, but they do continually propose condition so unreasonable, that it is evident they were not willing to keep peace.

After their having run through all my country, killing women and children, burning all the villages and the corn they met with, I have sent to them for peace, but their conditions are so immoderate, that I cannot comply with them.

As your Excellency will see by the present document, they ask from me to deliver up to them two of my sons till the treaty of peace is signed, and all my arms and an exorbitant fine, &c. Another condition imposed upon me by the President is that I must become subject to the Free State Government, but I will never do so. I consider myself subject to the British Government, and I hope your Excellency shall take interest in my cause, and come to establish peace as soon as possible, as I am determined the Government of the Free State will never have my country. I am therefore giving myself and my country up to Her Majesty's Government under certain conditions which we may agree upon between your Excellency and me.

I hope to hear from your Excellency as soon as possible what I am to do, begging you to consider that my all people has fled, and are living under the rocks looking with anxiety for having the liberty of ploughing and sowing their fields. Your Excellency shall excuse me for not having sealed this letter with the seal of my Government because it has been lost in the confusion of the war.

My son George shall remain at Aliwal until your Excellency favours me with an answer.

I remain with the highest consideration of your Excellency,
Your dutiful subject,

To his Excellency the Governer of the Cape of Good Hope, Sir P. Wodehouse.

MY DEAR FRIEND, Thaba Bosigu, August 22, 1865.

THE army of the Boers having brought all my country in most disastrous calamities of war, I sent my son George to Aliwal with a letter to his Excellency the Governor of Cape Town in which I give up myself and my country to the power and the protection of Her Majesty's Government. In so important a circumstance I confidently hope you shall take interest in our cause, will help to bring in the relief of a whole nation flying and famishing in the mountains, and uncertain of the time in which they may be free to plough and sow their fields.

I remain, my dear Sir,
Your most devoted friend,

To J. Burnet, Esq., the Resident Magistrate of Aliwal, North.

MOSHESH his mark ×

CHIEF MOSHESH, Bloemfontein, August 25, 1865.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

I THINK I shall best answer your letter of the 23rd by recalling to your recollection a few facts which are necessary to assist perception of the reasons which have rendered it imperative and unavoidable for the Free State to take up arms against the Basutos.

When I assumed office in February 1864 I wrote to you that nothing would give me greater pleasure than to see the people of the Free State and the Basutos live in amity with each other. I and my people acted up to our professions, and by deeds showed the sincerity of our professions. No act of aggression or other cause of complaint was given by my people. You also professed to be desirous of cultivating amicable relations between us. But what did you do to secure so great a blessing? It was my painful duty to complain, almost in every letter which I wrote to you, of the continual thefts committed by your people, and what redress was given by you? Promises, which were never fulfilled. Your people and chiefs encroached upon the boundary line, clearly laid down in the treaty of Aliwal, signed and sealed by you. All this was done under the pretext of a disputed boundary line. The Government of the Orange Free State would have been perfectly justified in maintaining by force the boundary line so clearly laid down in the treaty of Aliwal, and obtaining redress for the numerous thefts for which you had failed to give redress according to that treaty. But anxious to avoid an appeal to arms as long as it could be honourably done I suggested, and you consented, to leave the question of the boundary line to the ungratified decision of his Excellency the Governor. The decision of his Excellency was entirely in our favour. I at once gave notice to you of his Excellency's decision, and what did you do? Did you write to me at once saying that you would respect the line laid down by his Excellency? No, you would consult your Council; and it was not until the burghers, who I had called to the front to maintain the line, if necessary, by force, were on their march to the frontier, that you send me word that you will submit to his Excellency's decision; and it was not till my burghers were on the frontier that Malapo and Moperi wrote to me that they would withdraw from the line. To my mind it is now clear that the sad experience which I have gained of the character of the Basutos, that if they had not seen the large force which was ready to maintain our rights, they would still have been squatted on our side of the line, so clearly laid down in the treaty of Aliwal. About a month after the decision of his Excellency the Governor, your son-in-law, Lesoana, alias Magalanella, perpetrated several robberies, and destroyed and damaged several homesteads of our burghers. My desire to avoid recourse to arms, as long as I could possibly avoid it, induced me to write to you. You made most solemn promises, but these promises were never fulfilled, and the correspondence on that matter has taught me that the Basutos pay very little regard to the fulfilment of their promises, unless they are compelled to do so by the pressure of force. A short time after the robberies your son-in-law Lesoana's people fired upon one of our burghers. Our Government would have been fully justified in at once attacking and chastising him, but you promised redress, and prayed of me to settle the matter amicably. I acceded to your request. But how was your word kept? The correspondence shows how little regard you paid to what you promised. When at last, seeing that no other alternative was left but to punish Lesoana, according to treaty, I asked you whether you intended to abide by the treaty. No answer was given until after Lesoana had been put to flight. To protect the boundary line I was compelled to have a strong force on the frontier. To test the sincerity of the Basuto promises I withdrew the greater part; no sooner was this done than your brother, Paulus Moperi, presumed to imprison, beat, and carry away as prisoners burghers of the Free State from our own territory to Basutoland. This was an act of aggression which could not be tolerated. I demanded redress, and received no answer either from you or Moperi. I sent a second letter, to prevent any possible misunderstanding, for you always speak of peace, at the same time that acts of hostility are constantly carried on by your sons, your brothers, and your people. I stated that, unless redress was given within the appointed time for the violation of our territory, and the outrage committed on our burghers, it would be considered a declaration of war on your part. What was the answer? You gave no redress, and thereby accepted the alternative,—a declaration of war.

After Lesoana had been put to flight, I received two letters having reference to him, and which you pretended could not have been forwarded earlier, because hostilities had broken out between our Government and Lesoana, when it is notorious that your son Malapo sent a letter to our camp at Naamo Port of their letters in answer to my question—whether you would assist Lesoana? you write that you could not say whether you would assist him. Your son Tsekelo, whilst on a mission to Bloemfontein as your ambassador, perpetrated several robberies. What redress was given upon the complaints of the Chief, of your son and ambassador? A small part of the stolen property was returned, but the rest still remains in Basutoland! Your brother Bushuli committed continued depredations on our people; no redress was given; no stolen property returned. You now talk of restoring peace. I have always been and still am desirous of peace, but not peace in name; not a peace of professions, whilst the acts of your people are war; but a real and substantial peace, under which our burghers will be able to enjoy the fruits of their labour, and not be constantly subject to the depredation and annoyance which they have endured with so much forbearance for a very long time. Sad experience has, however, shown me that such a peace can only be procured by the sword. For I am convinced that we shall have no peace until the Basutos shall have been taught to respect the property of others, and not to appropriate what does not belong to them. After failing to obtain an amicable settlement of the many causes of complaint; after waiting in vain for the fulfilment of your promises, no other recourse was left to our Government than to vindicate our rights by the sword: Trusting in God, we took up arms in defence of our rights. The Lord blessed our arms and prospered our undertakings. Our people met the Basutos in fair and open fight. But how have your people acted in the matter of the raid in the Bloemfontein district? Amongst the most barbarous nations flags of truce are respected; but the Basutos, led by your son David Masorpa, were guilty of the most treacherous and dastardly conduct. Approaching the Bastards under the protection of white flags, they induced them to lay down their arms, and after partaking of the food which had been provided for them, they cruelly butchered defenceless men and innocent children. The same atrocious treachery was practised towards Botes, who was approached with a white flag, induced to lay down his arms, and then cruelly murdered. Again, Messrs. Pretorius and Smit, inhabitants of the S. A. Republic, whilst on their way home, were induced to come unarmed to the Basutos, who told them that no harm would be done to them, and then treacherously and cruelly murdered them. For this cold-blooded murder the President of the S. A. Republic writes to me, he has demanded satisfaction from you, and on your failure to do so, he will have recourse to arms. I have brought these facts to your notice to show the true character of the Basutos. It is a sad truth that there was and is no other way of securing the blessing of peace with the Basutos but through the means of war. If your people had abstained from acts of hostility and aggression, and you had given redress for the wrongs committed by them, you might still have enjoyed the blessing of peace; but it is sheer hypocrisy to be constantly talking of peace, and not to employ the means of securing its blessing; but on the contrary, to allow your sons, your brothers, and your people to rob and plunder, instead of compelling them to earn the fruits of honest labour. We have only taken up arms to teach the Basutos that their thefts and other acts of hostility will no longer be tolerated. If you wish for peace I am willing to grant it upon the hereunto annexed terms and conditions; you will have three hours to consider. If after that time the required answer and hostages are not given, then the armistice is at an end, and hostilities will be resumed.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

The terms and conditions upon which I am willing to grant peace, are as follows.

The President of the Orange Free State.
(Signed) J. H. BRAND.

TERMS and CONDITIONS upon which the Government of the Orange Free State is willing to make Peace with the Basutos, in consequence of Moshesh's applications, dated Thaba Bosigo 1865 (23d August).

Article 1.—The Chief Moshesh and the Basutos at present on Thaba Bosigo are to evacuate Thaba Bosigo forthwith, and to deliver up to the General in command of the Free State Army before Thaba Bosigo all the arms and ammunition of war which are there. Thaba Bosigo to be in future occupied by a Free State magistrate, with followers, under whose supervision the Chief of the Basutos will in future govern his people.

Article 2.—The Chief Moshesh to pay to Government of the Orange Free State within four days of the delivery of this letter 10,000 head of cattle and 5,000 horses, in satisfaction of the expenses of the war.

Article 3.—The Chief Moshesh to deliver within the said four days 60,000 sheep and 30,000 head of cattle, as compensation for the robberies and damage done by his people both before and after the war.

Article 4.—The land conquered by General Fick and Provisional General Wissener from the Basutos and proclaimed as Free State territory, to be annexed to the Free State, and the boundary line between Basuto land and the Free State to be in future as follows:—from the Natal beacon along the Caledon River to within three miles to the east of Letsia's new town, and from there in a straight line to Bamboos to the east of Pampoen Sprint.

Article 5.—The Chief Moshesh to reply within three hours after the delivery of my letter conveying these conditions, whether he be willing to submit to these conditions, and to send that answer by two of his principal sons known to me, who shall remain as hostages until the treaty of peace shall have been signed, and if within the said three hours the said answer and hostages are not in the Free State lager near to Thaba Bosigo, then the armistice granted by General Fick will at once cease, and the war be carried on with vigour and energy.

GREAT CHIEF,

I HAVE received your letter of the 29th August, in which you acquaint me of your present position, and the conditions on which alone the Government of the Orange Free State will be prepared to make peace with you, and request that I will become a mediator with that Government on your behalf, as the terms are so severe that it is out of your power to comply with them.

It is with very great regret that I have heard of the misery and distress to which your tribe have been exposed by hostilities which might, in my opinion, have been averted by better management, on both sides, and by which I have little hope that the permanent peace of the country will be promoted.

But I feel that it is impracticable for this Government at the present juncture to interpose in any manner between yourself and the Free State with any propriety, or with any prospect of a good result to either party.

And the less so, because, while informing me that you cannot comply with the President's terms, you give me no intimation of the concessions you would really be prepared to make for the purpose of securing peace.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

I must also remind you that so far as I am informed you have not taken any decisive steps for making reparation to the Government of Natal for the unlawful inroad of Letsoane, or for punishing that Chief. So long as this is the case you cannot justly expect me to place faith in your professions of desire to fulfil all the obligations of a faithful ally of the British Government. Your conduct in this respect is the more remarkable, as you must be fully aware that it is through the misconduct of this man, and your neglect to take energetic steps for checking him, that you have been drawn into the war with the Free State, from which you are now suffering so heavily.

I do not suppose that in your present position you are yourself able to act against him, but your son Molapo is apparently free to act at his own pleasure. He has professed his great desire to show his attachment to the British Government, and it will be well for you to direct him to do so, by proceeding at once to execute judgment on Letsoane. With this explanation I have only to assure you that whenever circumstances will really admit of it, I shall be most willing to assist to the best of my ability in the restoration of peace.

I am, &c.

The Great Chief Moshesh. (Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE.

SIR, Thaba Bosigo, September 18, 1865.

I RECEIVED your letter dated 26th August, demanding 10,000 fully grown cattle or an equivalent in sheep, in whole or in part, at the rate of five sheep for each bullock. I beg to state that the cattle stolen from the Natal territory have been restored to that Government. I have already given myself and whole of my country into the hands of the Queen's Government.

Your Excellency may therefore consider the whole of the Basutoland under your jurisdiction, to deal with us, and the compensation demanded according to your Excellency's discretion.

I have, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir P. E. WODEHOUSE, K.C.B., to the Right Hon. EDWARD CARDWELL, M.P.

(No. 6.) Government House, Cape Town, January 13, 1866.

SIR, (Answered, No. 21, March 9, 1866, page 84.)

I HOPE you will allow me to call the particular attention of Her Majesty's Government to those passages in the letters of the Basuto Chiefs,* forwarded with my Despatch, No. 4, of the 11th instant, in which they most beg that I will yield to their repeated solicitations, that their tribe may be taken under the immediate authority of the Queen, as the sole chance of preserving them from internal confusion and distress, and ensuring prolonged peace between themselves and the people of the Free State, after the present war has by some means been brought to a close.

* Vide Appendix, p. 133.

I have learned from Mr. Burnet that these solicitations are perfectly sincere, and in harmony with the general wish of the people of the Tribe. I have also clear evidence that such an arrangement would be acceptable to the French Protestant Missionaries, who have so long lived among them, and who regard the establishment of our rule as very desirable. And as my own opinion is, that by accepting their offered allegiance we should do great good, not only to the Basutos, but to all these regions, I will endeavour to explain the grounds of that opinion, and the mode in which, if fully authorized, I should propose to give effect to it.

To take first the position of the Free State, you are aware that in 1854 Her Majesty's Government strongly impressed with the difficulties it had had to contend with in administering the affairs of the Orange River Territory,—not sufficiently appreciating its possible value, and alarmed at the prospect of having to maintain an expensive military force,—resolved to release the people of the territory from their allegiance, and to encourage the establishment of the small republic now existing, with which they entered into a formal convention. This step gave great dissatisfaction here at the time; and it may now fairly be questioned if the British Government, acting under the pressure of immediate evils, gave sufficient thought to the embarrassments that might arise out of setting up, in immediate proximity to ourselves and the Native Tribes, a small independent state, peopled by the nearest kinsmen of the Cape Colonists, possessing their warmest sympathies, perfectly independent of the Cape Government, excessively weak in itself, and yet almost certain to cause as much inconvenience whenever it should please to come to an issue with the Natives around. The practical result has been the establishment of an exceedingly weak Government, of which the executive Head is completely under the control of the legislative body, and which has failed to acquire the respect of the Native tribes. Under these circumstances it has been unable to afford ordinary protection to its own people, or to repel the desultory incursions of its numerous neighbours, the Basutos.

Repeated disputes have occurred between them, productive of bitter animosity, and causing at last this most miserable war, which bids fair to close with no better result than the impoverishment of both races, and the prospect of its renewal when, after the lapse of a few years, one of the parties may think itself strong enough to attempt the destruction of its neighbour. These wars have the most depressing effect, not only on the belligerents themselves, but on the people of these Colonies, who have such intimate domestic and commercial relations with them. The Basutos, on the other hand, have for many years past been increasing in wealth and numbers, and to some extent advancing in civilization under the chieftainship of Moshesh and the training of the French Protestant Missionaries. But Moshesh is now very old, his bodily and mental energies are undoubtedly failing, and his influence is no longer so beneficially exerted. In anticipation of his death the tribe is split up into sections under the leading Chiefs, of whom the two principals are his sons, Letsia and Molapo, between whom intense jealousy exists. The country which they occupy is equal, if not superior, to any in this part of the world; much of it is highly cultivated; and although some of the people are, as might be expected, addicted to cattle stealing, still I have no doubt that under proper guidance they could speedily be brought to order, and induced to apply themselves industriously to the cultivation of their farms. Some of the Chiefs do in sincerity regard the cattle thefts committed by their people with much displeasure, and would gladly aid in putting down practices by which they are themselves frequently involved in trouble. They are, moreover, fully alive to the peril in which they will be placed, when broken up on the death of Moshesh, of being destroyed in detail by the Free State.

You will readily believe that I have of late given the affairs of these countries constant attention, and that I would not lightly put before you my conviction; that both our duty and our interest alike prescribe that we should accede to the wishes of the Basuto Chiefs, whenever the state of their relations with the Free State will allow of our intervention without giving offence to that Government. And my belief is, that so soon as the latter shall be forced to admit the expediency of concluding peace, its people will be glad to witness the establishment of a state of things affording them hopes of freedom from Basuto depredations, and a prospect of being able to cultivate their lands in peace for the future.

I do not anticipate that this change would necessitate any expenditure of British treasure or the employment of British troops. If our authority were established at the desire of the Chiefs and people themselves (and in no other form should it be attempted), they could with the greatest ease provide funds sufficient for the payment of the two or three Magistrates or Residents that would be required, with such a small body of Native police as would, with the help of the Chiefs, guarantee a due respect being shown to their authority. Both Chiefs and people might be made clearly to understand, that we came there for their benefit, and that if they failed either to provide for our establishment, or to obey the orders of our officers, our protection would at once be withdrawn, and they would be left to suffer the consequences of their own folly.

It would of course be desirable, at any rate for the present, to interfere as little as possible with any Native rights and customs now existing, and to trust to the effects of time and good management for the gradual introduction of improvements; and therefore, if I should be fortunate enough to gain your approval of these proposals, I should recommend that the country should not be declared to form part of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope and be thus rendered subject to its laws; but that the people should be accepted as Her Majesty's subjects, and be placed for the present under the authority of the High Commissioner.

I shall be glad to be favoured with an early reply to this Despatch, and if before its receipt I should be forced by circumstances into dealing with these questions, I shall take care to declare very distinctly that the arrangements must be wholly contingent on the approval of Her Majesty's Government, and, fortified with that approval, I should hope to win the ready acquiescence of the Cape Parliament in a measure calculated to advance the well-being of a large Native tribe, to afford protection to their kinsmen in the Free State, to promote tranquillity among all the Native tribes, and to afford the best security for the improvement of the countries on our border, and the safe development of our commercial intercourse with their inhabitants. CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir P. E. WODEHOUSE, K.C.B., to his Grace the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(No. 41.)

Government House, Cape Town, May 3, 1867.

MY LORD DUKE, (Answered, No. 78, December 9, 1867, page 86.)

I HAVE had the honour of receiving Lord Carnarvon's Despatch, No. 38,* of the 9th January last, acquainting me that his Lordship was in expectation of learning my opinion on the offer which Moshesh had made to the Government of Natal of the cession of the whole of his territory, with a view to its annexation to that Colony. * Page 86.

In reply, I beg to inform your Grace that on the receipt from the Lieut.-Governor of Natal of intelligence that Moshesh had made this offer, I replied at once that the proposal could not in any shape be entertained, on account of the very decided intimations that had been conveyed to me of the disinclination of Her Majesty's Government to countenance any steps in that direction.

It will be seen from the correspondence that has passed during the last few years that I have on different occasions expressed the opinion that with a view to the peace and welfare of South Africa we ought to take advantage, to such extent as might be deemed prudent, of the overtures made by Moshesh to the British Government, in the substantial good faith of which I placed much reliance. I should even have advocated our receiving the Chief and his tribe as subjects of Her Majesty on well considered conditions; but Mr. Cardwell thought it prudent to limit the arrangement to the appointment of a British officer to reside with Moshesh, and to act as an adviser and mediator for the settlement of disputes with his neighbours. Even this permission was, however, on his accession to office, withdrawn by Lord Carnarvon, who, in his Despatch, No. 3,† of the 25th July last, desired me to abstain from such an appointment if I could do so without any breach of faith with Moshesh. † Page 85.

It is probable that Moshesh made his last overture to Natal only because he had entirely failed in his overtures to me. He has hitherto been accustomed to regard the Governor of the Cape and High Commissioner as the paramount British functionary representing Her Majesty in South Africa; and it is not desirable to encourage any negotiation tending to raise doubts on that point.

In conclusion, I have only to observe that circumstances may again afford an opening for effecting an arrangement with Moshesh, and that I am still of opinion we ought in that case to take advantage of it.

SIR, (Answered, No. 3, July 25, 1866, page 85.)

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch, No. 21,* of the 9th March last, acquainting me that while you are highly favourable to the exertion of moral authority for the establishment and maintenance of peace between the Free State and the Basutos, you are not prepared to authorize compliance with the request of the latter that they may be taken under the immediate authority of the Queen. * Page 84.

Enclosure in No. 7.

YOUR EXCELLENCY, Aliwal North, April 5, 1866.

I WAS requested by the Chief Letsia the day previous to my leaving Morija, about the end of February, to write to your Excellency in his name. The hurry of my expulsion and removal hither, together with an ophthalmic attack, must plead my excuse for my long delay in communicating the Chief's message.

He desired first to thank your Excellency for your letter addressed to him in January last. He wished your Excellency to know that he himself attempted to chastise Lesaoana for the Natal raid by eating him up. But the endeavour was only partially successful, Lesaoana having fled and dispersed his cattle in the mountains. The few hundred heads he was enabled with difficulty to capture have with others been sent with George Thlali Moshesh to Natal, George having authority to make an offer of land to the Natal Government as an equivalent for the remainder of its claim, which under present circumstances it is so difficult otherwise to arrange.

Letsie pressed me above all to entreat your Excellency again to plead the cause of the tribe with Her Majesty Queen Victoria, begging that Her Majesty's rule and protection might at the conclusion of this war at least be extended over them. He promises in the name of all the Chiefs and people of the tribe that they will be Her Majesty's most faithful and obedient subjects, and declares that he sees no prospect of order otherwise being restored in the country by the Basuto Chiefs as independent Chiefs, after a war conducted with objects like the present.

He begs that your Excellency will take the case of the expelled missionaries into your kind consideration, and exert your friendly offices in their behalf in any manner that you may consider expedient and good, as he is convinced of their teaching being such as may elevate the Basutos, make them honest men, and good subjects, and that the Gospel, though he has not accepted it as his rule of life, does teach men the only way of salvation.

Lastly. Letsie begs your Excellency to consider kindly and earnestly the position of the Basutos, a people who have for many years endeavoured to cultivate the friendship of Government and solicited to be placed in some manner or other under Her Majesty's rule,—a weak and badly armed people, cut off from military supplies, and who, in a warfare the waging, mode, and continuation of which your Excellency has been understood to deprecate, and which is being attempted to be pushed to almost unprecedented extremities, if not absolute extermination, now find themselves in this disadvantageous position, attacked on all sides by tribes and peoples who are either Her Majesty's own subjects or profess allegiance more or less to Her Government, or who depend on Her Government to enable them to procure the means of waging this war on the Basutos, viz., by the Free State and Trans Vaal, by Adam Kok, who claims to be under Her Majesty's protection, by parties of colonists from the Cape Colony and Natal, by yet larger contingents of Fingoes, Bathlokoas, and others from the Aliwal Native Reserve, who have repeatedly and continuously from the commencement of the war until now been engaged in the war, and who with other colonial volunteers have been formed into separate corps, at one time amounting to some 800 or 900 together, and who have come and gone and come and gone again, pouring into Basutoland and retiring after a course of rapine and desolation, safe with their booty, of which no part has ever been returned to the Basutos, neither is it believed have the perpetrators of these outrages been punished in accordance with your Excellency's proclamation.

Letsie remarked that he was sorry your Excellency had not yet replied to the part of his letter alluding to the repeated raids from the Reserve. To assure your Excellency that his complaints are indeed well founded and worthy of investigation and redress, he has desired me to indicate and to mention some correspondence which he has had with Mr. Austin, the Superintendent of the Native Reserve, on the subject, only I am sorry that, owing to my having felt myself obliged to destroy my papers and correspondence and all memoranda which could have assisted me, I am obliged to trust to memory regarding these matters. At the commencement of the war a body of Fingoes left the Reserve in consequence of the capture by Basutos of some stock of other Fingoes then resident in the Free State. This party was engaged in the taking of Vechtkop, where so many Basuto women were killed. The same party with another large one again joined the Free State army and were engaged in the war for many months. Again a very large body of Fingoes and Bathlokoas joined the Free State forces in the attack upon Morosi, and are believed to have been present when the cattle and horses belonging to the missionaries of Bethesda were carried away by the Volunteer Corps in the service of the Free State. It is believed that the booty made in so many raids and expeditions was taken in the Reserve. Letsie wrote to Mr. Austen, complaining of many of these raids, and mentioning the names of some of the Fingoes and Bathlokoa Chiefs implicated. Mr. Austen answered that, as your Excellency had not yet answered the Chief Letsie on these subjects, he could not himself answer. Unofficially, however, he mentioned that he had already decided on expelling the Bathlokoas, but that the Chief Monayamane and his party were not under his, but under the Free State's authority, so that Letsie complains that the expulsion decided upon by Mr. Austen is no redress to the Basutos, and affords them no compensation for the immense losses and destruction inflicted upon them. Letsie implicitly trusts in your Excellency's justice, and that your Excellency will do all in your power to redress as much of these injuries as are not irreparable, and to cause at least the restoration of the plundered property, consisting in cattle and corn.

The Chief Adam Kok has also attacked the Basutos and taken thousands of cattle, horses, &c. Letsie requests your Excellency to inform him how he ought to proceed in obtaining redress, and whether your Excellency will procure it for him, or allow him to seek it by force or otherwise.

The Chief Letsie sends to your Excellency his most humble and sincere salutations, and I also beg of your Excellency to believe me of your Excellency's the humble and obedient servant,

To his Excellency Sir P. E. Wodehouse, K.C.B., High Commissioner.

(Signed) A. MABILLE.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, April 23, 1866.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th inst., written at the request of the Chief Letsie, and I shall be obliged if you would avail yourself of any convenient opportunity for transmitting to him the following reply.

I most sincerely deplore the losses and miseries to which the Basutos have been subjected during the late war; and shall rejoice if, even at the cost of the large sacrifices it has entailed upon them, they should succeed in establishing a permanent peace.

I am not at liberty to hold out the expectation that Her Majesty will consent to receive the tribe as Her subjects, but can assure them that the British Government will be most ready to assist in preserving order and promoting their prosperity in their present state of independence, and they will be much disposed, in the event of its being found practicable, to make a satisfactory arrangement to appoint an officer to reside with them, who should become the channel of communication with this Government, who should advise them in the conduct of their affairs, and who should make it his chief business to preserve amicable relations between them and the Free State, by the discouragement of all disorderly practices on the Border.

It will be well for Letsie to inform me whether the tribe will be prepared to make any and what contribution towards the maintenance of such an officer, by assigning a tract of land for his use, or by such other means as may be convenient to them.

You will assure the Chief that from the very commencement of hostilities to their close I have done all that lay in my power to prevent any people of this Colony, Europeans or natives, from joining in the war, and I have reason to believe that, although some did at first transgress the orders given, the efforts of the Government had for some time past greatly checked their lawless proceedings. If Letsie is in a position to substantiate such acts against any particular individuals inquiry shall be made, although I see little reason to anticipate any important results now that the hostilities have been brought to a close.

This Government has no desire to shelter Adam Kok from the consequences of any acts of aggression towards the Basutos of which he may have been guilty.

I am very glad to learn that Letsie attaches so much value to the presence with his people of the French Missionaries, of whose most beneficial influence it is impossible to entertain any doubt. All must sympathise with them in the distress and trouble to which they have been exposed. But we may allow ourselves to hope that on the conclusion of the present peace, and perhaps with the support of such an appointment on the part of this Government as I have suggested, they may yet be encouraged to persevere in their labours in that part of Basutoland which is still left to the tribe.

I have, &c.

MY LORD DUKE, (Answered No. 78, December 9th, 1867, page 86.)

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Grace that I have received two communications of the 6th August and the 9th instant (of the latter of which I enclose a copy) from the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, relative to the prospect of a renewal of hostilities between the Free State and the Basutos; and the overtures again made by the Chief Moshesh, with a view to the annexation of his country to the Colony of Natal, or, failing that, to the modification of that portion of our treaties with the Boer Republics which compels us to allow free trade in ammunition to them and to withhold it from the Basutos.

With regard to the former of these proposals I must refer your Grace to my Despatch, No. 41,* of the 3rd May last; and will merely add that if an opportunity should offer for establishing closer relations with the Basutos, it would be right, with reference to our general policy, to bring them under the control of the Governor of the Cape or High Commissioner, rather than under that of the Natal Government.

Encl. 1 in No. 8.

SIR, Government House, Natal, September 9, 1867.

IN my letter of the 6th ult., in which I forwarded for your Excellency's information copies of letters with enclosures from the Resident Magistrate at Ladysmith to the Secretary for Native Affairs, and also a memorial from certain residents in Pietermaritzburg on the subject of the existing relations between the Orange Free State and the Basutos, and of their probable effects upon this Colony, I stated that I was not inclined to attach undue importance to the rumours, inasmuch as they were only rumours, of the movements and the intentions of the Basutos which reached me through that correspondence. Since I despatched that letter a messenger accredited to this Government by the Chief Moshesh arrived in this town, and from his lips the Secretary for Native Affairs took down and translated into English the statements contained in the document of which I have now the honour to enclose a copy, and which appear to me to place the matter in a much more serious light. I forward also herewith copies of the reply, which with the concurrence of my Executive Council I have returned to this message, and of a communication on the subject which I have addressed to the President of the Orange Free State.

2. In sending this message Moshesh evidently wished and intended to give this Government to understand that upon its reply would depend in great measure the course of action, especially as regards this Colony, which he and his nation would adopt in their present dispute with the Free State. The alternative proposals made therein are practically such as cannot be accepted, even if this Government had the will and power to accede to either of them. With regard to the first your Excellency reminded me in your letter of the 26th of June last that Her Majesty's Government had expressed a decided disinclination to assent to a former request made by Moshesh to be received as a British subject, and you stated that you held yourself therefore to be precluded from giving him any encouragement to persevere in his applications. Judging after the event, it seems certainly very possible that a different policy might have averted the present complications, for it would have prevented the annexation of a portion of Basutoland to the Free State, which is mainly the cause of them. This is in fact the new element of danger to the peace and safety of this Colony, and it is generally thought here to be the direct result of the decision arrived at by Her Majesty's Government. However this may be, it is clear that this annexation, be it nominal or real, puts a new difficulty in the way of a reconsideration of that decision. Moshesh in his present overtures evidently meant to include in his renewed offer of his country to the British Crown that division of it which is now, ostensibly at least, part of the dominions of the Orange Free State, otherwise his son Letsia, with whom, as has been officially notified to your Excellency, and to myself by the President of the Free State, a treaty for its cession has been concluded, would not have joined in the offer. With regard to the second proposition, we are, as your Excellency has also pointed out to me, in this anomalous position, that though we profess and maintain in other respects complete neutrality, we have bound ourselves by treaty to facilitate the purchase of warlike stores by the two South African republics, but to prohibit their sale to the native tribes with which they are constantly at war.

3. So far as I am able with my short experience to form an opinion on the subject, it seems to me that it will be no easy matter for the Free State Boers to occupy and settle the country which they profess to have conquered and annexed. The perpetual border warfare which, if no measures are taken to arrest it, must ensue from their endeavours to carry out their object, and especially from the temper and spirit in which they appear to make them, will have, I fear, a very prejudicial effect upon the progress of this Colony. It will stand in the way of anything like extended immigration from Europe, it will ruin the Overberg trade, which is of such paramount importance to us, and it must check the introduction of capital for the formation of railways, the opening out and working of our coal fields, and for the development generally of the latent resources of the Colony. It will render necessary too in all probability the establishment of a border force, the expense of which, as well as of any movement it may occasion of the regular troops, the Colony in its present position can ill afford. In the event of a fresh raid into Natal similar to and from the same causes as that which took place in 1865, namely, for the purpose of making reprisals on those Boers who possess lands in Natal as well as in the Free State, and who are in the habit of driving their cattle into the former, either for change of pasture or for presumed safety from their Basuto enemies, it seems to me that as matters now stand there would be but two courses open to this Colony to pursue: either at a heavy outlay to make an attack upon the Basutos, many of whom are, nominally at least, subjects of a friendly state; or to apply to the Free State for redress which it would be unable to afford. In the former case the Basutos would retire with their cattle to the mountains, which, I am informed, they have fortified in many places in such a manner as to be impregnable to a Boer force; in the latter the Free State would be compelled to confess its inability to control its subjects and prevent them from attacking us.

4. On the other hand it would certainly not be expedient on general grounds of policy, however anomalous our position in this respect may be, to make any alterations, at least in the sense demanded by Moshesh, in the laws or conventions by which the supply of munitions of war to powers beyond our border is regulated. To do so would be equivalent to taking measures for arming the native against the white man, whose prestige, as such, it would be dangerous to diminish, and this not for purposes of defence, for which I presume, whether subsequently misused or not, the provision in favour of the two Republics were originally made, but of attack.

5. But there is another aspect of the question to which I am very anxious to draw your Excellency's attention. Since the Basuto raid into Natal took place in July 1865, the relations between the native tribes in this Colony and their neighbours, the Basutos, have undergone a very great change. In consequence of some observations touching upon this fact, which were made by the Secretary for Native affairs, when the matter was under discussion in my Executive Council, I requested that officer to furnish me with a statement in writing of what had come to his knowledge in this respect, and I forward herewith a copy of his memorandum on the subject. The traditional contempt of the Zulu for the Basuto appears to have given way to a feeling of sympathy with him for what he considers to be his unjust treatment by the Free State. The manner in which this has come about and its bearing upon the points at issue are very clearly set forth in Mr. Shepstone's memorandum.

6. Under all these perplexing circumstances it became, as I thought, incumbent upon me, before framing a reply to the message of Moshesh, to consider by what, if any, course of action the consequences might be averted which a mere refusal of the proposals contained in it would entail upon the Colony. In the letter which your Excellency addressed on the 20th June last to the President of the Orange Free State, and which you communicated to me on the 26th of the same month, it is pointed out that the large acquisitions of territory and population made by the Free State tend to produce such important changes in the political position of the several powers in this part of South Africa as will fully warrant a claim on the part of the British Government of a right to reconsider the bearings of the convention entered into with the Orange Free State on the 23d February 1854. The concluding words of the memorial which I had the honour to forward to your Excellency by last mail give expression to the feeling, generally prevalent in Natal at the present moment, that impartial mediation between the two States holds out the only hope of preventing a protracted and desolating war near the frontiers of this and of the Cape Colony. I thought myself justified, therefore, in throwing out the suggestion contained in my reply to Moshesh, and in the letter I have addressed to the President of the Free State, that an escape from the difficulties of the situation might be found in a fair adjustment of the boundary line between the two States. I am given to understand that among the more thoughtful portion of the Free State a conviction is spreading that though annexation was, according to their views, a necessity of their position, and must be carried out at any sacrifice, the appropriation of so large a part of their enemy's territory is a source of difficulty and weakness to them. The time may therefore possibly not be ill-chosen for negotiations should your Excellency on a full inquiry into all the circumstances of the case be inclined to take the same views of it as I have done, and approve of the course I have adopted in the somewhat embarrassing position in which I have been placed.

7. I have added to the enclosures transmitted herewith for your Excellency's information a copy of the latest communication I have received from our own officer on the frontier.

I have, &c.

STATEMENT of MAKOTOKO, CONFIDENTIAL MESSENGER, from the CHIEFS MOSHESH and LETSEA, August 19, 1867.

I AM sent by Moshesh, Chief of the Basutu people, and by Letsea, his eldest son, because I am known to the members of the Government of Natal to have been heretofore entrusted with confidential communications to them, and because, although the writing of a letter may be more precise, letters have not been productive of any good effect, and the Chiefs hope that the urging of their wishes, by the person authorized to lay them before the Government, may secure a more earnest and favourable consideration than a letter which speaks but the words figured on it, and is silent.

Moshesh and his son beg to repeat in the name of the whole Basuto people the strong request they have more than once already made both by letter and by verbal communication, that they and their people and their country may be received by and be made to belong to Her Majesty the Queen of England, and be attached to the Colony of Natal; to occupy the same position with regard to the Government of Natal, and to pay the same taxes as the Native Chiefs and tribes already living in Natal, and to be presided over by a magistrate or other officer appointed by the Government of Natal to live for that purpose in Basutoland.

Moshesh and Letsea are aware that it has hitherto been the policy of the British Government to discourage and as far as possible to prevent bloodshed, and they beg to represent that unless this policy is exerted in the direction pointed out by their earnest request they see no future but bloodshed and dispersion and extermination. The relations between the Basutos and the Orange Free State are such as must lead to these results sooner or later, and nothing but a compliance with their request will or can prevent them.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

But if the Government of Natal and that of Her Majesty will not grant this their earnest and sincere prayer, then I am directed to urge another. The Orange Free State and the Basuto nation are both on friendly terms with the British Government. When the first two quarrel and go to war the latter professes to be entirely neutral, and proclamations of neutrality are issued by the Governors of the Cape and Natal Colonies. In spite of these proclamations we find opposed to us in arms, subjects of Natal and the Cape; it may be said that these are disobedient subjects and go of their own personal wish against the orders of their respective Governors, and this may be true, but there is a matter in which the two Governments act. Our enemies in time of war are supplied with arms and ammunition to any extent they may require and may be able to purchase, while we are not allowed to purchase any either in time of peace or war; surely this is not neutrality. If the British Government will not receive us and our country, or will not interpose to save us from destruction, if it looks upon us and the people of the Orange Free State equally as friends and children, although erring and wayward, and that therefore we should be left to punish each other, let it not supply arms and ammunition to one side and withhold them from the other, but let both have an equal chance, and if the Basutos must perish let them perish defending themselves with means to procure which they are allowed the same facilities as their enemies from a neutral source.

Made to me,
(Signed) T. SHEPSTONE,
Secretary, N.A.

REPLY of the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR of NATAL to the MESSAGE brought from MOSHESH by the Confidential Messenger, Makatoko, and reduced to writing on the 19th August 1867.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Natal has received and taken into his careful consideration the message from the Chief Moshesh and his son Letsea, delivered by his confidential messenger Makatoko.

He has also received a notification made to himself and to his Excellency the High Commissioner by the Government of the Orange Free State to the effect that Letsea and his people have been received by that Government as subjects, and that they now occupy that position with regard to the Orange Free State. The Lieutenant-Governor finds it difficult to reconcile the overtures made by Letsea in the message now under reply with that position; he must therefore receive it as coming from Moshesh alone in his capacity of paramount Chief over such of the Basuto people as still retain their independence of the Orange Free State Government.

With regard to the first part of Moshesh's message, the Lieutenant-Governor finds, upon reference to former correspondence, that the request it contains was forwarded to his Excellency the High Commissioner last year, and that the decision thereupon was communicated verbally to Paulus Mopeli, and, by letter dated 10th October 1866, to the Chief Moshesh himself.

This decision was adverse to the wishes of the Basuto Chiefs and people, but it was arrived at no doubt after a full consideration of the interests of all parties concerned at that particular time.

Her Majesty's High Commissioner is the only authority in South Africa empowered to decide such a question; it has been decided by him, and this Government has no power to alter that decision. It can, however, again represent to him the renewal of the application by the Chief Moshesh and the alternative request which that Chief has made; this it will do by the first opportunity, accompanied by such an expression of the views of this Government as may appear necessary to place the High Commissioner in possession of the real state of the question in its present aspect.

The alternative request put forward by Moshesh is, however, of so serious a nature, and involves such grave consequences on all sides, that its utterance has caused the Lieutenant-Governor to look into the matter at issue between the Basuto people and the Government of the Orange Free State so far as a knowledge of the circumstances capable of being gathered in this Colony has enabled him to do, and he has come to the conclusion that a fair adjustment of the boundary line between the two parties would render the discussion of this request unnecessary by establishing the peace of the country on a permanent basis.

The appointment of a British officer to reside in Basutoland might tend to prevent future misunderstanding, but this involves a question of expenditure, and the decision upon it as well as upon everything connected with the subjects embraced in Moshesh's message belong so entirely to the functions of Her Majesty's High Commissioner that this Government can do no more than recommend the whole of them to his earnest consideration, and the Lieutenant-Governor feels sure that they will receive that full attention which the altered circumstances of the case require, and which the High Commissioner's strong desire to maintain the peace of the country will urge his Excellency to bestow on them.

The Lieutenant-Governor will also in the meanwhile communicate with the Orange Free State on the matter.

The maintenance of peace between neighbouring Governments is absolutely necessary to the well-being and progress of both, and Moshesh is well aware of this from the past experience of himself and his people. The Lieutenant-Governor of Natal therefore feels assured that no exertion will be spared by Moshesh to bring about an equitable adjustment of the matters in dispute, and thus avoid a recourse to hostilities which, whatever may be the issue, must prove calamitous to all concerned, and he has every hope that the appeal now made to Her Majesty's High Commissioner will be productive of much good.

Cape of Good Hope and Natal.

Sir, Government House, Natal, August 31, 1867.

The matter now at issue between the Government of the Orange Free State and the Basuto nation is of a nature to threaten grave consequences to this Colony as well as to the two countries most concerned. It will not surprise your Honour, therefore, to learn that the subject has occupied the earnest attention of this Government. The state of affairs upon the borders of the Colony has in fact been brought prominently under my notice by the receipt of a message from the Chief Moshesh, the purport and object of which is to urge upon this Government the necessity for its own sake of taking such measures as may be within its power to discourage and prevent the bloodshed which the Chief foresees must ensue sooner or later if the relations between the Basutos and the Orange River Free State remain in their present condition.

Upon a full consideration of all the circumstances of the case, and after taking the opinion and advice of my Executive Council, I have come to the conclusion that a fair adjustment of the boundary line between the Orange River Free State and the Basutos would be the surest means of establishing the peace of the country upon a permanent basis. This opinion I have communicated to Moshesh, and I shall take the earliest opportunity of recommending it to the serious consideration of Her Majesty's High Commissioner, with whom alone it rests to deal authoritatively in the matter as far as British interests are concerned. In the meantime I have thought it right and becoming to acquaint your Honour with the steps I am taking. I throw out this suggestion to all parties in the hope that it may furnish an opportunity for opening negotiations which will lead to mutual understanding and amicable arrangement between your Government and the Basuto Chiefs. The maintenance of peace and order between and on the confines of the three countries of Natal, the Free State, and Basutoland, are indispensable to the well-being of all three. If the exertions of all three are earnestly directed to that end a way may surely be found for bringing about an equitable adjustment of the matters now in dispute between two of them, and for avoiding, not only for the present but for all future time, a recourse to hostilities which, whatever the event, must prove calamitous to all parties concerned.

I have, &c.

His Honour the President of the Orange Free State. (Signed) Robt. W. Keate, Lieut.-Governor.

Memorandum.

Office of Secretary for Native Affairs, August 26, 1867.

The message from Moshesh, dated the 19th instant, requires to be considered in connexion with the events which have occurred during the last two years, and the effects of those events upon this Colony. Up to the month of July 1865, when the Basuto raid into Natal took place, communication between this Government and the Basuto Chiefs had very seldom taken place, and had usually been confined to the exchange of ordinary civilities and compliments, while that between the two populations, except as regards a few of our Border Tribes, was of no account; the general populations knew little of each other, and the inhabitants of Natal felt a traditional contempt for Basuto prowess. Even the advantage gained by the latter in its encounter with British troops in 1852, and in the war with the Orange Free State, which preceded the last, did not remove this contempt, for they attribute the first to a reckless dash which led the British troops to despise the number of their enemies, and the latter to the want of organization on the part of the people of the Free State to continue the war. They say, where all are Chiefs, no general war can be carried on. Their Zulu training had taught them this lesson. The real contact of this Colony and its inhabitants with the Basutos commenced a little more than two years ago by the raid already alluded to, which arose out of the geographical and political position of Natal with regard to both the Orange Free State and the Basutos, during the war which then existed between them.

This raid was followed by frequent communications with the Basuto Chiefs, carried on by means of verbal messages and letters, but fortunately the Government of Natal had stationed an officer on the border, empowered to receive such communications, so that the bearers of them did not traverse the Colony to reach the seat of Government. Contact with our native population was therefore to a great extent avoided, and the universal cry of the latter was to be led against the Basutos to avenge the insult inflicted by the raid, and this cry was in unison with and encouraged by the feelings and expressions of the white population generally. A severe famine in Basutoland was produced by the effects of the war, and the prospect of this led the Basuto Chiefs to submit to a peace which every one who had observed the events of the war saw at once was hollow and incapable of being maintained.

This famine caused thousands of Basutos to enter the Colony, to exchange horses and cattle with our natives for grain, which they took back with them to their starving families. Numbers also traversed the country, some to seek employment with white colonists, others with our natives and native Chiefs, so that there is scarcely a native Chief of any standing who has not been entertaining a Basuto visitor of more or less influence in his own country. It is not too much to assume that these visitors, if even uninstructed by their own Chiefs, are strong advocates for their own side, and that their presence would cause the universal discussion of Basuto politics, strongly tinged with a Basuto colouring. The result of this is that an impression has been created on the minds of our native population that the Basutos have been unjustly treated by the Orange Free State, and that the insincerity of the conduct of the Basuto Chiefs is justified by that treatment. It is not necessary to discuss whether this impression is right or not, but that it exists is undoubted, and this feeling of sympathy is much heightened by the knowledge, which the Basutos have taken care to circulate among the Chiefs, that they are anxious to become their fellow subjects under the Government of Natal.

Several of the Chiefs have been to me to urge that one or the other of the Basuto requests should be granted by the Government, and that a refusal of both will be equal to a declaration of our making common cause with the Orange Free State against Moshesh. They do not understand that our laws are incapable of being broken or suspended by the Governor; they look upon such a plea as idle, and the adverse decision of Her Majesty's High Commissioner to the application to admit the Basutos as British subjects under Natal they believe to arise from jealousy, because he is the Governor of the neighbouring Colony.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL,

They accept explanations to the contrary with apparent deference, but it is easy to see that they do not accept them as conveying the whole truth.

These grotesque and unfounded assumptions are of course the result of ignorance of the principles by which we are guided, but they have an effect upon ignorant minds which requires to be taken into account in considering such questions as those involved in Moshesh's message. The inference to be drawn from these facts is, that we occupy a different position with regard to the Basutos now to what we did two years ago.

I see no reason to suppose that any disloyalty on the part of our natives is involved in this change, but a diminution of their usual ready zeal in the defence of the Colony might be experienced, and sympathies opposed to those felt by the white population might become apparent. Both these results would be unfortunate. The prevailing wish seems to be, not that the Basutos should be supplied with munitions of war, but that they should be accepted as subjects.

SIR, Drakensberg, viâ Estcourt, August 29, 1867.

I HAVE the honour to forward for the information of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor such intelligence as I have been able to collect since communicating with you on the 19th inst.

Orders are said to have been issued by the President of the Orange Free State for the commandering of 3,000 men to act against the Basutos; it is presumed that Molitzani's will be the first point of attack.

Some of the De Jaager family (Dutch), who reside half the year in Natal and the other half in the Free State, proceed this week to remove their parents, who are resident about 20 miles west of Harrismith, into Natal for safety, the cattle of the elder De Jaager being already in the Colony.

In the southern extremity of Witsies' Hoek a quantity of Basuto cattle is collected and herded there. It is assumed that in the event of attack by the Boers these cattle will either be driven into the Drakensberg or Natal.

Having been enabled to station a scout at Molappo's Kraal I am now in a position to obtain the earliest information of the movements of that Chieftain.

From accounts already received it is beyond a doubt that his people are making active preparations for war. A report from another quarter shows that Molappo has messengers waiting at Molitzani's Kraal to give him immediate notice of the commencement of hostilities. The Boers believe that in the attack upon Molitzani both Molappo and Letsea will preserve a strict neutrality.

With reference to the theft of horses referred to in my last, the owner, Umdonge, traced the animals to a Basuto kraal, and passed on to Molappo's to report the theft. The man charged with the offence has been summoned by Molappo. The owner has not yet returned.

It appears that only three of these horses were the actual property of the Natal native, the other three having been left with him; at the same time he also became custodian of a large number of sheep and goats. The Secretary for Native Affairs will be able to explain this case to his Excellency.

In consequence of another theft in Natal by three Basutos, and others having been intercepted driving cattle by night without authority or being able to offer a satisfactory explanation, I have deemed it expedient, pending instructions from his Excellency, to detain all cattle going out of Natal by this route without the possessors hold a pass. I shall be glad to receive definite instructions from you upon this subject.

A Basuto has been apprehended for selling gunpowder to a Natal native. These cases have been reported to the several magistrates.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, September 17, 1867

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letters of the 6th August and the 9th inst., and to acquaint you that I have been prevented by the constant pressure of business from replying sooner to the former of those communications.

It is perhaps almost unnecessary for me to repeat that I have never ceased to view with favour the proposals made by Moshesh that he and his people should become British subjects, or at least that a British officer should be appointed to reside with him, and also that I am fully alive to the false position in which we are placed by treaty in respect to the supply of ammunition; at the same time it is manifest that these are matters on which Her Majesty's Government are entitled to speak with authority; and that I must incur a very serious responsibility in taking any step not in harmony with the views they have deliberately expressed respecting them.

It is possible, however, that circumstances might render it my duty to proceed cautiously towards the appointment of a British Resident at Thaba Bosigo if it appeared probable that we could thus prevent the revival of the mischievous strife which you so justly deprecate.

And I trust you will be satisfied from the enclosed copies of correspondence with the President of the Free State that I have every desire to co-operate with the Government of Natal in the treatment of these very complicated questions.

I have, &c.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal. (Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE.

Enclosure 3 in No. 8.

Encl. 3 in No. 8.

SIR, Bloemfontein, September 4, 1867.

AT the earnest solicitation of the Basuto Captain, Letsea, the Volksraad consented to allow him to occupy that part of the annexed territory described in the agreement of the 22nd May 1867. It appears from your Excellency's letter of the 20th June last, and from the letter of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, dated 3rd August 1867, "that the Government of Natal has never "consented to a postponement for a term of seven years of its claim to compensation from the Basutos, "and that consequently the declaration of Captain Letsea to that effect is totally incorrect and "unwarranted."

I regret to say that almost from the very time that our commando was withdrawn from Letsea's he failed to comply with the conditions of the agreement of the 22nd May, and refused to receive the Commandant appointed over him, or to fulfil the promises made by him, or the obligations which he had taken upon himself. Upon these grounds the Volksraad resolved "that the agreement entered into "with Letsea be considered as cancelled." Under these circumstances it has become necessary to call out a commando for the purpose of clearing the annexed territory.

As Letsea has by his breach of the agreement of the 22nd May 1866 from the very commencement can hardly be said ever in reality to have become a subject of the Free State I do not anticipate that it will be required of our Government to recover from Letsea his proportion of the fine imposed upon Moshesh for the Natal raid in 1865.

By next Friday's post I shall reply to the letter of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal of the 3rd inst.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, September 17, 1867.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th inst., and at the same time to acquaint you that I have received from the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal a copy of the letter which he addressed to you on the 31st ult.

From the tenor of your letter, as well as from other intelligence that has reached me, I can only infer that the agreement made with Letsia on the 22nd May, as well as all other arrangements made by the Free State with Moshesh and his people since the close of the last war (except perhaps that with Molapo) have fallen to the ground, and that your Government has before it the prospect of another protracted struggle.

Mr. Keate has represented to you the concern with which he contemplates the renewal of hostilities so mischievous not only to the belligerents themselves but also to Her Majesty's possessions in South Africa; and, concurring as I do in his views, I have only to assure you of my readiness again to render any assistance in my power in bringing about the restoration of peace between the Free State and the Basutos on equitable terms.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir P. E. WODEHOUSE, K.C.B., to his Grace the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAMAND CHANDOS.

(No. 2.) Government House, Cape Town, Cape of Good Hope, January 14, 1868.

MY LORD DUKE, (Answered No. 108, February 26, 1868, page 87.)

I DO myself the honour of acknowledging the receipt of your Grace's Despatch, No. 78,* of the 9th December last, conveying to me the authority of Her Majesty's Government, "whenever a fitting opportunity may occur, to treat with the Chief "Moshesh for the recognition of himself and his tribe as British subjects, and for the "incorporation of their territory with Natal," on certain conditions.

Your Grace will readily believe that I have often considered what steps it would be right for me to take in the event of my receiving such an intimation of the pleasure of the Government, and you will not therefore, I trust, be surprised that I should at once have addressed to the President of the Free State and Moshesh, letters (of which I enclose copies), acquainting them of the measures in contemplation.

Many circumstances pointed to the expediency of this step. Foremost of them was that of putting an end as soon as possible to the wretched hostilities that have lasted so long. But besides this I had in view the peculiar position both of the President and of myself with our respective Legislatures. With regard to the former I may observe that your Grace has clearly intimated your opinion of the importance of settling the boundary between the Free State and Basutoland. Indeed a settlement is quite indispensable, and as the President is absolutely without power to enter into negotiations or conclude any agreement without the sanction of the Volksraad, it became necessary that he should learn the intentions of Her Majesty's Government before the opening of its Session in next month, and thus be enabled, as I hope, to obtain all necessary powers from them.

In my own case also time is of much importance. I am very unwilling to take charge of such an important negotiation without personally visiting Basutoland, while I cannot with propriety or convenience delay the opening of the annual Session of the Cape Parliament much beyond the middle of the month of May. The journey is a very long one, and circumstances may occur to prolong the negotiations for some little time. Moreover I do not believe that the success of the measure would have been in any way promoted by postponing the announcement.

I hope your Grace will allow me to express my thanks for the confidence you have been pleased to repose in me, and to assure you of my best efforts for carrying to completion a measure I have so long wished to see accomplished.

I have, &c.

Encl. No. 2. Letter to Lt.-Governor of Natal, 13 Jan. 1898.

P. S.—I also enclose a copy of my letter to the Lieut.-Governor of Natal.

Encl. 1 in No. 9.

Enclosure 1 in No. 9.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, January 13, 1868.

I FEEL sure that the Government of the Orange Free State must long since have been aware, from the communications which I have from time to time had the honour of addressing to you, of the great concern with which Her Majesty's Government and myself have contemplated the prolonged hostilities that have prevailed between that State and the Basutos.

And you will readily believe that we have throughout anxiously looked for any opportunity that might present itself by which our good offices might be made the means of assuaging disputes which have driven numbers of destitute fugitives to seek for shelter in this Colony, which have embarrassed our relations with our neighbours, which have caused severe and prolonged suffering to the aged and helpless members of the Basuto tribe, which have entailed such heavy losses on the deserving missionaries who have so long laboured amongst them, and which were fast drawing the Government and people of the Free State into debts and difficulties from the pressure of which they were not likely to recover for many years to come.

I can in all sincerity assure you that we have contemplated these transactions without the slightest view to the political aggrandizement of these Colonies, or to any other result from our interference than the restoration and maintenance of general peace. But it has long been my opinion that the attainment of that end could be procured at the least cost to all concerned, and with the greatest facility in every respect, by means of the acceptance by Her Majesty's Government of those overtures which the Chief Moshesh has so repeatedly made for becoming with his tribe subject to Her Majesty the Queen. And it is therefore with much satisfaction I find myself in a position to communicate to your Government that Her Majesty has been pleased to authorize me to take steps for carrying out such an arrangement.

I most earnestly hope that this communication may have the effect of inducing your Government to suspend hostilities with those who are now, in all probability, about to become the subjects of a power actuated by the most friendly sentiments towards the Free State, and whose endeavour it will be in carrying into effect this measure to give the fullest consideration to the just claims of that State, and to take every precaution against the renewal of those disorders on the Border which have led to such repeated complaints and have ultimately caused the present war.

I shall acquaint the Chief Moshesh of my having submitted this suggestion to you, and shall impress upon him the necessity for his receiving in good faith any proposal for the suspension of hostilities you may be pleased to make to him, and exerting himself to restrain his people from any acts of violence pending a final settlement.

Lastly, I would suggest, as I believe a Session of the Volksraad is to be held in next month, that application should be made to that body for full authority to negotiate on behalf of the Free State, either with me or with any person duly authorized by me on all matters that may come under discussion in connexion with this matter, and I hope to be able to visit Basutoland about the end of March or the beginning of April next.

I have, &c.

His Honour the President of the Orange Free State. (Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE.

GREAT CHIEF, Government House, Cape Town, January 13, 1868.

IT gives me much satisfaction to be enabled to inform you that Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to accede to the request so frequently made by you that you and your tribe should be received as subjects of the British Throne. It has long been my desire to see this change accomplished, and I doubt not that with the cordial co-operation of yourself and the Basuto Chiefs and people, the arrangement may be concluded on terms which will ensure the future peace and prosperity of yourselves and of your neighbours.

It is Her Majesty's pleasure that Basutoland shall, if practicable, hereafter form part of the Colony of Natal, but the duty of carrying out the negotiation has been entrusted to me, and I trust that I may be enabled, towards the end of March or the beginning of April next, to visit Basutoland and then discuss with yourself and your people the details of the arrangement.

In the meantime I have acquainted the President of the Free State with the decision of Her Majesty, and have suggested the suspension of hostilities; and I have no doubt that if my recommendation be well received by him, you will impress on your people the imperative necessity for their abstaining from all acts of an unfriendly nature towards the people of the Free State.

I am, &c.

The great Chief Moshesh, Basutoland. (Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE, Governor and High Commissioner.

Enclosure 2 in No. 9. Encl. 2 in No. 9.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, January 13, 1868.

As your Excellency will receive from the Secretary of State a copy of his Grace's Despatch to me, No. 78 of the 9th December last, I beg to place you in possession of copies of letters I have addressed to the President of the Free State and to the Chief Moshesh, informing them of the intentions of the British Government, and I wish to explain that I have taken this step without previous communication with yourself, because I thought it highly desirable to suspend the hostilities existing, and because the Volksraad of the Free State was about to meet in a few weeks.

I shall look anxiously for an explanation of your views on the matter, and very much hope that it may be in your power to meet me in Basutoland towards the end of March or the beginning of April.

I have, &c.

His Excellency the Lieut.-Governor, Natal. (Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE.

No. 10. No. 10

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir P. E. WODEHOUSE, K.C.B., to his Grace the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS.

(No. 15.) Government House, Cape Town, February 18, 1868.

MY LORD DUKE, (Answered, No. 116, 27th March 1868, page 88.)

IT now becomes my duty, with reference to my Despatch No. 2,* of the 14th January last, to make your Grace acquainted with the result of the communications which, as I then informed you, I had addressed to the President of the Free State, to Moshesh, and to the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, relative to the incorporation of Basutoland with that Colony. And it would have given me great pleasure if I had been able to announce that the negotiation was proceeding satisfactorily, and that I felt little anxiety as to the ultimate course of events. * Page 23.

The whole of the correspondence is now forwarded; and your Grace will perceive that while Moshesh, as was to be expected, is most grateful for the favour shown him; and the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, with certain reserves, views the project very favourably, the President of the Free State, on the contrary, has determined to persevere in hostilities, unless the Basutos will consent to sacrifices very heavy in themselves, and such as I believe would result in mischief to all.

Under ordinary circumstances I should have been disposed, and it might perhaps have been better policy to have abstained from making further efforts to induce a change of feeling on the part of the President, and to have proceeded at once to the proclamation of the Queen's sovereignty over Basutoland. But I had not, when his letter came, received Mr. Keates' reply; while at the same time I was strongly impressed with the belief that Her Majesty's Government would wish me to act as far as possible in a spirit of conciliation towards the Free State; and I therefore again, by my letter of the 11th instant, represented to Mr. Brand that our sole desire was to promote the well-being of all, and urged him to consent to friendly negotiations.

To this, of course, no reply has yet reached me; but I have received from the Civil Commissioner of Aliwal North a most urgent representation addressed to him by Moshesh, together with information that the Boer Commandos are vigorously destroying the standing crops of the Basutos. And I feel satisfied that it will be not only discreditable but impolitic to abstain from intervention any longer than we are compelled to do so for the completion of our own arrangements. The demand which the President makes for territory, and the step he is now taking to enforce that demand, viz., the entire destruction of the crops on which the Basutos depend for subsistence, are both of them expressly calculated to reduce them to a state of misery and destitution, and of necessity to prolong the disorders for the prevention of which alone we are interfering.

I have therefore again remonstrated with the President, and have consulted Sir Walter Currie on the subject of moving a strong detachment of the frontier police into Basutoland. My opinion is that the presence of 150 or 200 men of that force under his command, accompanied with an intimation that no further injuries to the Basutos would be permitted, would be sufficient to suspend the war. If Sir W. Currie should concur in that view I consider it will be my duty to proclaim the Basutos as British subjects, and to instruct him to proceed accordingly, leaving all questions in dispute respecting boundaries, &c. to be afterwards adjusted.

I conceive that this refusal on the part of Mr. Brand to enter into negotiations will give us great freedom of action. He claims territory it is most inconvenient that he should have, as ceded by treaty with Moshesh in 1866. That treaty has been broken by the subsequent war; and as he has really never had beneficial possession of the land, we may fairly for our own purposes fall back on the boundaries previously fixed by Sir George Grey and myself, and discuss any reasonable modifications of them. It is with this object that, in reply to the communication of the Civil Commission of Aliwal North, I have directed him to assure the Basutos that I will assist them as soon as practicable, and to exhort them carefully to re-occupy their lands as soon as the Boer Commandos have passed by.

I can assure your Grace that I am fully sensible of the great responsibility now resting upon me; that I hope I rightly estimate the wishes and opinions of Her Majesty's Government on this subject, and that I trust I may yet be able to bring it to a satisfactory settlement.

I have, &c.
(Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos,

Encl. in No. 10.

Enclosure in No. 10.

SIR, Bloemfontein, January 31, 1868.

IN acknowledging the receipt of your Excellency's letter of the 13th instant, it will, I think, be necessary briefly to state the circumstances which have caused the present war with the Basutos.

When the Basuto Chief Moshesh in April 1866 was compelled to sue for peace, the Government of the Free State distinctly gave him to understand, that it would enter into no negotiation for peace, until he agreed in writing to recognize the territory proclaimed by Commandant General Fick and annexed to the Free State, as Free State territory. Upon his consenting to do so a conference was held and the treaty of Thaba Bosigo concluded.

By Article 1 of the treaty of Thaba Bosigo "The Chief Moshesh acknowledges the territory "annexed by proclamation of Commandant-General J. J. F. Fick to the Orange Free State, which "proclamation was later confirmed by his Honour the President, with advice and consent of the "Executive Council, and finally ratified by the Volksraad on the 7th February 1866, to the territory

" of the Orange Free State, and to constitute thereafter a portion of the same, the boundary line " between the Orange Free State and Basuto land being henceforth fixed as follows:—From Bamboes " plaats near Pampoen Spruit with a straight line to about 3 miles to the east of Letsea's new town, " thence with a straight line northwards to the Caledon river, up along the Caledon river to the Putisani, " up along Putisani to its source, and thence along the Drakensberg to the Natal British boundary."

After the annexed territory had been inspected and laid out in farms, and the sale of these farms had taken place, the Government of the Free State called upon the purchasers to assemble on an " appointed day at certain places for the purpose of occupying their farms. But as the purchasers " were molested by the Basutos a commando was called out to clear the annexed terriority in terms " of Article 2 of the treaty by which the Chief Moshesh bound himself to cause the proclaimed " territory specified in Article 1 to be immediately evacuated by his people, such of them as fail to " comply with that condition shall be regarded as enemies and shall be expelled by the armed forces " of the Orange Free State without any hostile interference whatever on the part of the Chief " Moshesh or his people." Moshesh received notice from our Government that the commando was merely called out to clear the country in terms of Article 2 of the treaty.

The sons of Molitzani who had squatted in the annexed territory, and had sown there in the hope that the purchasers would suffer them to reap it, begged to be allowed to remain there until they had gathered their crops. This was granted upon condition that they obtained the consent of the purchasers, during their good behaviour and until the sitting of the Volksraad, when their request for ground would be laid before the Volksraad. The others who did not obtain leave to remain were treated as enemies and driven away. But when the sons of Molitzani and their people had reaped their crops, they began to store it in holes which they strongly fortified, and when the purchasers of the farms began to occupy the same, they were molested by the very people who had requested as a favour to remain there. They committed acts of violence and murdered Bush and Krynaauw, as it is said upon the instigation and by the order of Moshesh. I wrote to the Basuto Chief on the subject. His reply was entirely at variance with and in direct contradiction of his former letters. This letter however he subsequently requested to be allowed to withdraw, but as several thefts had been committed by the people of Masoepa, son of Moshesh, and others under his immediate jurisdiction, commandos were called out in August last to clear the annexed territory from the Basutos according to the treaty of Thaba Bosigo, to punish the murders of Bush and Krynaauw, and to teach Moshesh to respect the treaty which he had entered into under the disadvantages of drought, and as the Basutos take refuge in strongly fortified holes and caves, the war has lasted some time. The history of the Kafir wars in the Colony has shown that wars with savages are always protracted and costly. But the information which I have obtained from reliable sources shows that the Basutos saw that they could not hold out much longer, and indeed the war would have ended long since if the Basutos had not been encouraged by such false representations as are contained in the letter of Sekelo Moshesh of which I enclose a translated copy.

I sincerely regret that so much suffering should have been brought upon the Basutos and others, through the breach of the treaty by the Basuto Chief Moshesh, and the thefts and acts of violence committed by his people. Had Moshesh adhered to the treaty of Thaba Bosigo, as Molapo has to the treaty of Imperani of 26th March 1866, by which he became a subject of the Free State, and as Paulus Mopeli has to the treaty by which he became a subject of the Free State, his people would now be enjoying the blessings and prosperity of peace, and the Government of the Free State would not have been compelled to take up arms and prosecute a costly war, which we all most sincerely deplore. But I hope and trust that the Basutos will now be taught to pay regard to the treaties entered into by them, and to respect the lives and property of our people. And, when once the war has been brought to a close, there is every prospect that the accumulated revenue will soon enable the Government to place the finances upon a sound basis, and that our people will recover their losses.

With the experience we have of the reliance that can be placed on the promises of the Basuto Chief Moshesh, I think it would be unsafe to suspend hostilities against the Basutos, at the moment that the object of the war is nearly accomplished, and when our arms are, under God's blessing, everywhere successful, trusting merely to the good faith and the inclination and power of Moshesh to make his people comply with the treaty of Thaba Bosigo. I have therefore written to Moshesh that the war will be prosecuted with vigour until the murderers of Bush and Krynaauw shall have been delivered to the Free State and the annexed territory shall have been cleared of the Basutos. And I believe that when Moshesh has been taught to pay more regard to treaties, and to prevent his people from constantly stealing, it will have a salutary effect upon the other native tribes, who have always looked up to the Basuto Chief Moshesh.

As Article 2 of the Convention of 23rd February 1854, states that Her Majesty's Government has no wish or intention to enter hereafter into any treaties to the north of the Orange River which may be injurious or prejudicial to the interests of the Orange River Government, and as your Excellency's letter of 20th January 1866, in which you so kindly offered your services for the conclusion of the war, which was brought to a close by the treaty of Thaba Bosigo on the 3rd April 1866, states that the reason which had the greatest weight in not accepting Moshesh and his tribe as the subjects of the British Crown, was the consideration of what was fairly due to the Government of the Free State, and not having any reason or ground for inferring a change on that point, I confess that your communication that Moshesh and his tribe are in all probability about to become subjects of the British Crown, has taken me quite by surprise.

I regret that I cannot coincide in your Excellency's opinion that the course proposed will tend to the future general peace of South Africa. As the interest and welfare of the Free State will be so seriously affected by it, I shall avail myself of the extraordinary session of the Volksraad which I have called together on the 21st March next, to get the views of that honourable body upon the subject of your letter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) J. H. BRAND.

His Excellency the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope.

SIR, Thaba Bosigo, December 1, 1867.

BE greeted and greet Manapo and my children.

We still live well, and the war is fighting. With my sight I can discover that we have beaten them, and our country will return to us.

Last month we received a letter from the Governor of the Cape, Sir P. E. Wodehouse. He let us know that he is desirous to come and put an end to our war with the Boers, and to receive us under the government of Her Ladyship, as we requested once, and also that we should get war implements as well as the Boers. He assured us of his good intentions, and advised us to be staunch and fight till he arrives. The teachers are very glad.

You of course know what the Governor is. As to this intelligence we look forward to the month of January. With reference to these they were represented to the Natal Government under the Queen's jurisdiction that they should mediate and bring an end to them in an honourable way, not doing the will of the Free State or the Basutos by our respected friend Buchanan, lawyer. They say the boundary will be that of Governor Sir P. E. Wodehouse and Burnet, Esq., of Aliwal North. We fight trusting and expecting. I personally am preparing myself to make a raid into the Free State before peace is established. A great fight has taken place between Theme and Thaba Bosigo. The Boers were shamefully overcome.

You must let Mopeli know that since I came to Thaba Bosigo Molitsani's people have been looking after his corn. Maboleli. Although our people do not like it, and were it not in the midst of war would create a misunderstanding.

You must also borrow for me from Mopeli the blaze horse that is with Lenyora, as I have no horse to go to the field with. I should prefer your answering me through a messenger from you, so that I will be enabled to communicate to you all the news. Mopeli must remember it is his brother. What I have said is between I and you. I shall be very glad to see someone from you.

What they once said against you has turned out all lies. Every true man does not believe, especially Mosheshue.

You must send me lead, caps, and powder. Be greeted by your servant.

(Signed) T. MOSHESHUE.

P.S.—Greet Filemon and Maibi. Adieu. God save the Queen. I have written in a hurry; you must excuse errors.

(Signed) T. MOSHESHUE.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, February 11, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31st January in reply to mine of the 13th of that month, and I hope that my motives will not be misunderstood if I abstain altogether from discussing or questioning the description of past transactions given in your letter. I have but one object in view, that of restoring peace and ensuring the future tranquillity and well-being of the British Colonies, the Free State, and the Basutos; and I shall apply myself entirely to the endeavour to obtain the acquiescence of your Government in the course which I believe to be best fitted to promote its attainment.

I gather from your letter that you are unwilling to suspend hostilities until the territory stated to have been conquered and ceded shall have been cleared of the Basutos, and the murderers of Bush and Krynauw shall have been delivered up.

With regard to the first point, I feel sure you will admit that the acquisition of the tract in question will be of little real value to the Free State unless the latter be in a position to defend it against the Basutos, and to protect the farmers who will be settled in it from constant depredation and loss. I have too clear a recollection of the ruined and abandoned condition of the farms on the old border which I visited with you in 1864 to anticipate that the Free State will be able permanently to protect the new territory if the Basutos be left in a state of independence except by means of the establishment of a border force, regularly paid, and entailing a very serious charge on the revenues of the State. I believe that even among the most intelligent inhabitants of the State an impression prevails that the cession of territory demanded from the Basutos is in excess of what true policy would dictate; inasmuch as it would deprive the tribe of a great portion of the land best suited to them, and coop them up in comparatively barren tracts to a degree that would render thieving almost inevitable and necessary for their very existence. I think, therefore, that I may fairly suggest, as deserving of the most serious consideration of your Government, whether the true interests of the State do not point to such negotiation with a friendly power on the subject of a modification of the boundary, as will ensure ample consideration of the claims of the State, without rendering permanent peace altogether unattainable.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

You are apprehensive apparently that no reliance can be placed on the promises of Moshesh, until he has been completely vanquished by further hostilities. But I may be allowed to point out, that the settlement of all these questions will be removed out of his hands. He has, in reply to the letter which you were good enough to forward to him, placed himself entirely in my hands. Personally I feel that the issue of my arbitration in 1864 gives me some claim to the confidence of the Free State. And I am sure that I shall best consult the wishes of Her Majesty's Government by conducting any negotiations on these matters in a spirit of justice and conciliation. It must be manifest to your Government that if the Basutos be transferred to British rule, confined to a tract insufficient for their support, British control will not prevent depredation. The burthen of self-protection will fall entirely on the Free State, and the relations of the two Governments will become unsatisfactory. If, on the other hand, a fair understanding could be arrived at, the British authorities would, I have no doubt, be able, and would be bound to maintain a due control over their own subjects; and the people of the Free State would be thus left to enjoy in peace, and without any extraordinary effort on their parts, the lands they have hitherto held on such unprofitable terms.

I am not sufficiently acquainted with the cases of Bush and Krynauw to form an opinion on the proposal to treat them as exceptions to those of the many unfortunate beings who have perished in hostilities, which could scarcely be conducted with all the observances of civilized nations. Unquestionably, however, the circumstances must be very strong to admit of their being recognized as impediments to the general pacification for which we are seeking.

The war has throughout been one which has operated most heavily on the defenceless and unoffending. And latterly, I do not say unnecessarily, the efforts of the Free State have been almost entirely applied to measures having that tendency. The great object has been to destroy the crops and provisions of the Basutos; in other words to expose to death from starvation, the women, the aged, and the children. Surely, under these circumstances, both policy and humanity will be best consulted by our passing over these matters in silence.

In conclusion, let me repeat, that I am seeking the welfare of the Free State quite as much as that of the Basutos. I cannot forget that the people of the former were all, but a few years ago, as many of them still are, British subjects; that they are the near kinsmen of the people of the Cape Colony, and that any misfortunes that may befall them must to a great extent be shared by the Colonists; and I therefore still allow myself to hope that I may gain the assent of your Government to my present proposals, and that by consenting to suspend hostilities with a view to negotiation, you may prevent the further unnecessary sacrifice of human life.

I have, &c.

His Honour the President of the Orange Free State. (Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE.

SIR, Thaba Bosigo, the 26th of January 1868.

I HAVE received your Excellency's letter, dated Cape Town, 13th of January. I have not words enough to tell your Excellency how exceedingly welcome has been the good news which your Excellency has favoured me with. The whole of my tribe, all the Chiefs of Basutoland, and myself more than any one, we all are glad. We have now before us the prospect of a lasting peace, of a continued prosperity, which now for about three years has been an unknown thing to us. I have become old; therefore I am glad that my people should have been allowed to rest and to lie under the large folds of the flag of England, before I am no more.

I beg that your Excellency would be so kind as to transmit to Her Majesty the Queen, now become my Queen, and the Queen of my people, the sincerest and warmest thanks of myself and children and tribe. I beg your Excellency also to receive for yourself the warmest thanks for the interest you have manifested towards our welfare, ever since you came to South Africa, as well as for your great kindness in having transmitted to the Queen my request to be received as a British subject.

As to the details of all necessary arrangements, of which your Excellency speaks in your favour of the 13th instant, I leave everything in your hands; I trust entirely to your Excellency's wisdom and goodness. It matters little to us to know to what Colony Basutoland is to be annexed, so long as we are under British protection and rule. Since the Queen has decided that Basutoland should form part of the Colony of Natal it is all right, we are content.

I do not know as yet how the President of the Free State will act on the receipt of the letter by which your Excellency informs him of the Queen's decision; I know of a certainty that a few weeks ago Mr. Brand boasted that your Excellency having intimated to him your intention to receive the Basuto nation under British rule, he had written back to Cape Town to say that he could not allow the English Government to interfere in any way; and he added that we were only deceiving ourselves in believing that the English Government could do anything for us. I trust that this may not be the case, and that Mr. Brand will at your Excellency's suggestion at once put a stop to war. As for myself, your Excellency may be assured, that as soon as the President of the Free State suspends hostilities, I shall at once give strict orders to my people to abstain from all acts of an unfriendly nature towards the people of the Free State.

Believe me, &c.

His Excellency Sir P. Wodehouse, K.C.B., Governor and High Commissioner. (Signed) MOSHESHE. (L.S.)

GREAT CHIEF, Government House, Cape Town, February 11, 1868.

I HAVE just received your letter of the 26th January, and am much pleased to learn that the prospect of becoming the subject of Her Majesty the Queen affords you so much gratification.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

I learn from the President of the Free State that he is unwilling to suspend hostilities except on certain conditions, and I have earnestly endeavoured to induce him to waive them, and to leave all questions to be settled by negotiation.

In the meantime, and until you learn from the President that he will consent to a truce, you will see the necessity of maintaining the best defence in your power.

I shall certainly visit Basutoland in April.

I am, &c.

The Great Chief Moshesh, Basutoland.

(Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE, Governor and High Commissioner.

SIR, Thaba Bosigo, the 3rd of February 1868.

I RECEIVED on last Saturday night (the day before yesterday) a letter from the President of the Free State, of which letter I send you a copy, for transmission to his Excellency Sir P. Wodehouse, together with a copy of my answer to that letter. You will see that Mr. Brand has doubts about the genuineness of the copy of his Excellency's letter, which you sent me direct. I had, as I think I have already stated in my letter of last week, sent the President of the Free State a copy of that copy, in order to show him that I had already been made acquainted with his Excellency's Despatch. He also expressed doubts about the decision of Her Majesty.

I make haste to lay, through you, before his Excellency, the refusal of Mr. Brand to consent to a suspension of hostilities as recommended by his Excellency, and the avowal of his intentions to carry on the war. His Excellency will see by my answer to the President that I have referred the latter for all matters of discussion and disagreement between me and the Free State to his Excellency, as I am now bound to do, having now, as I understand it, no more right to do anything on my own responsibility.

I would also beg of you that you would kindly explain to me the position which I now occupy. Am I not, by right and by fact, on account of Her Majesty's decision, a British subject? Has Mr. Brand any cause for saying that "from the Governor's letter to him it does not appear that I am already a subject of the British Crown?" For this is the motive upon which Mr. Brand seems to ground his refusal to consent to a suspension of hostilities.

I cannot hide from your Excellency that Mr. Brand's letter is calculated to impair our present position. My people, who in great majority are not acquainted with the power and importance of the British Government, will question how it is possible that Mr. Brand could set at nought a decision of Her Majesty, which purports that I am already a British subject, and also a recommendation of Her Majesty's High Commissioner to suspend hostilities. I can but say that I shall look forward with great anxiety for all the explanations which his Excellency or yourself can give me. I shall be especially thankful for any advice you may give me as to the manner I should act in the present circumstances. I consider myself and tribe as already subjects of Her Majesty, since a decision has been taken upon the subject by the British Government.

I can neither hide from his Excellency that we have now been for six months exposed to the horrors of war. Many lives have already been lost. It may not be easy for us to continue the struggle much longer. I could wish that his Excellency might come to Basutoland sooner than he has promised. Our present position is very difficult and critical. Could not his Excellency, either in writing again to the President of the Free State, or by sending at once a special envoy, or by giving me the right to hoist the English flag in Basutoland, oblige the Free State to suspend hostilities until his Excellency's arrival?

Oh, for the sake of our gardens, for the sake of our lives, may I beg Sir P. Wodehouse to hasten to our rescue! Let him tell me or show me something by which I may at least keep up the courage and the confidence of my people. For after having opened to us such a bright horizon and given us such cause to hope, we could not but lose all courage and fall into sheer despair, if the fears which have now been awakened in our hearts by Mr. Brand's letter should prove otherwise than a false alarm.

I should have liked to write also to his Excellency, but, knowing the interest you take in our cause, I have thought that it would be better still should you be so kind as to write yourself to his Excellency, in order to forward our cause and to provide for us a speedy means of help, as I am well persuaded that you cannot but do your utmost in this respect.

I beg you will transmit to his Excellency my sincere thanks for the bright prospects of hope which he has opened to us, as well as our very earnest and anxious desire to see these hopes realized as speedily as possible.

Believe me, &c.

J. Burnet, Esq., C.C., Aliwal, North.

(Signed) × MOSHESHE. (L.S.)

CHIEF MOSHESH, Bloemfontein, January 31, 1868.

I RECEIVED your letter of the 26th inst., with what purports to be copy of a letter from his Excellency the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope. But Mr. Burnet, the Civil Commissioner of Aliwal North, in his letter of the 20th inst., to the Landdrost of Caledon River, enclosing the letter of the Governor to you for transmission, writes, "I am far from being assured of the safety of any special "express from Aliwal to Thaba Bosigo; I have decided to avail myself of your kind aid by enclosing "both Despatches to your care."

The letter of his Excellency the Governor to you was transmitted from Bloemfontein on Monday, the 27th inst. I cannot therefore understand how you could have had a copy of that letter on the 26th. From the Governor's letter to me it does not appear that you are already a subject of the British Crown.

You are well aware that the present war was commenced to clear the territory annexed to the Free State by Proclamation of Commandant General Fick, and mentioned in Art. 1 of the treaty of Thaba Bosigo, and to punish the murders of Bush and Krynaauw and other acts of violence, and until the murderers of Bush and Krynaauw are delivered up by you to the Free State authorities to be tried according to law, and the territory mentioned in Art. 1 of the treaty is cleared by the Basutos, the Government of the Free State will continue the war against you, and our commandants have orders to push on their proceedings with vigour until the murderers of Bush and Krynaauw shall have been delivered up to our Government, and the annexed territory mentioned in Art. 1 of the treaty of Thaba Bosigo shall have been cleared.

I have, &c.

COPY of the Answer of Moshesh to his Honour the President of the Free State.

SIR, Thaba Bosigo, February 3, 1868.

I HAVE received your letter of the 30th ult. Your Honour seems to doubt of the veracity of the contents of the copy I sent you of his Excellency's letter. For your own conviction I now send you the very copy I received on the 25th ult., which is signed by the Civil Commissioner of Aliwal North. I suppose Mr. Burnet wanted me to know as soon as possible Her Majesty's decision concerning myself and tribe, so that after he had sent the original through the Free State, finding a messenger willing to bring me the copy directly, I received it at the date I have mentioned. I must beg of your Honour to send back the copy I now send, after having convinced yourself that it is genuine.

Your Honour seems to doubt that I and my tribe have been received as subjects of Her Majesty. How such a doubt is possible after a perusal of his Excellency's Despatch to me I cannot understand. I have frequently asked for such a boon, and at last Her Majesty has consented to receive me and my tribe as Her subjects. It is an accomplished fact. His Excellency has stated his intention to come up to Basutoland, but only to make the arrangements which are necessitated by the annexation of my country to a British Colony. Nevertheless, your Honour declares that you will continue the war. I therefore leave with your Honour the whole responsibility of that step. I am willing, as I have already asserted in my last letter to your Honour, to accede to a suspension of hostilities; and when I wrote I had no doubt but that your Honour would readily agree to the same, according to the recommendation of his Excellency. I have acquainted his Excellency with my acceptance of all that he has been intrusted by Her Majesty to do as regards myself and tribe. Since his Excellency is coming up, why should your Honour not be willing to refer all matters to be adjusted to Sir P. Wodehouse? I have no right any more to discuss the causes which have, in the opinion of your Honour, caused the present war. I might say for my defence that I wrote to you long before this war broke out, namely, that the Treaty of Thaba Bosigo, which this war has now put completely aside, did not give me land enough for my tribe; and, your Honour refusing to provide for many thousands of my subjects, who were to be ejected from their homes, though this had been promised, refusing also to take the people dwelling in the country which you had annexed to the Free State, I could not but try to keep for the maintenance of my people as much land as I could of that which had always belonged to me. In my position your Honour would have done the same. But why again explain what has been in vain explained before? Therefore I can say that this war is not of my doing. It has been forced upon me and my people, who asked for a place to live upon under the sun.

Your Honour might also, as I asked long ago, have annexed my people as subjects. You did so for portions of them, but without acquainting me with it, just as if I was not the paramount Chief of all Basutos, facts which I declare null and void.

I am sad on account of so many lives sacrificed, of so many gardens destroyed. Are we stones that we should be deprived of the food which the great God is causing to grow? Are we birds of the night that we should always be attacked under cover of darkness, when people should be sleeping? Women and children in great number have been killed or wounded by your burghers. Last week your commando, whilst promenading on Katberg Mountain with a white flag, killed a man. This fact has been already brought to your notice by my son Lofonia.

If I made such haste in communicating to your Honour the contents of his Excellency's letter, it was not only to show you that I knew of it, but especially it was to show my willingness to a suspension of hostilities.

Your Honour will fully understand why I must decline to have any discussion upon the complaints you bring forward. I am now, with the whole of my tribe, subjects of Her Majesty the Queen of England. His Excellency Sir P. Wodehouse is to me the representative of Her Majesty. I am bound to obey him. I say that if you have any complaints to bring forward, I cannot but refer you to his Excellency. Doing otherwise would be to act in my own name, which I have no more the right nor the willingness to do. I throw upon your Honour the responsibility of further hostilities. I shall hasten to send to his Excellency a copy of your Honour's letter of the 30th ult., together with a copy of this my answer to your letter, and I shall leave him to decide for me.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

COPY of a TELEGRAM from Mr. Burnet, the Civil Commissioner of Aliwal North, to his Excellency the Governor.

The Free State commandos continue destroying crops with great vigour, and to a great extent to within an hour of Thaba Bosigo. No cessation of hostilities up to the afternoon of the 3rd. The cry is "onwards." Moshesh's son Sekelo arrived at Aliwal North on the 10th, with letters for his Excellency the Governor, urging speedy interference to save bloodshed.

February 14.

TELEGRAM from his Excellency the Governor to the Civil Commissioner of Graham's Town.

Send at once to Burnet to acknowledge his message of the 14th. Desire him to inform the Basutos that I will use my utmost endeavours to assist them as soon as circumstances will permit me to do so. In the meantime it is desirable that they should make every exertion to embarrass the movements of the Boers; and above all let them take care to re-occupy the ground as soon as the commandos move off.

TELEGRAM from his Excellency the Governor to the Civil Commissioner of Graham's Town.

I wrote to Currie on Saturday on the subject of moving his police up to Basutoland. If he is in Graham's Town ask him to let me know by telegraph if he agrees in my opinion, and if he does, to make arrangements, privately, as quickly as possible, in anticipation of further orders. I shall write to him to-morrow.

SIR, Government House, Natal, February 8, 1868.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter of the 13th ultimo, enclosing copies of letters which you had addressed to the President of the Orange River Free State and to the Chief "Moshesh," informing them of the intentions of Her Majesty's Government, which were notified to you in his Grace the Secretary of State's Despatch, No. 78, of the 9th of December last, a copy of which reached me at the same time. I hasten in accordance with your Excellency's wishes and the instructions of the Secretary of State to convey to you my views upon the very important matters which form the subject of those communications. Before doing so I beg leave to offer to your Excellency my best acknowledgments for the steps you so promptly took on the receipt of the Secretary of State's Despatch to arrest the hostilities existing on our border, and to anticipate the action of the Volksraad of the Free State, which is so shortly expected to meet. I wish also to add my sincere thanks for the very clear and complete exposition with which you favoured me in a separate letter received at the same time of all the difficulties to be overcome and of the means you would suggest for their solution, as well as for your assurance of ready co-operation in carrying out the arrangements proposed in a manner differing from that which you had yourself advised.

2. The point on which an expression of opinion is specifically required of me by the Secretary of State is the course which the Local Legislature is likely to take in this important question. I feel fully justified in saying generally that the views of the Legislative Council will in the main reflect those entertained by the inhabitants of the Colony at large, and that for a long time a feeling has prevailed in the public mind that it is only by a measure of the nature of that now contemplated, that peace and good order can be substituted for the state of barbarous warfare which has become chronic on our borders. There will probably, when the matter comes formally before the Council, be much questioning as to whether any, and if so what, amount of land will be available for European occupation in the territory proposed to be added to the Colony, and much criticizing of all arrangements made for the advantage and satisfaction of its native inhabitants. No doubt too much will be said about the delay which has taken place in acceding to the request so frequently made by Moshesh, and any modifications which may be made in the scheme will be held to be the fruits of such delay; moreover, in the present financial condition of the Colony, all stipulations by which it may be thought expedient to pay off or compensate private individuals affected by the proposed measure will be closely scrutinized, or at all events much discussed; but the benefits to accrue, be they material or moral, immediate or prospective, have been for so long the subject of speculation, the injury sustained by the commerce of the Colony from the existing state of things is so palpable, and the desire has been and is so strong that the local Government should be placed in a position to deal with these questions, that though I can hardly look for complete unanimity among the members of the Legislature, I feel assured that its acquiescence and support will not be wanting to me in giving effect to the design of Her Majesty's Government should the negotiations into which your Excellency is about to enter be brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

3. Her Majesty's Government look to a permanent settlement of the difficulties which have to be met, and, as a means of ensuring it, have decided that the recognition of the Chief "Moshesh" and his tribe as British subjects should be accompanied by the incorporation of their country with Natal. It has clearly therefore become my duty to consider very carefully and very earnestly what are the conditions on which this Government can undertake with safety to itself and with a fair prospect of being able to attain the end in view, the new responsibilities which this annexation will entail upon it. The whole question turns, as your Excellency has not failed to point out, upon the settlement of the boundary line between the Basutos and the Free State territory, in other words upon whether such arrangements can be made in this respect as will bring the whole of the Basuto nation and not merely a portion of it under the influence and control of this Government. With anything less than the line which was the result of your Excellency's arbitration in 1864, this object, which I look upon as indispensable, would not be obtained.

4. That line, which seems to me to be substantially the same as the one originally laid down by Major Warden in 1849, reserved to the Basutos an ample tract of country to allow of their maintaining themselves on the fruits of their industry in accordance with their national modes of life. Had there existed on either side of that line an authority sufficiently strong to exercise control over individual action it is probable that peace and order would have prevailed from the time of its being accepted by both parties. But renewed hostilities have led to the adoption on paper of a different boundary between the two countries. If I understand it rightly it seems to be the policy of the Free State to drive over this new bounday line which it has itself chalked out for its own purposes every Basuto whom it does not succeed in killing or in subjecting to a system of service on farms in the so-called conquered territory quite inconsistent with his habits and ideas. But this boundary, as far as I am able to judge of it without a personal acquaintance with the locality, but relying on maps and information afforded to me by the French missionaries and others who have visited the country, is nothing less than the natural dividing line between what I may call the habitable and uninhabitable, or, at all events, the cultivable and uncultivable portions of Basutoland, with the exception of the three comparatively small "enclaves" occupied respectively by Moshesh himself, by Letsea, and by Molapo, and their immediate adherents, and which I understand are themselves little more than mountain fastnesses; the whole remaining country is a mass of rugged rock up to its junction with the frontier of Natal, which in that part is of the same inhospitable character. It has been stated to me on the authority of one of the missionaries lately expelled from Basutoland by the Free State Government, that the whole extent of cultivable land left within this new boundary, so far as the country is known, does not exceed 6,000 acres.

5. The policy of this Government in its relations with the native tribes within the Colony has always been to assign to them a sufficient extent of land to live on comfortably and contentedly, but to visit severely, though with strict justice, all contraventions on their part of their own special laws, as well as of those of the Colony generally. It is clear that the Government could not carry out this principle with the Basutos if it received with their allegiance nothing but the rocky "residuum" of their country after the best part of it had been wrested from them by a neighbouring hostile State.

6. Nor would any partition between this Colony and the Free State of the better portions of the country lead, as it seems to me, to that settlement of all difficulties which it is the object of Her Majesty's Government to secure; such a measure would simply be to divide the nation against itself, a nation, which however much it may be made up of tribes originally independent, and however weak the authority of its paramount Chief may consequently be, must yet be considered as constituting one people, having political and family objects in common. By following either the one or the other of these two courses this Government would adopt, perpetuate, and take part in a quarrel, in lieu of putting an end to it. The position of Molapo which, as your Excellency has observed, may offer an impediment to the proper settlement of the boundary, cannot, I think, be looked upon as militating against this view, or as proving him to have had the intention of separating himself and his section of the people from the common stock. He seems to have been actuated by no love or preference for the Free State, but by an idea that by no other course than submission to that State's authority could he save himself and his people from extermination, and indeed the Basutos generally, who he expected would be eventually obliged to follow in his footsteps. The memorandum of the Secretary of Native Affairs, which has just come into my hands, and a copy of which I enclose, contains some remarks on this part of the question which tend to show that at least on Molapo's part no objection is likely to be urged to a cancelling of his new allegiance.

7. Mr. Shepstone's memorandum contains some remarks also upon the continuation of the boundary line beyond the point at which your Excellency's definition of it ceased in 1864, and he shows that it is only through the tract of country called Witzie's Hoek that communication is practicable between Natal and Basutoland, and that unless not only Witzie's Hoek but a slip of land between it and Harrismith, which I understand is not more than 15 miles distant from Witzie's Hoek, is included within the new boundary, there will be no means of access into the country which this Government is for the future to control without passing through Free State territory. This seems to be decisive of the opinion arrived at by your Excellency for other very sufficient reasons that we shall require Witzie's Hoek. I venture to think that no great difficulties will have to be encountered with respect to either Molapo's or Moperi's locations, for it seems to be thoroughly well understood that these two Chiefs accepted their present political positions on grounds of the merest expediency; and, moreover, there is no question of land occupancy, real or nominal, by Free State farmers involved in the definition of the boundary at the eastern extremity of the proposed line.

8. The so-called conquered territory lying along the Caledon is what no doubt the Free State will be most unwilling to part with, but with regard to this your Excellency looks to a money arrangement to smooth the way to an accommodation. So much will depend upon the answer which President Brand may return to the communication which has been made to him, and upon the spirit in which he, after consulting his Volksraad, may take up the question, and enter upon the negotiation, that I refrain for the present from saying more on this point than that the incorporation of the whole of the Basuto country seems to me to be so essential to the safe assumption by this Colony of the new responsibilities which will be imposed upon it that it will no doubt be prepared to make all necessary sacrifices for attaining that end, the more so as there is every reason to think that such sacrifices will be but temporary, and will bring with them in the end corresponding benefits.

9. But there is a consideration connected with this question which has been left untouched by Mr. Shepstone in his memorandum, though I have had some conversation with him about it, and which I venture to think should not be entirely lost sight of. Some time ago I had occasion to bring to your Excellency's notice the expected settlement of a portion of the Basutos, dispossessed of their own lands by the Free State, in the tract of country bordering upon Adam Kok's country, which was occupied for a time by Nehemiah Moshesh. Your Excellency informed me among other things in your reply of August 7, 1867, that the boundary between that Chief and the Griquas had been defined. Now it seems to me that this tract of country, being neither under British control or under that, such as it may be, of the Griqua Chief, is very likely to become a rendezvous of the discontented and the bad characters whom a long unsettled state of society has left upon its surface in those parts, much as Witzie's Hoek would be if left as a debateable land. It would tend to facilitate what would of course be desirable, the interspersion of white inhabitants among the Basutos if a portion of the latter could with their own consent be located in this tract of land under like control with the rest of their countrymen. I think this is the more desirable, as from all I hear the Griqua community seems to be lapsing into something very like anarchy, and is likely ere long to become in its turn a source of trouble on the new frontier which will be assigned to this Colony at that extremity of the line of boundary.

10. I have only in conclusion to say that I shall be prepared, accompanied by Mr. Shepstone, to meet your Excellency at whatever place in Basutoland, and at whatever time you may name after the receipt of Mr. Brand's reply.

His Excellency Sir Philip Wodehouse, K.C.B.

MEMORANDUM on certain Points connected with the Question of annexing Basutoland to Natal, February 4, 1868.

THAT Sir Philip Wodehouse has himself undertaken to settle the boundary line between Basutoland and the Orange Free State is extremely fortunate; it is a question which has already been before him as arbitrator, and his decision in 1864 was practically the confirmation of the line which had been laid down by Major Warden in 1849, and again by Sir George Grey in 1858, and which has continued to separate the two countries from the first.

It is impossible to believe that in three separate decisions by three different representatives of Her Majesty's Government, two of whom were Governors of the Cape and High Commissioners, each decision given under circumstances varying from either of the other two, the substantial interests of the two populations were not carefully considered and adjusted. We know that the Orange Free State cordially adopted and acted upon the decision of 1864, and that Moshesh acquiesced in it as an accomplished fact, although, as he says in his letter to President Brand, dated July 9, 1867, he considered it was entirely in favour of the Free State.

It seems therefore difficult to assign any sufficient reason, compatible with the objects sought to be attained by the proposed annexation, for altering a line which has stood the test of so much investigation and so much experience. To take less than the line gives would be to stultify those objects, and to accept a state of things which our knowledge and judgment plainly tell us must of necessity soon slip from under our control. But it seems that the boundary between Harrismith and Basutoland has been left undefined, at least it was so by the decision of 1864; this is the most important portion of it as regards Natal in the prospect of the proposed annexation. This Colony and Basutoland abut on each other for more than 100 miles, but at no point, except the strip of territory involved in this particular section called Witzie's Hoek, is any communication between the two countries possible. During my occupation of Olivier's Hoek with a native force in 1865 and 1866 I cut a very practicable wagon road over the Drakenberg nearly opposite Witzie's Hoek, and this pass will now be one main road to Basutoland; but unless Witzie's Hoek and a strip between it and Harrismith are included, we shall be compelled to pass through Orange Free State territory. In using even this road no occupation of the Free State would be touched or interfered with by such a strip being taken; indeed I have reason to think that the majority of the inhabitants of Harrismith would not object to the whole of their district being incorporated. Could such a measure be accomplished it would afford this Government immense facilities for the management of Basutoland. The position occupied by Molapo as a subject of the Free State is incapable of being long maintained by him, even should things be left as they are. I have good reason to know the truth of the High Commissioner's remark, that his new allegiance sits very lightly on him; he never has looked upon his conversion into a Free State subject in any other light than as having been a war device, undertaken to save his and his father's people; and his determination is as fixed as that of the great body of the Basutos not to become permanently subject to the Orange Free State.

I have more than once remonstrated with him on this subject, but he justified it by pleading, first, the necessity of the case, and afterwards the alleged ill treatment of himself and his people by the subjects of the State Government, and the boundary line claimed by the Free State, which in his opinion amounts to an attempt to exterminate the Basutos. I am convinced that no consideration or amount of pressure would induce Molapo to consent to be separated from his father's people when they are received as British subjects. Then again, a very practical difficulty lies in the way of any such separation: the country he and his people occupy is situated between us and the main body of the Basutos; to get to Moshesh we must pass through Molapo's territory; this would be inconvenient in every way, and be the fertile source of misunderstandings and political complications, and more decidedly so when the arrangement is against the feelings and wishes of the people themselves, as I believe would be the case. Sir Philip Wodehouse has so fully grasped the difficulties of the case that it seems unnecessary to add anything to the very clear sketch and solution of them he has given.

I have no doubt that the Legislative Council will support the annexation and any necessary measures for its effective completion. The members of that body are all of them fully alive to the necessity for some steps being taken to secure the peace of the country, and no step could be more effective than this.

The ruling family in Basutoland is that of Moshesh; by this I mean that although the people are made up of different tribes, originally belonging to other families, the whole of Basutoland is under different members of Moshesh's family.

The Basutos must therefore be looked upon and treated as one people, and there is not much reliance to be placed on political differences between members of one family. Acting on a contrary theory was the error the Free State Government fell into with regard to Molapo; no mere political considerations will detach a man of Molapo's position by birth from his family, there must be sufficiently strong moral considerations also.

The different sections of this large tribe may and must be governed separately as a matter of detail and necessity, but they must all be governed on one principle, or the excepted sections must be removed to such a distance as will prevent the difference working practical mischief. If we are to have the control of the Basutos to secure the peace of the country we must have the whole of them and ample country for them to live in, and live comfortably, otherwise we shall but transfer the quarrel with the Free State to ourselves, after having deliberately deprived ourselves of the only means by which it is possible to attain the object we propose to seek.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, February 16, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's confidential letter of the 8th instant, enclosing a copy of a memorandum framed by Mr. Shepstone, to which I shall of course give the most careful consideration.

As you will have seen in the public papers the reply which the President of the Free State has sent to my letter of the 13th January, it is unnecessary for me to trouble you with a copy of it. And I therefore now enclose the copy of a further communication I have addressed to him, in which I have earnestly endeavoured to dissuade him from persevering in hostilities against the Basutos, and to point out the benefits which the Free State might derive from at once consenting to friendly negotiations with us.

I have also received a letter from Mr. Howell, an English gentleman settled in the Free State and well known there, setting forth the difficult position in which he is placed, and asking my advice as to the course which he ought to pursue in the present state of the relations between the British Government and that of the Free State. I have in reply expressed my opinion that his first duty is due to Her Majesty, and in explaining the arguments I have used with the President have intimated a hope that they may be instrumental in extricating Mr. Howell, and many others who no doubt are similarly situated, from their present embarrassment.

As the President informs me that the Volksraad will meet on 21st March, I have made arrangements for leaving Cape Town on the 19th of that month, and reaching Aliwal North I hope by the 29th.

In the present state of the correspondence with Mr. Brand it is difficult to fix upon any precise spot for our meeting, and I would therefore suggest that you should make arrangements as may best suit your own convenience for leaving Natal in time to ensure your being within easy reach of communication with Aliwal, by the time of my arrival there, when we should of course be guided by circumstances as to our future movements.

I do not gather from your letter that you have any intention of submitting the matter to your Legislature before meeting me, and I am not sufficiently acquainted with the forms of your Government and your general political position to be able to judge of the impediments to your doing so. I merely suggest for your consideration that it might be convenient, if all other circumstances favoured it, to obtain from them a resolution of general concurrence in the policy of annexation. But on this point I must leave you to be guided entirely by your own judgment.

I have, &c.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, Natal. (Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, February 18, 1868.

I CANNOT allow the post to leave Cape Town without acquainting you with the extreme regret with which I yesterday received a message from Aliwal North, conveyed by telegraph from Graham's Town, that the Free State commandos were pushing on with the greatest vigour the destruction of the standing crops of the Basutos.

It is melancholy to think that these armed bodies should be devoting their energies to causing the death by starvation of the aged and helpless, and driving the able-bodied into a state of misery and destitution, of all things most calculated to create and prolong thieving and disorder.

The British Government is honestly and earnestly endeavouring to ensure tranquillity. I have already pointed out how mischievous it must be to the people of the Free State if the Basutos should come under British rule without the means of subsistence, and it grieves me greatly to think that at the time when your Government knows well that the arrangements for their reception are actually in progress, it should adopt a course of action directly tending to frustrate our efforts for the good of South Africa.

I have, &c.

His Honour the President of the Orange Free State. (Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND NATAL.

SIR, Bloemfontein, Orange Free State, January 31, 1868.

I CONSIDER it my duty as an officer receiving half pay from Her Britannic Majesty's Government to inform your Excellency that the President of this State, immediately upon the receipt of your Despatch of the 13th instant requesting his Honour to suspend the present hostilities between the Free State and the Basuto tribes "who are in all probability about to become the subjects of a power "actuated by the most friendly sentiments towards the Free State," gave orders that these hostilities be prosecuted with vigour, and that these orders are now being carried out.

I am particularly induced to give your Excellency this information because this open defiance of your request will very likely place me in a most awkward position, which I respectfully beg to explain with the view of obtaining your Excellency's advice, should you think fit to grant me the same.

I joined in the war against Moshesh in 1866, because the Basutos had, without any provocation on my part, encroached upon my landed property in the "Witte Bergen" by taking possession of the same, and robbing me of a large amount of cattle and horses, and causing me much loss in sheep.

I refused however to take part in the subsequent three months' war because I knew it was occasioned solely by the absence of common sense precautions on the part of the Free State Government.

I also would not join in the present hostilities because I considered that the manner of carrying out the same, destroying the growing corn of the Basutos, was more of a war against helpless women and children than with men, and because I did not approve of the banishment of the French missionaries, there being no proved cause to warrant this ordering.

I am liable at any time to be ordered to join the commando, and should I refuse, I will be subject to a heavy fine or imprisonment. I am aware that as a resident in this State I am bound to obey its laws, but then again if I am ordered to go on the commando, I join in the open defiance of the Free State Government against your Excellency's request to that Government, to cease the present hostilities against the Basutos, which may lead to my being deprived by Her Majesty's Government of my half pay, and to the claim I have of readmission into Her Majesty's service, of which I have not had occasion to avail myself.

It may be said that I might escape this difficulty by leaving the State, while the hostilities with the Basutos are being continued, but I cannot do so without ruination to myself, for it is provided that any resident of the State leaving the country during war time subjects himself to a very heavy fine or imprisonment with hard labour, and should I leave and not return my property would be certainly confiscated.

Under these circumstances, then, I humbly request that your Excellency, as the Military Chief Commander of South Africa, will be so good as to advise me as a British officer on half pay, how to conduct myself in the event of my being ordered to take part in the open defiance of the Free State Government against your Excellency's request contained in your letter of the 13th instant.

I have, &c.

Lieutenant, half pay, Mounted Corps.

His Excellency Sir Philip Wodehouse,
&c. &c. &c.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, February 13, 1868.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31st inst., in which you ask for my advice as to the course which you ought to take in connexion with the present peculiar state of the relations between the British Government, the Free State, and the Basutos, and I assure you that I can fully appreciate the embarrassing position in which you, and probably many others, are placed in consequence of your obligations to two independent Governments.

At the same time I can have no hesitation in stating my opinion that your allegiance is due to the Queen, and that it would ill become one in such a position to take an active part in hostilities against those whom Her Majesty has determined to receive under Her protection, and who will very shortly be included among the subjects of the British Throne.

I very much hope, however, that you may be extricated from your present difficulty through the action of the Government of the Free State. The President has, as you are aware, made known to me his intention of continuing hostilities until the Basutos shall have evacuated the territory claimed as having been ceded by Moshesh, and until the murderers of Bush and Krynaauw have been delivered up. But I have earnestly endeavoured to prevail upon him to modify this resolution, and to consent to leave the adjustment of all pending questions to friendly negotiations.

I have represented to him that the British Government has in view solely the restoration and maintenance of peace, and that it is seeking the welfare of the Free State quite as much as that of the British Colonies and the Basutos. That an impression exists in many quarters that if the alleged cession were insisted upon in its entirety, the Basutos would no longer be left in possession of lands sufficient for their support, but would of necessity keep up a system of plunder directed against the Border farmers. That I have seen enough of the ruined and abandoned condition of the farms on the old Border, to be sure that the Free State cannot protect its own Borders without the creation of a regularly paid Border Force, entailing a most serious charge on its revenues. That in the interest of all parties some modification of the Border ought to be arrived at by means of negotiation. That personally I may appeal to the result of my arbitration in 1864 as evidence of a disposition to deal fairly by the Free State, and that I am confident Her Majesty's Government particularly desire that I should act in a just and conciliatory spirit in all these matters.

I must hope that these sentiments will become generally known to the Government and people of the State, and that they will have their effect in persuading them to adopt a course which will, I think, be highly conducive to their own welfare and to that of South Africa in general.

Enclosure in No. 11.

Encl. in No. 11.

Sir, Thaba Bosigo, February 26, 1868.

I hasten to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's lettter of the 11th inst., arrived here last Sunday. What else can I say but to repeat what I have said in my last letter, namely, that I and my tribe are very grateful to Her Majesty and to your Excellency for the protection which is to be extended over us through our being received subjects of the Queen; I only wish that it were done already, and that this destructive war were over.

I am very thankful to hear that your Excellency has written a second time to the President of the Free State; but I am sorry to say that, as far as I can see, it appears to me that this time also Mr. Brand has already decided not to act upon your Excellency's suggestion. Probably the reason lays in that last Saturday (the 22nd inst.) the Burgher forces have been successful. They managed to ascend Keme Mountain in the dark, and by surprise, and before my people knew of it, the enemies had already captured a large quantity of cattle. I am happy to be able to say, however, that most of the strongholds in that mountain are still in our possession, and that I don't think the Boers will be able to dislodge us thence; and I can assure your Excellency that, thanks to the encouragements contained in your last letter, I shall do my utmost to keep as much of the country as possible. Only our ammunitions, as I have already mentioned in my last letter to the Civil Commissioner of Aliwal North, are few and bad. But why should I not confess plainly to your Excellency and say that the glad news acquainting us with the fact that Her Majesty had at last acceded to my request of being received with my people as British subjects have come just in the right season, at a time when, if it had not been for this fresh encouragement, we might have even now been fugitives without knowing where to go? May I beg that if it be at all possible, your Excellency might hasten your journey to Basutoland, or help us at once in any way which may bring a suspension of hostilities? How glad and thankful I should be! However, let come what may come, I have given myself, and people, and country, and everything, over to Her Majesty, and I trust that this prospect, which is alas only a prospect as yet according to your Excellency's last letter, may very very soon become a reality.

What grieves me more than any thing is the perseverence shown by the enemies to destroy the crops in the gardens. The question to us who have no money and very few cattle left, is, what shall we, being so many, eat next winter? If the enemies were eating only for their own use I would say nothing, but giving our green corn to their horses, and wantonly pulling out the plants, and destroying the gardens wholesale, that is what is so most discouraging and sad. May your Excellency have pity and hasten to come in order to preserve for our children and ourselves what remains of our gardens.

May I add that, contrary to what is published in the Free State papers, the country on the right bank of the Caledon, known as Molitsane's country and Platberg Mountain, is still occupied by numerous Basutos. It is the same for what is called the lower Lesuto, where many people with their Chiefs are still holding the country through their strongholds; for, although the Boers have succeeded in having from time to time some strongholds evacuated, the people return there as soon as the enemies have gone further.

I ought to add, so that your Excellency may know everything, that last week a party of burghers, who have come to reinforce the commandos, consisting of about 100 men, did get hold of eight Basuto women and did ravish them, so much so that some of them are not likely to recover from the violence done to them.

These are the matters with which I take the liberty to reply to your Excellency's last letter. Now I end by saying, oh! let your Excellency have pity upon us, and stop the work of destruction. I know that your Excellency possesses the means to stop the progress of the enemies, and to oblige them to return to their own country. Which nation in the whole world can dare to offer any resistance when Her Majesty or Her Majesty's High Commissioner has spoken?

Believe me, &c.

His Excellency Sir P. Wodehouse, K.C.B., Governor and High Commissioner. (Signed) MOSHOESHOE. (L.S.)

SIR, Thaba Bosiga, February 26, 1868.

I THANK you very much for having sent me the last letter of his Excellency dated the 11th inst. To you I can say that I desire very much that his Excellency could hasten his journey and come to my help very soon. The last successes of the Boers have given them courage, and in like proportion many of my people have become discouraged. I beg you will with your usual kindness forward my interests, which are now the interests of the English Government, and second the request contained in my reply to Sir P. Wodehouse's letter, that he would use the powers entrusted to him by Her Majesty, to oblige the Free State to consent not only to a suspension of hostilities, but rather to a standing peace.

Believe me, &c.

J. Burnet, Esq. C.C., Aliwal North. (Signed) MOSHOESHOE. (L.S.)

N.B.—May I beg that this letter to his Excellency may be forwarded to him by telegraph, as the last. Time is now so very precious! Might I ask also whether, whilst the war lasts, I might be allowed to send part of my cattle into the Colony in order to save as much as possible?

Aliwal North, March 2, 1868.

Mem.—These letters reached me last night by special express from Moshesh. I have telegraphed the bare substance of them through Graham's Town by to night's post.

(Signed) J. BURNET.

SIR, Government House, Cape Town, March 10, 1868.

As I have not up to this moment been favoured with any reply to the appeal which, on the 11th February last, I made to you for the suspension of hostilities between the Free State and the Basutos, and as I learn from other quarters that your commandos have of late been making vigorous efforts for the prosecution of the war, I am unwillingly forced to the conclusion that your Government has no intention of yielding to my representations, and that I ought now to review the past transactions between this Government and the belligerents, and to decide on the course which, under existing circumstances, I ought to follow.

Turning to the past I find that on the 27th April 1858, after the Free State had been exhausted by a harassing war, President Boshof wrote as follows to Sir G. Grey:—"Our difficulties seem to increase "every day. In the meantime the losses and sufferings of the majority of the people of this State may "be irretrievable unless some other (than the Transvaal Republic) powerful intercession may procure "us a favourable change, or put a stop to all the bloodshed and spoliation which has already taken "place. Anything which your Excellency may be able to do in this respect would be thankfully "acknowledged as a humane and Christian act."

On the 6th May following, Sir G. Grey intimated his readiness to meet the President's wishes, and applied for the consent of Moshesh, recommending at the same time temporary suspension of hostilities; and in the month of July, having succeeded with Moshesh, he proceeded to the spot.

The influence of Sir G. Grey was instrumental in obtaining for the Free State on that occasion terms greatly to its advantage; and before he quitted the country he personally inspected and pointed out that portion of the boundary about which alone, at that time, there existed any dispute.

No long interval, however, elapsed before it again became evident that the State was not able, or did not think fit, to make the arrangements necessary for securing its possessions, and by degrees many of the Border farmers, receiving no substantial support from the people of the interior, abandoned their farms to the Basutos, notwithstanding that others of greater firmness and tact remained in prosperity at their homes. In consequence, on the 5th February 1864, in announcing your assumption of the Presidency, you requested my mediation between the Free State and the Basutos in the following terms:—"If your Excellency would allow yourself to be induced to visit the spot, and in the presence "of myself and Moshesh to point out the boundary line between the Free State and Basutoland, from "beacon to beacon, harmony would be restored, and both parties would, I am sure, be fully satisfied "with, and entirely acquiesce in your Excellency's decision. I assured the Volksraad that your "Excellency's well-known kind disposition towards this State and the surrounding tribes inspired me "with the confident hope that your Excellency would not hesitate to lend your Excellency's powerful

"aid in this great and important cause. I know your Excellency's valuable time is fully occupied by "other important matters. I am fully sensible of the inconvenience and sacrifices with which a visit "to the ground in dispute will necessarily be attended, but these I feel assured do not weigh with your "Excellency where so much good may be effected, and such great and lasting benefits may be con- "ferred by your Excellency's gracious consent. . . . . I sincerely hope and trust that "your Excellency may be pleased to send a favourable reply, which I most earnestly implore."

In a week from the date of that letter I acceded to the solicitations so earnestly made, and, having obtained from Moshesh an undertaking to abide by my arbitration, I reached Aliwal North on the 16th March following. It then appeared that you had failed to obtain from the Volksraad power to accept unreservedly my award, to which Moshesh had at once agreed; and I declined to proceed with the arbitration, and acquainted you on the 17th March, that, before returning to Graham's Town, I should "take an opportunity of explaining personally to Moshesh the position of affairs, and impressing "upon him the necessity for abstaining from all acts calculated to give offence or cause injury to the "people of the Free State, pending the final settlement of this question"—which I did.

The necessary powers having been subsequently granted to you by the Volksraad, I again travelled in the latter part of the year to the Frontier, and, with yourself and other Commissioners, went along the disputed border from its extreme eastern end. I may here remark that the opportunities thus afforded me of observing the disposition towards each other of the people of the Free State and of the Basutos were quite sufficient to satisfy me there was little prospect of permanent peace, unless, in some form or other, British influence could be more immediately brought to bear upon their relations.

The result of this arbitration, like that of Sir George Grey's, was most favourable to the Free State, and I felt myself fully entitled, in consideration of all that had past, to recommend your adoption of very moderate measures in claiming the execution of my award. Opinions differ as to the degree of deference paid to that recommendation, but it is certain that the consequence of the steps then taken by the Free State has been this wretched and prolonged war, the evils of which I have already alluded to, and of which I have so long been a reluctant spectator.

By the gracious act of Her Majesty I have at length been enabled to hold out to you the best guarantee within our reach of immunity for the future from the disorders and miseries of the past; and I have done so with the strongest assurances of good will.

It is, therefore, most painful for me to find the Free State, disregarding its previous relations with Her Majesty, putting out of sight the good offices of my predecessor and myself and our personal efforts for its welfare, overlooking (which I am not at liberty to overlook) the moderation with which Moshesh, at the request of this Government, consented to waive his superiority over the State in the hour of its weakness—to find the State, thus oblivious of all that is past, and bent on the prosecution of measures, which, if successful, must inevitably drive the population of Basutoland, in a state of beggary and destitution, into the Cape Colony on the one side, and to the borders of Natal on the other. I cannot regard such a policy, if persevered in, as anything less than an indication of an unfriendly feeling towards the British Government, quite sufficient to absolve me from all observance of the terms of the Convention of the 23rd February 1854.

When I first became aware of the apparent disregard of my overtures, I directed that no ammunition should be permitted to be removed from our ports to the Free State without my authority. I have not since heard of any application; and conclude that none has been made. And I have now to intimate that I will peremptorily prohibit all issues, and will take such further steps as I may consider conducive to the good government of the country. At the same time I make this announcement with the utmost regret.

I fear that if I were to delay it, on the eve of the opening of the Session of the Volksraad, I might subject myself to a charge of having deceived you. And I repeat the assurance of my readiness and my desire to enter into negotiations with your Government with a view to the establishment of a friendly understanding on all points at issue.

I have, &c.

His Honour the President of the Orange Free State. (Signed) P. E. WODEHOUSE.

GREAT CHIEF, Government House, Cape Town, March 14, 1868.

I HAVE now the pleasure of forwarding to you the Proclamation by which I have announced that, in obedience to the commands of Her Majesty the Queen, you have, together with your Tribe, become the subjects of Her Majesty.

I have taken this step in compliance with the pressing entreaties contained in your letter of the 26th February, and in perfect reliance that I shall find you and your people fully prepared to assent to all arrangements that may be required for the future government of the country.

You will also be glad to learn that Sir Walter Currie, whom I have appointed temporarily to be my agent in Basuto land, has been instructed to move at once into your territory with a strong body of the armed Frontier Police, for the purpose of protecting you and your people from further injuries; and I have to desire that you will afford him all possible support and assistance in the discharge of his duty.
